I was so impressed by the argument that families living in poverty might be saved from distress, at least, by the labor of little children that I asked the good people who appeared before the Committee on Education and Labor how stood that case in the District of Columbia, and those who were familiar with the work of the Board of Charities in this District, being before our committee, upon their authority and responsibility in connection with the associated charities of Washington, said that that association had investigated in this District every case in which a child could properly be said to be working for the support of anybody, and there publicly, before our committee, they undertook that that association would relieve all the distress occasioned by the discharge from the army of workers of these little children of the District of Columbia.

I suggest to those who are interested in this question, but are not interested particularly in a running discussion such as we have had here to-day, to take the hearings that were printed by the Committee on Education and Labor and examine that mass of testimony. I doubt very much whether any Senator, after fully investigating this matter, will refuse his support to the effort that this bill makes to put an end to conditions in this District which would be looked upon anywhere in the United States as discreditable and in this fortunate and happy community are little short of disgraceful.

Mr. CULLOM. I desire to ask the Senator who has charge of the pending bill whether he will not yield to me to make a motion to proceed to the consideration of executive business?

Mr. DOLLIVER. I will.

Mr. CULLOM. I want to say to the Senator that there are quite a number of Senators who desire to speak in regard to the question of child labor, and I do not see much prospect of being able to get this bill through this afternoon. I am myself for the bill, but I think I will insist upon making the motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. CULLOM. I do.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I desire to ask unanimous consent that the bill may be made the unfinished business for 2 o'clock to-morrow.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is unfinished business which, by order of the Senate, will come up at 2 o'clock to-morrow.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LATE SENATOR BATE.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. CULLOM. I do.

Mr. CARMACK. I simply wish to given notice that on Thursday, January 17, I shall ask the Senate to consider resolutions of respect to my late colleague, Senator Bate, of Tennessee.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CULLOM. I renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, December 7, was read and approved.

COMMITTEE APPOINTMENT.

The SPEAKER appointed Representative BRADLEY of New York, a member of the Committee on Military Affairs.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, Mr. DRESSER was given leave of absence indefinitely, on account of illness.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, under the rules this is District day. I understand that there is an appropriation bill before the House which it especially desires to act upon, and for that reason I ask unanimous consent that it may be in order to call up business reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia next Monday instead of to-day.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I understand next Monday will be suspension day. I do not think that a special order ought to be made for that day.

Mr. BABCOCK. Then, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest next Tuesday.

Mr. MUDD. Mr. Speaker, it is very important that I should be present on District day, and I shall be obliged to be absent on Tuesday. I shall therefore object.

Mr. BABCOCK. Then, Mr. Speaker, I will change my request and ask that it be in order to call up business reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia on the day following the conclusion of the appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

SENATE BILL AND RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title and the following resolution were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

Senate concurrent resolution 25:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the President by requested to return to the Senate the bill (S. 3454) entitled "An act granting an increase of pension to William Wilson"— to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

An act (S. 6261) to establish a fund for public works in the Territory of Hawaii, and for other purposes—to the Committee on the Territories.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

Sundry messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. LATTA, one of his secretaries.

REPRINT OF A BILL.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the reprint of the bill (H. R. 9754) to provide for the classification of the salaries of clerks employed in post-offices of the first and second classes.

The request was agreed to.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 21574) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, and for other purposes, and pending that I desire to ask the other side of the House if we can agree upon any time for general debate?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I suggest to my colleague on the committee that debate can run on a while until we can ascertain later in the day how much time we want on either side.

Mr. BINGHAM. Could we not agree on two days for general debate?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I am inclined to think that we do not want as much as two days.

Mr. BINGHAM. Very well; then at present we will allow the debate to run without limit.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM] in charge of the bill will necessarily be absent to-morrow, and if general debate should close before that time, it ought to be understood that the bill should not be taken up under the five-minute rule Wednesday.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I will agree to that, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that if general debate should close before the adjournment on Tuesday, the bill shall not be called for reading under the five-minute rule until Wednesday. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I do not think that the question of division of time has been agreed upon. I do not know whether the gentleman from Pennsylvania and the gentleman from Georgia desire to make any agreement about it.

Mr. BINGHAM. I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the time for general debate be equally divided between the two sides of the House, the time to be controlled on the other side by the gentleman from Georgia and on this side by myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the time for general debate be equally divided, the time to be controlled by the gentleman from Georgia and the gentleman from Pennsylvania, or such Members as they may designate in their absence. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The motion of Mr. BINGHAM was then agreed to; accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the legislative, executive, and judicial apropriation bill, with Mr. HEPBURN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of the consideration of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill. The Clerk will read the bill.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, my remarks in presenting this bill for the consideration of your committee will be most limited so far as the details of the bill are concerned. The current law, which this House made at its first session, was so fully and ably discussed that this body—the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union—is perhaps as familiar with it as any explanation I could make, and I shall advert to it only in this respect, that the current law was presented to the House on March 9 and to the Committee of the Whole House on March 13, and passed the House on March 24. If my recollection of the reading be correct, there was but one important change in the bill as presented by the committee. The bill, therefore, as it came from the committee—that is, the complete examination covering some seven hundred and fifty-odd pages of testimony, consuming a number of days in the hearing of that testimony—was so thorough and complete that upon the presentation of the details the House accepted the action of your committee. That law has operated during this fiscal year and has resulted in much good administration in the legislative, the executive, and the judicial departments of the Government.

This bill, as has been common for some ten years past, comes from your committee after having assembled—the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations—on the 26th day of November last. Beginning with that date and continuing from day to day the deliberations of the committee, they will be found to occupy some 300 pages of printed testimony, and they are respectfully submitted to the House in detail. Your Book of Estimates was critically gone through, and I think a wise conclusion reached. The committee, sitting, as I have stated, before the usual assembling of the House, followed a practice which has been common for the past ten years and more. Therefore there is nothing unusual in presenting this legislation to the House at this early date. The rulings of the Chair with reference to the many points of order, together with the report from the Committee on Rules which passed the House by a vote of 169 yeas to 109 nays, had been adopted and followed, and the bill passed upon under those rulings in their qualifications may present the same propositions in this House. This bill is built upon the same lines as the bill that you acted upon in the first session. It is open to the same character of points of order, and I am free to say that, so far as I am concerned, the ruling of the Chair was clear, and may be quoted in this debate at some period during the details of the bill. There will be no time lost in taking exception to the ruling, because it is a clear ruling, so far as this bill is concerned. We have endeavored in presenting the legislation that is before you to make the bill economic in relation to the current-year appropriations, as well as careful with reference to the estimates submitted by the several Departments of the Government.

The estimates on which the bill is based will be found on pages 9–95 and 140–151 of the Book of Estimates for 1908, and aggregate $31,215,525.80, of which amount there is recommended in the bill $30,529,853.80, a reduction of $685,652 under said estimates. Your committee are of the opinion that in submitting that conclusion we have been neither neglectful of the requirements of the several Departments and their needs, nor have we been forgetful of the merits of some limited number of the subordinate force who are recommended for increase in salary. The appropriations for the same purposes for the current fiscal year, including $448,066 carried in the sundry civil, deficiency, and other acts, aggregate $30,168,485.30, being $361,368.50 less than is recommended in the accompanying bill for the service of the fiscal year 1908. The whole number of salaries specifically provided for in the bill is 14,727, or 202 less than the number estimated for and 29 more than the number provided for in the law for the current year.

I shall not at this time select from the report such parts of the proposed changes as I think may commend themselves perhaps to the criticism or approval of the committee, but at a later stage, when we reach the paragraphs of the bill, I may do so.

The Government Printing Office, acting under the authority of the current law, has submitted to us in detail such force as can hereafter be placed in this bill at a fixed compensation. The Library of Congress we have left almost as it is in the current law, and in that connection at this time permit me to suggest that the great part of this bill is current law. As to the Department of State, I shall advert to it in my remarks by quoting some of the statements of the Secretary. We have been generous to that Department in this bill, as has been the current law. In the Treasury Department, with its upward of 3,000 subordinates, there are a limited number of changes. The same may be said of the War Department. There is a limited changes in respect to the office of public buildings and grounds, and there are some changes in the matter of the State, War, and Navy building, where also there has been a reduction of force—a change in the heating apparatus of the building. The Navy Department is most limited in the changes we have made, as is also the Department of the Interior, one of the great Departments of the Government. I may say the same of the Post-Office Department, with its great growth, and of the Department of Justice, as well as the Department of Commerce and Labor, and also the Court of Claims.

I will place in my remarks for the information of the House and its convenience a full report that goes into detail of the several paragraphs of increases or changes in the bill. Gentlemen will find on page 23 of the bill now before the House the first limitation, or submission, as it may be called, of new law:

Hereafter in printing documents authorized by law or ordered by Congress or either branch thereof the Government Printing Office shall follow the rules of orthography established by Webster's or other generally accepted dictionaries of the English language.

The Congress has been now in session a week, and the question of simplified spelling has been one of general discussion. I believe the list embraces 300 words. It is not my purpose to enter into a debate which will undoubtedly be entered into by gentlemen of the House, but the matter came before your subcommittee on Appropriations naturally. The Book of Estimates contained the simplified spelling. Throughout all the items submitted in the book were appropriations recommended in that way. The print coming from the Public Printer came to us with the simplified spelling. In that way it came to our attention. The matter was discussed in committee. The Public Printer was called, together with his proof reader and his chief of printing. We heard them, and I shall make as part of my remarks all of the testimony before the subcommittee that pertains to simplified spelling. The bill before you, printed by order of the House and for its use, is printed in the old form or style of orthography. There has been current a rumor in newspapers that the Supreme Court by some dicta or utterance has declared that these and other matters should be printed in the old form. I can state to the House there has been no such official declaration. It would seem that the Solicitor-General of the United States recently, in submitting to the court a brief, had his attention called to it by the Chief Justice, who stated that in quoting to the court any authority the use of simplified spelling was not a literal quotation. That, I believe, is all the Supreme Court has uttered upon the subject of simplified or old-style spelling. The printing of the Supreme Court continues to be done according to the old style of spelling, the court having given no instructions to use the simplified form. I think that will cover all that I desire to say at this time with reference to simplified spelling.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. BINGHAM. Yes.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I wondered what gave this matter such gravity and importance as to justify Congress to enact a law fixing the style of orthography. Is there any economy or other reason——

Mr. BINGHAM. I believe if the gentleman will hold his inquiry in abeyance until he reads what I may have to say in tomorrow's RECORD he will get the whole discussion in the committee with the Public Printer, together with his proof reader and chief of printing, which exhibits exactly, as near as we can reach, what the addition of expense will be. As to complications, perhaps we would not have them in the House in the matter of spelling, as they would in quotations before the Supreme Court, but I have simply called attention to the proposed action in order that, as debate will perhaps continue for several days, the whole subject might be gone into, illuminated, if it is possible, by the report we have to submit from the Public Printer. There is nothing, I may say further, beyond a general discussion in print, as well as conversations of men, especially here, that one print directed by the Congress for the printing of a bill would be in one form and the print submitted by the Treasury Department in the estimates in another form. We want, so far as the legislative branch of the Government is concerned, that there should be a consistency in our printing.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Well, unless there be something above the mere establishment of uniformity I do not think Congress ought to enact any legislation on the question at all, because the standard of spelling is virtually of usage, and spelling is improving all the time. There is a gradual evolution in spelling words in the English language. I think there ought to be. I think I may be satisfied when I read the gentleman's speech.

Mr. BINGHAM. There is one matter which will come up very early when you reach the bill, and it might be well to refer to it at this time.

On page 21 of the printed bill, and I advert to it early in order that it may form part of the early debate, because it comes very early in the consideration of the bill, is the following paragraph:

For clerk hire, Members and Delegates: To pay each Member and Delegate for clerk hire necessarily employed by him in the discharge of his official and representative duties, $1,500 per annum, in monthly installments, $594,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary; and Representatives and Delegates elect to Congress whose credentials in due form of law have been duly filed with the Clerk of the House of Representatives, in accordance with the provisions of section 31 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, shall be entitled to payment under this appropriation.

For the information of the House I have been requested to repeat the amount, namely, $1,500, in lieu of the present law of $1,200. I would submit that in the Senate there is one committee——

Mr. KEIFER rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM] yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER]?

Mr. BINGHAM. Certainly.

Mr. KEIFER. Before leaving that point I want to ask the gentleman to state to the House what distinction there is in the matter of drawing the salary of a clerk under the old law and under the proposed law?

Mr. BINGHAM. Under the old law it is limited to $100 per month, with a certification that the amount has been expended during that month. This puts the sum total of $1,500 unqualifiedly under the control of the Member, with only this qualification, that the clerk has necessarily been employed by him in the discharge of his official and representative duties.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, further——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. BINGHAM. Certainly.

Mr. KEIFER. Then we know, do we not, that there is no certificate required to be made at all by the Member as a condition of his drawing the $1,500?

Mr. BINGHAM. I understand that the $1,500 is in his absolute control, to be expended during the year, without regard to the month.

Mr. KEIFER. Does it not look like it is adding $1,500 to the salary of each Member?

Mr. BINGHAM. I can not answer the question. The House can do that.

Mr. McCALL. Would it not be necessary to certify that the clerk was necessarily employed by him in the discharge of his duties?

Mr. BINGHAM. Without a doubt.

Mr. KEIFER. I say there is no provision for a certificate to be required at all. It does put some little moral obligation upon the Member that he necessarily expend it, but that does not hurt anything.

Mr. McCALL. It seems to me there should be a certificate to comply with the law.

Mr. KEIFER. None whatever is provided for.

Mr. BINGHAM. I have made the statement just as the law reads to the House. When it comes up we can make such qualifications as we desire.

For the information of the House I will state that in the Senate there is one committee having a clerk at $3,000; one committee having a clerk at $2,500; forty committees having clerks at $2,220; two committees having clerks at $2,100; twenty-one committees having clerks at $1,800; making sixty-five committees of the Senate having annual clerks. The chairmen of these committees have no other allowance for clerk hire. Twenty-five Senators who are not chairmen of committees are entitled to one clerk each, at $1,800. These Senators have no other allowances for clerk hire. In the House there are two clerks of committees receiving $3,000 each; thirty-two committees having clerks at $2,000 each; ten committees having clerks at $6 per day each during the session. All of the 392 Members and Delegates are entitled to an allowance at the rate of $1,200 each per annum for clerk hire during the recess of Congress, and all of the Members and Delegates except those who are chairman of a committee having clerks at $6 per day are entitled to the allowance of $1,200 per annum for clerk hire all the year round. The chairmen of committees having clerks at $6 per day during the session receive no other allowance for clerk hire during the session.

I have no other general statement to make at this time. As debate progresses and criticism of the bill runs I may feel it necessary, as other members of the committee may, to defend the provisions of the bill.

I emphasize the statement that this bill in its build-up is consistent with the current law. The Book of Estimates for next year has been investigated by the same subcommittee that considered the estimates for the current fiscal year, and has been acted upon by the same general committee. I hope and believe that this House can find it in its power, in view of the presentation of this bill in its many qualifications, that there can be consummated after the reading of the bill the passage of the same, as has heretofore occurred, in one day, several times in two days.

The following is from the hearings before the Appropriations Committee:

SIMPLIFIED SPELLING.

Mr. LITTAUER. We find in the next paragraph the word "catalog," and below the word "cataloguer," and we would like to know why you have changed the orthography of the documents that you have sent here?

Mr. BINGHAM. Is there any statute that gives the President authority in any way to change the spelling—have you looked into that?

Mr. STILLINGS. No, sir; I have not.

Mr. BINGHAM. Then, if a Department should want to change the spelling from what is known as the normal or usual spelling, you would accept the order?

Mr. STILLINGS. Under the order of the President the Departments were ordered to have spelling done that way, and would naturally have to obey the order.

Mr. BINGHAM. There is nothing in the statute that authorizes him to give that order, either for or against that proposition?

Mr. STILLINGS. I do not know as to that.

Mr. BINGHAM. Why did you, then, print these bills under that special spelling?

Mr. STILLINGS. I do not know why it should have been done in this case.

Mr. TAWNEY. Is not the Book of Estimates printed in the same manner?

Mr. STILLINGS. The Book of Estimates emanates from the Treasury Department and is printed at the Treasury branch. An effort has been made to carry out the President's order in reference to simplified spelling.

Mr. TAWNEY. The Book of Estimates is printed at the Treasury branch?

Mr. STILLINGS. Yes, sir.

Mr. TAWNEY. This bill is printed in your office?

Mr. STILLINGS. Yes, sir.

Mr. TAWNEY. In printing this bill, then, your employees must have followed the spelling contained in the Book of Estimates?

Mr. STILLINGS. Undoubtedly.

Mr. TAWNEY. And that is how it came about?

Mr. STILLINGS. Yes, sir; if this was copied from a departmental document which was prepared on the simplified spelling lines.

Mr. TAWNEY. What was the President's order, and have you a copy of it?

Mr. STILLINGS. I have not a copy here.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will you kindly furnish a copy of the order and have it appear in connection with your testimony?

Mr. STILLINGS. Yes, sir.

THE WHITE HOUSE, WASHINGTON,
Oyster Bay, N. Y., August 27, 1906.

MY DEAR MR. STILLINGS: I inclose herewith copies of certain circulars of the Simplified Spelling Board, which can be obtained free from the board at No. 1 Madison avenue, New York City. Please hereafter direct that in all Government publications of the Executive Departments the 300 words enumerated in circular No. 5 shall be spelled as therein set forth. If anyone asks the reason for the action, refer him to circulars 3, 4, and 6, as issued by the Simplified Spelling Board. Most of the criticism of the proposed step is evidently made in entire ignorance of what the step is, no less than in entire ignorance of the very moderate and common-sense views as to the purposes to be achieved, which views are so excellently set forth in the circulars to which I have referred. There is not the slightest intention to do anything revolutionary or initiate any far-reaching policy. The purpose simply is for the Government, instead of lagging behind popular sentiment, to advance abreast of it and at the same time abreast of the views of the ablest and most practical educators of our time, as well as of the most profound scholars—men of the stamp of Professor Lounsbury and Professor Skeat.

If the slight changes in the spelling of the 300 words proposed wholly or partially meet popular approval, then the changes will become permanent without any reference to what public officials or individual private citizens may feel; if they do not ultimately meet with popular approval they will be dropt, and that is all there is about it. They represent nothing in the world but a very slight extension of the unconscious movement which has made agricultural implement makers and farmers write "plow" instead of "plough;" which has made most Americans write "honor" without the somewhat absurd, superfluous "u;" and which is even now making people write "program" without the "me"—just as all people who speak English now write "bat," "set," "dim," "sum," and "fish," instead of the Elizabethan "batte," "sette," "dimme," "summe," and "fysshe;" which makes us write "public," "almanac," "era," "fantasy," and "wagon," instead of the "publick," "almanack," "aera," "phantasy," and "waggon" of our great-grandfathers. It is not an attack on the language of Shakespeare and Milton, because it is in some instances a going back to the forms they used, and in others merely the extension of changes which, as regards other words, have taken place since their time. It is not an attempt to do anything far-reaching or sudden or violent; or indeed anything very great at all. It is merely an attempt to cast what slight weight can properly be cast on the side of the popular forces which are endeavoring to make our spelling a little less foolish and fantastic.

Sincerely, yours,

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

Hon. CHARLES A. STILLINGS,
Public Printer, Washington.

Mr. TAWNEY. Was there any reference in the order to the report of a board on simplified spelling?

Mr. STILLINGS. I was referred to the report of a board on simplified spelling.

Mr. BINGHAM. How many words does the new spelling book contain?

Mr. STILLINGS. Three hundred.

Mr. TAWNEY. Three hundred words the spelling of which was changed by the report of this board?

Mr. STILLINGS. No, sir; many of the 300 words in this were already in preferred use.

Mr. TAWNEY. In looking over the names of the men constituting this board I notice Mr. Isaac K. Funk, editor and publisher of the Standard Dictionary. In the event that Congress adopted the simplified spelling by having Congressional documents and laws printed in accordance with the report of this board, would it be necessary to get out a new dictionary?

Mr. STILLINGS. I think it would ultimately; yes, sir.

Mr. TAWNEY. I notice, also, the names of Mr. Charles P. G. Scott, etymological editor of the Century Dictionary; Mr. E. O. Vaile, of Chicago. Do you know what business he is engaged in?

Mr. STILLINGS. No, sir.

Mr. TAWNEY. I also notice the names of Mr. Benjamin E. Smith, editor of the Century Dictionary, New York, and Henry Holt, a publisher of New York. Is that a school-book publishing house?

Mr. STILLINGS. I understand it to be.

Mr. TAWNEY. The adoption by Congress of this form of spelling would ultimately, and in the very near future, no doubt, necessitate the publication of a new dictionary and new school books and their purchase by the citizens of the United States?

Mr. STILLINGS. That would probably be the result.

Mr. LITTAUER. It was a mistake, acording to your opinion, to print this bill in this manner?

Mr. STILLINGS. Certainly; Congressional printing was not contemplated in the President's order.

Mr. BINGHAM. As matters now stand with reference to spelling, suppose Congress directs the publication or the issuance of a thousand copies of a report, a publication from one of the Departments, what spelling would you adopt?

Mr. STILLINGS. We should follow the usual style.
Mr. BINGHAM. So that the general publications of the Government without any act of Congress or any movement on the part of the Executive would be printed in the old spelling?
Mr. STILLINGS. Where the order comes from Congress we have no authority to change the spelling.
Mr. LITTAUER. Let us get at the effect of this order on your work. In the first place, we will say that a Department sends you copy and it is in the new spelling. You then simply set up the type in accordance with that order, do you not?
Mr. STILLINGS. Yes, sir.
Mr. LITTAUER. If it were a document that would require submission to Congress and Congress should declare that all documents coming to Congress should be in the usual spelling, would it require the resetting of the type?
Mr. STILLINGS. It would require the correcting of that portion of the standing type or plate wherein the changes had to be made.
Mr. LITTAUER. On each page or on every two or three pages?
Mr. STILLINGS. Possibly once every two pages.
Mr. LITTAUER. And if it was set up on a linotype machine?
Mr. STILLINGS. We would have to cast a new slug.
Mr. TAWNEY. What, in your judgment, approximately, would be the additional expense of those changes?
Mr. STILLINGS. That is something I do not know, because we have never had an occasion to try it out. Here is the point that must be thought out: The bulk of our documents are printed from plates.
Mr. LITTAUER. Could the plates be changed?
Mr. STILLINGS. Yes, sir; if you are going to change from the simplified to the usual spelling, you would make the changes on the plate in most cases. How much of it would be done is very difficult to estimate. The foreman of our proof division, from his experience in handling copy, seems to feel that it would not be so radical a change as appears on the surface. Of course you can see that if a document comes to you with the word "through" spelled without the "ough," we might possibly be able to insert the "ough" by respacing the line so as to get in the extra letters. If we could not, we would have to run over each line in that paragraph, or enough lines to finally come out even with good justification.
Mr. LITTAUER. If it was on a plate you would have to destroy the plate and make a new one?
Mr. STILLINGS. No, sir; we could set the paragraph up, electrotype it, and patch it onto the original plate.
Mr. LITTAUER. You would not be able to tell what the expense would be in the case of an ordinary pamphlet of 30 or 35 pages?
Mr. STILLINGS. It is very difficult to estimate.
Mr. BURLESON. Where are the Supreme Court reports printed?
Mr. STILLINGS. Under contract by a commercial printing house. We do a large amount of work for the Supreme Court; the cases, among other items.
Mr. BURLESON. Do you propose to make the change there?
Mr. STILLINGS. They have objected. Recently the question of simplified spelling came up.
Mr. LITTAUER. Is it not going to lead to a great deal of confusion?
Mr. STILLINGS. Yes, sir.
Mr. BURLESON. The Supreme Court have refused to follow the simplified mode of spelling?
Mr. STILLINGS. Yes, sir.
Mr. BURLESON. And necessarily we are going to have the executive branch of the Government, as to the President's message, spelling one way and another department of the Government spelling another way?
Mr. STILLINGS. That is right.
Mr. BINGHAM. Up to this date have you issued any Government publication using the new spelling?
Mr. STILLINGS. There are quite a number of publications that have been issued in the simplified spelling. Here is another point that came up. In the case of a serial which was started last January—and the question came up immediately, Shall we use simplified spelling for the balance of the year or not? Instructions came from the President that wherever the work had been started in the usual spelling it should be continued. The President has been very broad-gauged in the matter of simplified spelling, stating that there was no desire to force this proposition and that if it was not a popular move it would be dropped.
Mr. LITTAUER. Have you had any other protests except from the Supreme Court?
Mr. STILLINGS. We have had a protest from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue in connection with the word "gauger;" from the Navy Department also; from the Census Bureau and the Department of Commerce and Labor in connection with work in serial form. We have had a query regarding it from the Committee on the Revision of the Laws.
Mr. LITTAUER. What has been the practice in the Government Printing Office; spelling has been to a certain extent changed?
Mr. STILLINGS. Yes, sir.
Mr. LITTAUER. What recognition of the progression in spelling has the Public Printer taken?
Mr. STILLINGS. We have been largely guided, in fact almost entirely governed, by the action of the publishers of Webster's Dictionary.
Mr. BINGHAM. Is there any difference between the Webster and Worcester Dictionary?
Mr. STILLINGS. I know very little about the Worcester Dictionary; I have not examined it recently.
Mr. ROBINSON, foreman of proof division, Government Printing Office, was questioned as follows:
Mr. LITTAUER. We would like to have you tell us the extra work in the various processes that have to be gone through from one spelling to the other, changing the plates, and so on, and the probable cost that will be entailed by the use of simplified spelling in some publications and not in others.
Mr. ROBINSON. You mean the change from one to the other?
Mr. TAWNEY. An executive document comes to the Public Printer to be printed in the simplified form and is also sent to Congress and becomes an executive document and is printed by Congress in the old form.
Mr. ROBINSON. I think the labor of the proof reader and the compositor correcting the work from the new to the old would probably be the principal part of the cost.
Mr. BURLESON. Is there any other difficulty that is involved?
Mr. ROBINSON. I think there is no other difficulty; it is simply a matter of reading the proof and of catching the words, and sending it to the compositor, and the compositor would correct the type.
Mr. LITTAUER. Correcting the type, would not that be an expense?
Mr. ROBINSON. Somewhat, but not very high.
Mr. LITTAUER. How much would it cost if there were ten changes on a page?
Mr. ROBINSON. I estimate that there is not an average of two words to the page ordinarily, and taking the average of those words, the words that require different spaces, I should think a man should correct those pages at the rate of three to five minutes to a page. He is paid 50 cents an hour for that work. He ought to correct twenty pages in an hour.
Mr. LITTAUER. What would be the total expense in a day's work done at the Office?
Mr. ROBINSON. The proof would not necessarily have to be read very carefully, because you are only looking for those particular words.
Mr. TAWNEY. That is 160 pages at a cost of 50 cents an hour?
Mr. ROBINSON. That is for the compositor. The proof reading would cost 50 per cent more. He does not have to read it closely because he is only looking for those words. He only looks for the words that are to be changed from one spelling to another. It would be an experiment, I can not tell exactly, but I think he ought to read 100 pages a day—he might read 150 pages a day.
Mr. TAWNEY. And he gets how much an hour?
Mr. ROBINSON. Fifty-eight and a half cents an hour.
Mr. TAWNEY. And works eight hours a day?
Mr. ROBINSON. Yes, sir; the cost would not be over 4 cents a page. I suppose the cost would be from 3 to 4 cents a page.
Mr. BURLESON. When a proof reader has a certain document that he is reading, if it is set up in the simplified method of spelling he reads it a certain way, and if the same proof reader has another document following that in the old style of spelling he has a difficult task of reading one document one way and immediately thereafter reading another document another way. It is a little wearing on his intellectual faculties?
Mr. ROBINSON. There is no doubt about that. I have here a couple of specimens [exhibiting.] There is the new spelling and there is the old spelling. The editor marks it, as you see, and when the proof reader gets that he knows at once what to do with that galley, if he is at all familiar with the list of words.
Mr. BURLESON. He is required to commit those words to memory?
Mr. ROBINSON. Yes, sir.
Mr. BURLESON. And he must be familiar with the entire dictionary?
Mr. ROBINSON. Yes, sir.
Mr. YOUNG, foreman of printing, Government Printing Office, was questioned as follows:
Mr. LITTAUER. When we come to the plates would there be any greater expense?
Mr. YOUNG. I do not think that would amount to any more.
Mr. LITTAUER. Than the correction of the type?
Mr. YOUNG. No, sir.
Mr. LITTAUER. How much do you think it would cost to make two changes on a page?
Mr. YOUNG. It would probably take five minutes.
Mr. LITTAUER. You would have to handle every plate?
Mr. YOUNG. No; just as I hold this book you would go down to the page that you want and you would take the plate out and correct it and put it back.
Mr. LITTAUER. One man would have to go over the plates and give the correct page plate to another man?
Mr. YOUNG. Not necessarily. He would have to go down to the vault and get it; the plates are not kept upstairs.
Mr. LITTAUER. Can these plates be readily changed from one form of spelling to another?
Mr. YOUNG. They can be changed, but a plate correction is always a bad thing. I do not think a plate correction should ever be made if it can be avoided.
Mr. LITTAUER. The proof reading would be more expensive than the changing of the plate?
Mr. YOUNG. Yes, sir.
Mr. BURLESON. You spoke about these plates, that is, with the 300 words now adopted?
Mr. YOUNG. Yes, sir.
Mr. BURLESON. Now, suppose they adopt the next batch, say, 1,200 words?
Mr. YOUNG. Then it would be out of the question.
Mr. BURLESON. It would increase the number of changes on each page?
Mr. YOUNG. Yes, sir.
Mr. TAWNEY. I notice in the report of the Comptroller of the Treasury the spelling is "Controller."
Mr. YOUNG. He sanctioned that.
Mr. TAWNEY. The Comptroller of the Currency refused to accept the form of spelling for his office?
Mr. YOUNG. Yes, sir; he stands on the ground that the statute calls him Comptroller instead of Controller.
Mr. TAWNEY. The statute spells the title of the office of the Comptroller of the Treasury the same as the Comptroller of the Currency?
Mr. YOUNG. Yes, sir; the Comptroller of the Treasury does not take the same view of it that the other man does.
Mr. TAWNEY. The head of every bureau could have his official designation spelled according to his own idea?
Mr. ROBINSON. It is only a matter of opinion. The Comptroller of the Treasury says he will accept either spelling. He says Controller is right, but if we print it Comptroller it is all right—he will accept it. The Comptroller of the Currency will not have it so.
Mr, TAWNEY. If we have this dual form for the legislative and executive departments of the Government the proof reading is virtually duplicated on all work that first goes to the Printing Office and then is authorized to be reprinted or republished by Congress?
Mr. YOUNG. Yes, sir; anything that emanates from a Department.
Mr. TAWNEY. That is why proof reading is the principal expense in the form of the spelling unless it is made uniform in all the several departments of the Government?
Mr. YOUNG. Yes, sir.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, I regret that, as a member of the subcommittee making up this bill, we did not have that length of time to consider the bill that we had last session. We spent several days upon it, looking into the details of the bill.

The usual objections in the Committee of the Whole to increase in salaries, I think, Mr. Chairman, will not prevail at this time, if Members will remember that in the estimates there were 202 increases called for and the committee has given only 29.

I am aware of the fact that those who are left out will complain and wonder why we put in the 29 increases. It appeared to the Appropriation Committee the right thing to do—the proper thing to do at this time—to increase these 29 salaries. The increases are all set out in the report, and I hope Members will not require me to go over them in detail. Each increase is separately set out in the report. Some of them were, perhaps, more deserving than others. I am informed that the President will send a special message to this House and Senate in a day or two asking an increase all along the line of 20 per cent. This rumor seems to be well founded. I am aware of the fact that a majority of the Keep Commission has recommended an increase all along the line. Of course, it will be left to the wisdom of this House to determine whether we can afford to do that or not. We must take into consideration as a matter of course, the revenues on hand or estimated to be available when we come to disburse the money. That proposition Members will each have to consider for themselves, and will come up later on its merits.

I desire to say just here, and I think every Member upon the floor will bear me out, that the cost of living is getting outrageously high in Washington City. Whether it is simply a rise in the cost of necessities of living—clothes, food, rent, fuel, heat, and light, and of other articles of necessary consumption—or whether it is in part owing to extravagance, I will not undertake to say. The fact exists all the same.

There is one matter left out of this bill, Mr. Chairman, that I want to bring to the attention of southern Members especially. I also want to appeal to all Members to consider fairly and give cotton producers and spinners a square deal. In our last appropriation bill we had this clause:

For compensation at not more than $10 per day and actual necessary traveling expenses to special agents to investigate trade conditions abroad, with the view of promoting the foreign commerce of the United States, $50,000, not more than $20,000 of which shall be used in the investigation of markets for cotton products.

I shall add "and cotton-seed products."

And the result of such investigation shall be reported to Congress. I shall at the proper time move to reinstate the clause.

I am aware of the fact, Mr. Chairman, that our eastern and western friends, that raise no cotton, will say, "Why put in this bill a particular product, as they are interested in other products." Twenty thousand dollars of this amount—$50,000—is specially appropriated for those things. A Senator at the other end of the Capitol amended and put in $20,000 for cotton products. You must remember, gentlemen, that while the people of the South raise the cotton, they spin a very small amount of it. That is done by the East and the Middle States; so you are just as much interested as we of the South are. When you remember that out of all the cotton fabrics exported into the world, England made the great bulk of them; four hundred and more millions furnished by her to the other markets of the world, and this country only fifty-seven millions. That is the trouble we are endeavoring to get at. I ask, why do not China and Japan and Russia and the other divisions and subdivisions of the earth buy from us? It is simply because England has pushed her trade and made it apparent to the world that she has the market and the control of this crop and its products.

But if the United States Government will continue this $50,000 appropriation and this part of it set apart to cotton and its fabrics, the world will soon get acquainted with the fact that we can supply these same goods just as cheaply and of just as good quality, and we will get, perhaps, our share of the commerce of the world on this line. It was this object at first, and it is the object now, if we can reinsert it in the bill.

Again, why should cotton be specified? For the reason that during the last five years, three years out of five, the exportations of cotton have paid the balance against this Government and saved us from a financial panic.

Mr. LITTAUER. The gentleman means raw cotton, does he not?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I am speaking about raw cotton now. Any commodity produced in this country that will save us from financial panics ought to have some attention and some legislation, and if we can broaden our markets for raw cotton and its products, it is of the utmost importance that we should do it.

There is also $30,000 in the amendment to broaden our market for other manufactures. I have no objection to implements and boots and shoes being added, if they were not already cared for and already covered in that $30,000.

Mr. CANDLER. What is the amount of the appropriation?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. The amount of the appropriation is $50,000, $30,000 for outside products and $20,000 for cotton.

Mr. LEVER. Is cotton seed included in that?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Cotton-seed products are included in this amendment, to be inserted in the bill when it is considered under the five-minute rule. I shall offer a motion to reinstate the current law with this amendment, to insert after the word "cotton" the words "and cotton-seed products."

Mr. MANN. What is the item?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. It is the item in the present law giving $50,000, of which thirty thousand is given to general manufactured articles and $20,000 to cotton products.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman does not refer to the item about commercial agents abroad, does he?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I understand there was an item inserted last year for special agents to investigate trade conditions in the Department of Commerce and Labor.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. That is right.

Mr. MANN. Is that the item the gentleman has reference to?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. That is the item.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman propose to endeavor to reinsert that item?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I do.

Mr. MANN. I am in full sympathy with the gentleman's purpose.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I am giving notice of it now, that when we come to that section of the bill under the five-minute rule I will move to reinsert it.

Mr. CANDLER. It was in the bill last year?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. It is the current law. The point of order can not lie against it. The point of order can lie against my amendment as to cotton-seed products, but it can not lie against the paragraph now current law.

Mr. CANDLER. Do you propose to endeavor to secure the same appropriation as last year?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. The same appropriation as the current law. If it were otherwise, it would be subject to a point of order.

There are some limitations on this bill that I want to call your attention to. The first one is:

Hereafter, in printing documents authorized by law and ordered by Congress, or either branch thereof, the Government Printing Office shall follow the rules of orthography established by Webster's or other generally accepted dictionaries of the English language.

There are many reasons why that ought to be done. In the first place every school book in the United States, in every schoolroom, college, or university would have to be abolished, and a new lot of school books republished and bought by the patrons of the schools. That would be an enormous expenditure.

In addition to this enormous expense, it creates derangement and confusion worse confounded in all parts of the Government Printing Office; all the stereotype plates in the Office would have to be reformed. I am not authorized to say what the President's message cost in the saving of 113 words, but the rumor comes from a very good source that it cost $760 to save those 113 words. I want it understood that I am not stating that authoritatively, but I understand it is about that amount.

It makes no difference, Mr. Chairman, how advantageous it might seem from some point of view, but you can all see at a glance what a revolution this new spelling would work in our schools and colleges, in printing offices, and in every newspaper office throughout the country.

There is another good reason for it. We are tied to a language spoken by people all over the world, and especially in Great Britain and Canada. Now, when we undertake to revolutionize the English language in that way we must consult those who use it with us; it is nothing but right that we should consult them. Are we to follow all along the line a spelling that would follow phonetic pronunciation? If so, then we would have one spelling in France, another in Germany, a different one in the South Central American States, where none pronounce English words as we pronounce them.

There is another limitation here. In the Treasury Department until recently they have always furnished the Committee on Appropriations with an estimate of about how much money we can spend—that is, estimating the revenues for the coming year. The present Secretary refused to do this last year, and your committee, or its chairman and clerk, had to make that estimate. That is not a safe way of doing business. In other words, the Committee on Appropriations must know as near as possible about how much money will be available for appropriations and disbursements. It is made the duty, by this limitation, of the Secretary of the Treasury to give us that estimate.

The next limitation, on page 4, is one which in my opinion by all means should be left in the bill. Let me read it:

SEC. 4. Only such books, periodicals, and pamphlets shall be purchased out of any appropriation made in this or any other act for the use of any library or office or officer as are strictly essential to the technical and professional work of the particular Department, bureau office, or officer authorized to use such library or collection of books; and all books, periodicals, and pamphlets which now form a part of or belong to any library or office collection of books and which are not strictly essential to the technical and professional work of the particular Department, bureau, or office shall be transferred on or before January 1, 1908, to the Library of Congress, except that books of fiction and belles-lettres shall be transferred to the Free Public Library of the District of Columbia, and all expenses of making this transfer, not otherwise sufficiently provided for, shall be paid from appropriations made for contingent expenses of the several Executive Departments or other Government establishments to which this section shall apply.

Some of our departmental libraries we discovered were filled with fiction of the cheapest kind. I am informed that when the Spanish war closed, one of our Departments, finding several thousands of volumes of this cheap fiction on their hands, shipped it all to the Philippines. I don't think that was good policy, for if it was not fit to be read here, it certainly was not fit to send to those people. I am informed that another Department has about 50,000 volumes scattered through the city in the hands of private parties. Our purpose is to draw these books back into the hands of the Departments.

We have gone a step further and provided that any of such books or periodicals in these libraries that do not come within this limitation must be sent to the Carnegie Library of Washington or to the Congressional Library.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. I do not know whether the gentleman is aware of the practice, but it is a fact that in the Light-House Service we have a good many light-houses located off the shore in the water, where the keepers do not get ashore once a month, and sometimes in the winter not as often as that. The Government provides them with a small library. Of course, it would be nonsense to provide them with technical books merely for study. These books are provided for the purpose of reading light literature, and are passed on from one light-house to another.

Mr. LITTAUER. Will the gentleman state under what provision of law those books are furnished?

Mr. MANN. Under an appropriation for light-house supplies, I suppose. I should think that would be a very proper appropriation; they are furnished as other necessities of the light-house.

Mr. LITTAUER Then they would not belong to the departmental libraries here in Washington?

Mr. MANN. I do not think they would.

Mr. LITTAUER. Then this provision would not apply to them.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. They could not be affected by this limitation. I would suggest to the gentleman from Illinois that he might offer an amendment to supply all the light-houses from this source instead of having them turned back into the Carnegie and Congressional libraries; they might be contributed to the life-saving stations.

Mr. MANN. It might be a very good way. I had read over the limitation, and I did feel certain that it did not apply.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. No; it does not apply. I will read it over again:

SEC. 4. Only such books, periodicals, and pamphlets shall be purchased out of any appropriation made in this or any other act for the use of any library or office or officer as are strictly essential to the technical and professional work of the particular Department, bureau, office, or officer authorized to use such library or collection of books; and all books, periodicals, and pamphlets which now form a part of or belong to any library or office collection of books and which are not strictly essential to the technical and professional work of the particular Department, bureau, or office shall be transferred, on or before January 1, 1908, to the Library of Congress, except that books of fiction and belles-lettres shall be transferred to the Free Public Library of the District of Columbia, and all expenses of making this transfer, not otherwise sufficiently provided for, shall be paid from appropriations made for contingent expenses of the several Executive Departments or other Government establishments to which this section shall apply.

Mr. MANN. I think it would, myself, the way it reads.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Well, Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] thinks so, he may make the exception when the bill comes up under the five-minute rule.

Mr. MANN. I wanted to know whether they were intended to cover anything outside of Washington.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. They were not. Mr. Chairman, there is another matter which the committee has reported to which I wish to refer. We have increased the salary of the clerks of the Members from $1,200 to $1,500. My opinion in the committee—and it is my opinion still—was that these clerks should go on the rolls and have $1,500 paid to them direct. There are some objections to that. One very good one is that some Members have two clerks and divide the salary between the two, taking one home with them and leaving one in Washington. There is another objection to it that can be easily met, and that is that the Congressman ought to control his own clerk absolutely, dismiss him when he pleases or reinstate him when he pleases. That can be easily arranged, even if the clerk be on the rolls. The justice and absolute necessity for this increase is patent to every man. It has been charged that we have been taking this amount of money, some of us, and using it as an increase of our own salaries. The committee is not aware of the fact that that has been the practice. We have no proof of it. But to get rid of all scandal—all liability to scandal of every kind—this clerk ought to go on the rolls and be paid by the Sergeant-at-Arms as we are paid, with the power left in the hands of the Member or Delegate to dismiss that clerk at any time. It is not intended, and never was intended, as an increase to our salaries, and on that subject let me say that we purpose in some way or somehow while this bill is under consideration to test this House as to whether you want to increase your salaries or not. If these clerks go on the rolls it can not be charged that we are increasing our salaries indirectly, which is now charged, and if our salaries are not sufficient to decently maintain a Congressman and his family here while the session lasts, then say so to the public and increase your salaries in the bill, and I am sure your constituency will approve it. If you have no reason for it, they will not indorse it.

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Yes.

Mr. GOULDEN. What do the clerks of Senators receive aside from those who are employed by the chairmen of committees?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. One thousand eight hundred dollars a year.

Mr. GOULDEN. Why this discrimination between the Senators and the clerks of Members of the House?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. There should be none.

Mr. GOULDEN. Is there any explainable reason for it?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. There is no reason for it. There is no reason why there should be a difference, and I want to say just here that all salaries ought to be on all fours wherever possible. To have it otherwise creates discontent and unrest. Where one man is doing the same work that another does, in the same hours, spending the same amount of money to live, it is not reasonable, it is not fair, that these differences in salaries should remain as they are now. That condition obtains among our clerks in the Departments, and it ought not to be so. It ought not to be the condition between the House and the Senate, and I am more than willing that the Senate should come down to $1,500 or that we should go up to $1,800. If they can show this House that $1,800 is a fair salary for their clerks, then we ought to put ours up ot $1,800. If they can not do it, then they ought to put theirs down to $1,500. They certainly ought to be on all fours in this bill. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman takes his seat I would like to ask him another question. I would like to ask the gentleman whether he regards it as good policy to increase the salaries of the employees of this House when there is a committee regularly appointed to take charge of these matters, and when that committee has had before it many of the salaries that are now proposed to be increased in this bill—whether the gentleman considers that to be good policy and courteous treatment?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, I must confess that if there is a committee of this House whose business it is to recommend the increases of salaries of House employees, that perhaps the Appropriations Committee should let those alone. But I understand that there is no salary increased of employees of this House except by the consent of the chairman of that committee, and perhaps the members of that committee.

Mr. GOULDEN. As a member of the Committee on Accounts, I desire to say that a number of these, four or five of them at least, were before our committee in the last session, and were not reported favorably.

Mr. LITTAUER. Which ones?

Mr. GOULDEN. The minority employees and those in the Sergeant-at-Arms department in charge of the pairs were not reported at all, though a strong pressure was brought to bear on the members of the committee, but it seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that if there is a committee having charge of this matter it should be given the duties as well as responsibilities. I have no objection personally to the matter as reported by the gentleman's committee, but I do think that the committee in charge of the matter, that of Accounts, should at least be treated with courtesy.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, the responsibility can not be delivered by the Committee on Appropriations. That responsibility is given by the House and the committee is appointed and its limitation of duty fixed, and therefore we could not give you the authority nor take it away from you, but as a matter of courtesy, I want to repeat, Mr. Chairman, in my humble opinion, if this committee is charged with that duty these increases of salaries of the employees of the House should come from that committee.

Mr. GOULDEN. I agree with you. As I said, personally I have no objection to the increases. I believe in good salaries, and in return would demand faithful services. I merely suggested it belonged to that committee, and I do not think the Committee on Appropriations mean to interfere with the privileges of any committee.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Let me ask the gentleman why he has not acted on these increases?

Mr. GOULDEN. Because we were in doubt whether they were entitled to the increase and for a lack of time.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I mean this session.

Mr. GOULDEN. We have not yet had an opportunity to take them up.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Will you indorse these increases?

Mr. GOULDEN. It is a very ungracious thing, indeed, to make the point of order which I think would lie against these increases, and I shall not do it as a member of the committee. I do not see the chairman of the Committee on Accounts on the floor of the House, but personally I shall interpose no objection, but let the Committee on Appropriations take the responsibility in the matter.

Mr. LITTAUER. I would like to add one word, if my colleague will permit me, here, and that is the Committee on Appropriations acts upon the estimates and recommendations of the heads of bureaus and departments. The case of the three pair clerks was recommended to the Committee on Appropriations by the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House, and consequently considered by them.

Mr. GOULDEN. The same recommendation has been made to the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. LITTAUER. That we were not advised of or were not particularly aware of, although we understood last session there was some discussion about this subject.

Mr. GOULDEN. There was considerable.

Mr. LITTAUER. But it came to us and we considered it in the regular way.

Mr. GOULDEN. But does not the gentleman think it would have been at least courteous and right to have ascertained from the Committee on Accounts whether it had taken any action or not?

Mr. LITTAUER. Under the circumstances, yes.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. BINGHAM. If the gentleman will allow me a word. It was certainly not the desire of the Committee on Appropriations to be discourteous to the gentleman's committee. The information we received came to the committee, as it always does, from the officers of the House in charge or supervision of the subordinate force. As this was a matter distinctly for the House's convenience and comfort of the Members and an expedition of the House's work, we saw no impropriety in placing them in the bill, and certainly no discourtesy was intended toward the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. GOULDEN. I wish to disclaim all intention of reflecting upon the Committee on Appropriations as being discourteous to our committee. I know them individually too well and know that they would not be guilty of anything of the kind.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT].

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I presume that some of the Members of this House read, as I did in some of Saturday's papers, that I held up the Committee on Appropriations for three or four hours by a discussion of the new spelling, and in that way had delayed the progress in this House of that bill for that length of time. I only wish to say, Mr. Chairman, that the correspondent who gave that report must have been an easy mark for some ingenious person who had fake news to dispose of, because there was absolutely not the slightest foundation for the statement. The whole discussion in the committee did not take five minutes. It was entirely good humored, and the words which were put in my mouth were fabricated, and the whole statement was without foundation except for the fact that we spent a few minutes very informally in discussing the question. But inasmuch as it has been so exaggerated, and inasmuch as I have had sentiments put into my mouth which I did not express, I will take now a few minutes to state my position on the subject. I do believe in a simplification of our spelling. I have not been particularly intense in that opinion. Personally, I should have been willing that the movement should go on as it has been going on for many years, simplifying our complicated and barbarous spelling by the constant usage of the public, and of the publishers, and of the newspapers. It seems to me that it is exceedingly desirable that that steady progress should continue, because the English language is gradually becoming the commercial language of the globe.

As we all wish that that process shall continue it seems to me we all must feel that it will tend to increase that progress to have our spelling as simple and methodical as possible and to have the various idiosyncracies and inconsistencies which frighten and confuse a stranger removed as far as can be done without interfering with the etymology or history of words. French has long been the court language of the world, but English is now getting to be the commercial language, and I think in the future courts will be much more likely to take the language of the people than the people will be likely to take the language of the courts, and it is not unreasonable to expect that, as all North America uses English, as Australia uses it, as India is a center for it, and the Philippines is a center for it, it will gradually become a universal commercial language. And so we should all be interested in making that language as simple and uniform as possible. I can see no reason why this steady progress toward simplicity, which we all must observe in our personal usage, should not be hastened. Most of us do not use the letter "u" in "honor" or "candor" any longer, and the most of us spell "plough" "plow."

Most of us are constantly falling in with the simplifications of the language, and now when I am faced with the proposition of shortening 300 specific words on the recommendation of a studious committee of public-spirited men, it seems to me a more rapid step toward accomplishing what our natural instinct is slowly accomplishing, and for that reason I favor it. There is only one objection I have to their list. I confess that the word "through" spelled as "t-h-r-u" does not appeal to me, and I can not see why that spelling was inserted.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question or two.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. GILLETT. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Has the gentleman calculated how long it would take to modify the English language at the rate of 300 words a year?

Mr. GILLETT. No; I have not.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It would take four hundred years. Now, one other question. If you are going into this modification business at all——

Mr. GILLETT. May I ask the gentleman what he means by saying that it would take four hundred years to do it?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. To remodel the spelling of three hundred thousand words in the English language.

Mr. GILLETT. They do not all need it, of course.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The most of them do, as much as these 300 words.

Mr. GILLETT. Oh, no.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Now, another question. If you are going into this remodeling business, why not go the whole hog and take the phonetic system of spelling that has forty-four letters in it, and that absolutely abolishes the task or stunt of learning to spell at all?

Mr. GILLETT. That would interfere in many cases with the derivation or history of words. This does not.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. There is not one man out of forty thousand who cares anything about derivation at all, is there?

Mr. GILLETT. I think there are many more than that. I do——

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Now, you propose to make a commercial language——

Mr. GILLETT. I hope that is what we are growing to.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I hope our language will become a commercial language, but these men that are engaged in commerce do not stop to study etymology.

Mr. GILLETT. They do not; but does the gentleman mean that he favors the phonetic system?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I mean this, that this 300-words business is such an infinitesimal reform that if I was going into the reform business at all I would at one jump adopt the phonetic system of spelling and the shorthand system of writing, and do away with the double task of learning how to spell and write, the learning how to write the way we write now. Then you would have a reform that is a reform.

Mr. GILLETT. The gentleman's suggestion seems to me in accord with many suggestions that are made in this House by gentlemen opposed to a measure. He objects to a slight step on the ground that he would take some other step which everybody knows is impossible. That is what is often done by a Member in this House as a means of defeating a measure. Now, I do not think that such a criticism as that is very weighty. The gentleman knows that we are not going to adopt phonetic spelling. That is impossible at the present. But he also knows that we are every year simplifying our spelling by ordinary use—the ordinary popular use—and here is a simple attempt to somewhat accelerate the progress which is going on from year to year. And as I approve of all of this progress that is going on, so I approve of this acceleration. It is not a revolution. We can not effect any such phonetic revolution as the gentleman suggests. I do not know whether I would favor it, but I do not think it is practicable. We only consider what is before us, and here is a practical suggestion that comes which seems to be sensible and right and in accord with what we are doing all the time. Therefore I shall be very glad if the House will adopt it.

Mr. MACON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes.

Mr. MACON. If this simplified spelling were to be adopted, would it not necessitate the abolition of spelling books now being used in all the schools of the country?

Mr. GILLETT. Why of course not. Our changing it does not make it necessary to change school books. I have no doubt that in the next edition of the school books they would probably adopt it themselves, but they are not compelled to do it.

Mr. MACON. Then if the school books should not follow it, why do you want it? Why have a boy taught to spell one way and then when he gets through with his education have to learn to spell another way?

Mr. GILLETT. The gentleman makes that assumption contrary to the idea that I have been endeavoring to express. I say that the country would follow it up gradually. It does not follow that because we adopt these 300 words this year that all the school books must be changed immediately. It is not a radical revolutionary change. It is a small and moderate change. It does not follow that all the school books must be changed, but they would follow it up gradually. I think many of these words are already spelled so in the school books.

Mr. MACON. If the school books all have to be changed, it would work a hardship on those who have to buy them.

Mr. GILLETT. There are only 300 words. It is not a revolution in our spelling. It is only what I have attempted to show before—a little acceleration of the change which is going on every year in the newspapers, and in our own correspondence.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I would like to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts if he is in favor of this reform made in the spelling of the word "through" by spelling it "t-h-r-u?"

Mr. GILLETT. I do not think that is the correct way, because we pronounce "through" as if it were spelt "t-h-r-o o" and not "t-h-r-u." It seems to me that entirely confuses the yowels.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. But did not the President in his message use the word "t-h-r-u" all the way through? [Laughter.]

Mr. GILLETT. I presume he did.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Then your remark is a reflection upon the wisdom of the President.

Mr. GILLETT. I do not agree with the President in all that he says and does.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I am glad to hear it.

Mr. GILLETT. Now, I just wanted to make this statement of my position, because the newspaper statement of it was an unfounded fabrication. If anybody has anything further to suggest in reference to what I have said——

Mr. SULLIVAN. May I ask the gentleman where he can find any authority under our system of government which enables the President to order the spelling of his message in the manner in which he has done it?

Mr. GILLETT. I have not looked into that. I suppose that he has the same right to spell as he chooses that I have and that you have.

Mr. SULLIVAN. I would ask, then, whether a member of the present Cabinet who has in his department a printing plant independent of the Government Printing Office has the right to inflict his personal ideas of spelling upon the great body of men who are afterwards to read these public documents; and if so, where does he get that right?

Mr. GILLETT. I suppose he has exactly the same authority that I have in writing.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Let me ask this further question. Now, why is it that the Public Printer spells public documents in a manner other than the usual one? Where does he get the authority to do that?

Mr. GILLETT. Who?

Mr. SULLIVAN. The Public Printer.

Mr. GILLETT. I say I think he has a right to do so until we tell him differently. He is our servant, and he must obey our directions.

Mr. SULLIVAN. My question is, Whence did he derive that right? From what did it proceed?

Mr. GILLETT. Every man has a right to spell as he pleases. I suppose he has the same right that the rest of us have, if he has not any instructions to the contrary. We each of us could order our speeches to be spelled exactly according to our manuscript.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Then the gentleman's idea is that if the Public Printer chose deliberately to misspell all the words in a public document because that method of spelling conformed to his idea of correct spelling, he might continue to do so until Congress ordered him to stop?

Mr. GILLETT. I think he might run that risk if he wanted to, but I do not think that is a practical suggestion. Of course no Public Printer would think of doing it. He would very soon receive orders from us.

Mr. SULLIVAN. I think the President's notion of authority is the same as the gentleman's in that particular.

Mr. BINGHAM. If the gentleman will allow me, perhaps I can elucidate briefly the gentleman's inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLETT. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, of course.

Mr. BINGHAM. In the report of the hearing, which will be printed in the RECORD to-morrow, in connection with this subject of what is called simplified spelling, I made this inquiry:

Mr. BINGHAM. Is there any statute that gives the President authority in any way to change the spelling—have you looked into that?
Mr. STILLINGS. No, sir; I have not.
Mr. BINGHAM. Then, if a Department should want to change the spelling from what is known as the normal or natural spelling, you would accept the order?
Mr. STILLINGS. Under the order of the President the Departments were ordered to have spelling done that way, and would naturally have to obey the order.
Mr. BINGHAM. There is nothing in the statute that authorizes him to give that order, either for or against that proposition?
Mr. STILLINGS. I do not know as to that.
Mr. BINGHAM. Why did you, then, print these bills under that special spelling?
Mr. STILLINGS. I do not know why it should have been done in this case.
Mr. TAWNEY. Is not the Book of Estimates printed in the same manner?
Mr. STILLINGS. The Book of Estimates emanates from the Treasury Department, and is printed at the Treasury branch. An effort has been made to carry out the President's order in reference to simplified spelling.
Mr. TAWNEY. The Book of Estimates is printed at the Treasury branch?
Mr. STILLINGS. Yes, sir.
Mr. TAWNEY. This bill is printed in your office?
Mr. STILLINGS. Yes, sir.
Mr. TAWNEY. In printing this bill, then, your employees must have followed the spelling contained in the Book of Estimates?
Mr. STILLINGS. Undoubtedly.
Mr. TAWNEY. And that is how it came about?
Mr. STILLINGS. Yes, sir; if this was copied from a departmental document which was prepared on the simplified spelling lines.
Mr. TAWNEY. What was the President's order, and have you a copy of it?
Mr. STILLINGS. I have not a copy here.

I will state to the gentleman that there will be printed with my remarks to-morrow the full order of the President to Mr. Stillings, the Public Printer.

Mr. GILLETT. I should suppose that naturally the Public Printer would print and his natural duty would be to print every document according to the manuscript sent, but I suppose, out of kindness to us, if he sees a mistake in our copy, he naturally corrects it, and I suppose he goes by some standard dictionary.

Mr. LITTAUER. The custom has been to follow Webster.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Does not the gentleman draw a distinction between an official document and a private letter?

Mr. GILLETT. Of course there are differences. I do not know just what the gentleman has in mind.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. For instance, I have a right to spell my name as I please, whether intentionally or ignorantly; but when the President is writing an official document to Congress should he not confine his spelling to the usual form as found in our statutes?

Mr. GILLETT. I think he could use Greek if he wanted to.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Well, he might use Moro or Tagalog, Filipino or German.

Mr. GILLETT. Certainly, I think that is entirely in his discretion.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Or he might send a message here in Latin.

Mr. GILLETT. Certainly.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Do you think the President would have that right?

Mr. GILLETT. I do. I think he could use what language or what spelling he chose.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Suppose he should issue a military proclamation affecting the Army or Navy of the United States, affecting the life, liberty, or property of a member of either, and that proclamation should come before the Supreme Court of the United States for consideration, and the President should spell it in his own way or get up a new word for each idea he undertook to express. Do you not think that the Supreme Court would be extremely embarrassed and would have to send for the President's dictionary, and possibly for the President himself to come and translate that message? It could be carried to that extreme, of course.

Mr. GILLETT. The gentleman is confusing two things, it seems to me; he is confusing the right and the expediency. I think the President, or anyone else, has the right to spell and publish as he pleases. Of course in practice we are all going to exercise reason and good sense.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Suppose he should spell the word "due" in this passage from the Constitution "due process of law"—suppose he should spell it "d-e-w." Do you not think that would be confusing to a man who was imprisoned under an order of the President, and would it not be confusing to the Supreme Court if his case should go there?

Mr. GILLETT. I don't think it would confuse the man.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Don't you think it would confuse the court?

Mr. GILLETT. No.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Has not the Chief Justice been already confused by this new spelling?

Mr. GILLETT. I do not know that he has. It might displease the court.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The Chief Justice asked a member of the bar—an officer of the Department of Justice, I believe—who had spelled a word in the Rooseveltian method, what he meant by it. The gentleman sees to what confusion it would yield.

Mr. GILLETT. The gentleman from Tennessee is not distinguishing between expediency and the right.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The gentleman from Massachusetts goes to the extent of saying that the President has a right to do what he pleases with official documents in spelling, and I take the ground that he has no right to do it, especially in matters that may come before the Supreme Court or Congress.

Mr. GILLETT. I think the President has the same right that we all have—to spell as he pleases.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I know that the President wants to do right. I am a great admirer of President Roosevelt, but I am talking about the ridiculous proposition of having a message sent here to Congress spelled one way and Congress printing it as spelled in the RECORD, and alongside of it the proceedings of Congress spelling the identical same words in a different way.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. I would like to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] if he is a member of this Amalgamated Association for Simplified Spelling? [Laughter.]

Mr. GILLETT. No; I am not.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will allow me, I want to read the President's letter to Mr. Stillings. It is as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE, WASHINGTON,
OYSTER BAY, N. Y., August 27, 1906.

MY DEAR MR. STILLINGS: I inclose herewith copies of certain circulars of the Simplified Spelling Board, which can be obtained free from the board at No. 1 Madison avenue, New York City. Please hereafter direct that in all Government publications of the Executive Departments the 300 words enumerated in Circular No. 5 shall be spelled as therein set forth. If anyone asks the reason for the action, refer him to Circulars 3, 4, and 6, as issued by the Simplified Spelling Board. Most of the criticism of the proposed step is evidently made in entire ignorance of what the step is, no less than in entire ignorance of the very moderate and common-sense views as to the purposes to be achieved, which views are so excellently set forth in the circulars to which I have referred. There is not the slightest intention to do anything revolutionary or initiate any far-reaching policy. The purpose simply is for the Government, instead of lagging behind popular sentiment to advance abreast of it and at the same time abreast of the views of the ablest and most practical educators of our time, as well as of the most profound scholars—men of the stamp of Professor Lounsbury and Professor Skeat.

If the slight changes in the spelling of the 300 words proposed wholly or partially meet popular approval, then the changes will become permanent without any reference to what public officials or individual private citizens may feel; if they do not ultimately meet with popular approval they will be dropt, and that is all there is about it. They represent nothing in the world but a very slight extension of the unconscious movement which has made agricultural implement makers and farmers write "plow" instead of "plough;" which has made most Americans write "honor" without the somewhat absurd, superfluous "u;" and which is even now making people write "program" without the "me"—just as all people who speak English now write "bat," "set," "dim," "sum," and "fish," instead of the Elizabethan "batte," "sette," "dimme," "summe," and "fysshe;" which make us write "public," "almanac," "era," "fantasy," and "wagon," instead of the "publick," "almanack," "aera," "phantasy," and "waggon" of our great-grandfathers. It is not an attack on the language of Shakespeare and Milton, because it is in some instances a going back to the forms they used, and in others merely the extension of changes which, as regards other words, have taken place since their time. It is not an attempt to do anything far-reaching or sudden or violent; or indeed anything very great at all. It is merely an attempt to cast what slight weight can properly be cast on the side of the popular forces which are endeavoring to make our spelling a little less foolish and fantastic.

Sincerely, yours, THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

Hon. CHARLES A. STILLINGS,
Public Printer, Washington.

Mr. GILBERT. It seems that the gentleman from Pennsylvania and all the members of that committee concede that this is not a governmental matter; that in spite of any legislation that we may enact, every college, every school, every teacher, every individual may still adhere to the old method of spelling. Now, would not the adoption of that new method tend to create a greater disorder and a greater degree of confusion in spelling rather than more harmony?

Mr. BINGHAM. All I can say to the gentleman is that we think that the qualification in this proposed amendment is right. It will come duly before the committee when we reach that paragraph in the bill, which will be early in its consideration. It reads as follows:

Hereafter in printing documents authorized by law or ordered by Congress or either branch thereof the Government Printing Office shall follow the rules of orthography established by Webster's or other generally accepted dictionaries of the English language.

It is simply, so far as this proposed amendment or legislation goes, a continuation of the existing system and existing orthography. That is its sole purpose. Now, the committee believe that in view of the presentation of the Book of Estimates of the bill that goes with it for the consideration of the committee, all that comes from the Secretary of the Treasury in official form for our consideration should be spelled in the usual system of orthography.

Mr. GILBERT. What I want to know is this: Is not Congress making itself ridiculous and absurd to enter upon that subject at all?

Mr. BINGHAM. I do not think that the committee before whom the proposition is submitted in the form of a document to that committee, coming from the Secretary of the Treasury, makes it ridiculous in taking the sense of the committee and calling attention of Congress to it.

Mr. GILBERT. Might we not as well spend our time in regulating the color of our cravats? [Laughter.]

Mr. LITTAUER. If the gentleman will permit me, the Committee on Appropriations is concerned with this matter from the financial and economical standpoint. We were met by the statement that if we were to continue two kinds of spelling in printing documents the extra cost in producing the publications of the Government would be a considerable one. The use of two methods would involve an extra cost for proof reading, an extra cost for changing type, and so forth.

Consequently, we felt that in trying to bring about economic administration of the Public Printer's office, it was well that some official mandate should be given where the authority rested to determine that the work of the Public Printer should be conducted in the most economic and, even, as we also believe, the proper way. The order of the President we recognize, but we also recognize the intimation—not the dictum—of the Supreme Court that if you are going to quote law in a printed brief you must quote it as the law reads and not quote it with some new style of spelling. Then other Departmental officers refused to have the spelling of their designations changed, because they are statutory. If we were to continue here or after in all these publications the necessity of having the proof reader go over them twice in order to inject this new spelling, and then for the printers and the plate makers and so on to change their work, it is quite plain that we will add considerable to the cost of the Public Printer's work; and it is from the standpoint of cost that we have submitted this matter of legislation here.

Mr. GILBERT. Mr. Chairman, I think the committee is entirely right, but that is apart from the question I propounded to the gentleman. We know that in the times of Queen Elizabeth the Parliament of England would sit for months fixing the price of tinware, of hats and shoes, etc., and we know that in the time of Louis XIV the States-General would sit to settle questions of etiquette before the court; and I do not want the Congress of the United States to be guilty of what seems to me a piece of folly in passing a piece of legislation that no court would pay any attention to as being any part of any governmental function to be exercised by any Congress.

Mr. BINGHAM. The gentleman will understand this, that we are dealing just with the official documents, so far as this House or so far as Congress is concerned. Now, one point—the printing is in the simplified form, we will say. The question was put to Mr. Young, foreman of the Government Printing Office, on page 44 of the hearing, as follows:

Mr. LITTAUER. Can these plates be readily changed from one form of spelling to another?
Mr. YOUNG. They can be changed, but a plate correction is always a bad thing. I do not think a plate correction should ever be made if it can be avoided.
Mr. LITTAUER. The proof reading would be more expensive than the changing of the plates?
Mr. YOUNG. Yes, sir.
Mr. BURLESON. You spoke about these plates—that is, with the 300 words now adopted?
Mr. YOUNG. Yes, sir.
Mr. BURLESON. Now, suppose they adopt the next batch, say 1,200?
Mr. YOUNG. Then it would be out of the question.

That is the testimony of a practical man in that office.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Does not the President of the United States have the right to authorize the reprint of certain executive documents?

Mr. BINGHAM. That I can not answer. I presume he has that right.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. We have a great many maps, for instance——

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Pennsylvania will permit, I will say that the President has not that right.

Mr. LITTAUER. The Public Printer is under Congress.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. We order these executive documents containing these fine plates. They are the ordinary spelling. Under this new way of spelling all these plates would have to be changed, and it would cost a great deal of money to do it, of course, and take up a great deal of time, and so forth. Is that what the gentleman from whom you quote had in mind when he spoke about the "plates?"

Mr. BINGHAM. That is what the gentleman had in mind, all plates. He simply states that they can handle the 300 words, but when it comes to 1,200 or 1,500 words it is out of the question.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I will state, in answer to the question of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES], that we have public documents that are printed in accordance with law and we have others printed by order of Congress. Now, under the present the Executive documents that are sent down to the printer to be printed, coming directly from the Executive Department to the Government Printing Office, will be printed under the Executive order in accordance with the rule of simplified spelling. Then these same documents come to Congress and they go back to be printed by Congress for the use of Congress. The proof must all be reread, unless Congress specifically adopts the simplified form of spelling, thereby giving direction to the Public Printer, who is under the control of Congress, giving him an authority to reprint these documents or have them printed identically in the same form of spelling they were printed in when they came from the Executive Department.

Mr. GILLETT. Why would that be necessary? Why, without the explicit declaration of Congress, could not the Public Printer send it here in the simplified spelling, if we did not say we would not permit it?

Mr. TAWNEY. Well, I suppose that the Public Printer construes the order of the Executive to relate only to publications that are printed under authority of law and by direction of the Executive Department. I do not think the Public Printer would consider the order of the Executive to apply to publications that are printed by authority of Congress. While it was not stated in the hearings, he said to me that he would expect before printing the documents that are printed by authority of Congress in the simplified form of spelling, he would expect Congress to give some direction otherwise, or in the absence of any direction he would feel bound to go on and print the documents printed by authority of Congress in the manner that has heretofore obtained.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question? Did the Public Printer have any instructions in reference to printing the RECORD?

Mr. TAWNEY. The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. TAWNEY. I understand the chairman of the Committee on Printing of the House has made some announcement, at least there was an announcement in the press, whether he did to the Printer or not, that the RECORD would be printed in the usual form of spelling. I do not think he had any direction one way or the other.

Mr. MANN. And which, of course, I suppose, would carry with it the printing of those documents referred by the Speaker to be printed.

Mr. TAWNEY. Absolutely.

Mr. MANN. So that unless there is some legislative action one way or the other we will be put in the position of having the same documents printed by the same printing office for the Government one lot spelled in one way and another lot spelled in another way.

Mr. TAWNEY. Exactly.

Mr. MANN. And if there should be a third edition issued of those documents I suppose they would have to toss a copper to see how the third edition should be spelled.

Mr. TAWNEY. It would require some legislative action. The purpose of this provision to secure uniformity in spelling in all public documents that are issued by the Executive Departments and subsequently referred to Congress, or referred to Congress as Executive documents and then having them printed under authority of Congress. The purpose is to have uniformity in spelling and save the expense of duplication work and expense.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Do you not think if you let this subject alone it will result in uniformity?

Mr. TAWNEY. It has not.

Mr. SOUTHARD. So far as Government printing is concerned.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I desire to make an inquiry. Perhaps I am a little obtuse or have some wrong impressions. I understand there is no standard fixed by law now; that it is a question of custom at the Government Printing Office.

Mr. MANN. There is a standard fixed by the Government Printing Office.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Not fixed by the Government Printing Office?

Mr. MANN. Oh, yes.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I understand it is just a custom and usage; that there is no law.

Mr. MANN. They have rules at the Government Printing Office which themselves in many cases violate the dictionaries. I will say to the gentleman that they do not follow the dictionaries in all cases by any means.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Those rules simply refer to a standard or an accepted usage; that is all. Now, the Public Printer can conform, in the absence of any legislation, to this new standard. It is not necessary that Congress should—let me ask, does the chairman of the Committee on Printing have authority to fix the standard of printing for Congressional documents? I assume not. I think that requires an act of Congress. The whole question, I understand, is open now; that the public printing except in so far as it has been directed by the President of the United States in respect to certain classes of publications—all the balance is a matter discretional with him, a matter of taste, a matter of usage.

Mr. BINGHAM. Now let me read what he says about that.

Mr. LITTAUER. What recognition of the progress in spelling has the Public Printer taken?
Mr. STILLINGS. We have been largely guided, in fact almost entirely governed, by the action of the publishers of Webster's Dictionary.

I merely give you that.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I insist that the situation——

The CHAIRMAN. To whom does the gentleman from Massachusetts yield?

Mr. GILLETT. I yield now to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The situation is simply this: It is simply a matter of practice or a matter of custom that there is no lawful standard of spelling for public documents.

Mr. TAWNEY. Except in so far as the Executive order proposes to make a lawful standard.

Mr. MANN. That is purely a matter of taste. The Public Printer is not required to follow the law. It is utterly beyond the law.

Mr. TAWNEY. And if we do not enact any legislation the Public Printer may make documents conform to the Executive standard; he may use the Executive standard for printing some classes of documents and some other standard in relation to others.

Mr. GILLETT. I had not thought of this, but I must confess at first blush I would go a step further than the gentleman. I would say that if I made a speech here and sent it down to the Public Printer and told him I wanted it spelled in a particular way that I have a right to have it spelled in the way I say.

Mr. MANN. He would not do it. He would not spell it that way, either.

Mr. CLAYTON rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CLAYTON]?

Mr. GILLETT. Certainly.

Mr. CLAYTON. May I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] a question?

Mr. GILLETT. Certainly.

Mr. CLAYTON. We understand from the remarks of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] that there is no law compelling the Public Printer to spell in any particular way, no positive law, no legislative enactment; but does not the Executive order of the President, whose appointee he is, bind him to the extent that the President may remove him if he does not conform to his directions? Would not he do it, knowing the President as you know him, and that when he says a thing he generally has some meaning to it? Do you not think he would discharge the Public Printer if he did not conform to his directions?

Mr. GILLETT. I think his recommendation to the Public Printer is very apt to receive the Public Printer's careful consideration.

Mr. CLAYTON. The Public Printer is a wise man and onto his job.

Mr. NORRIS rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] yield to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS]?

Mr. GILLETT. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. NORRIS. If it be true, and it seems to me that it is, that the duty of the printer, either public or otherwise—if we are going to be at all technical about it—is to spell as the manuscript before him is spelled. He ought, it seems to me, as the gentleman has suggested, if he is requested to print his speech for the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD in the reform method of spelling, to spell it that way. For the same reason the President ought to be allowed to control such things as emanate from the Executive Department, and they ought to be settled in accordance with the manuscript that he sends to the Printing Office to have printed.

Mr. SOUTHARD. In every case?

Mr. NORRIS. I should think so. It is the duty of the printer, and I can see that it is, to simply print what is given to him in the shape of manuscript. He ought to follow it, and if it comes from the Executive Department it would be his duty to follow it, and he ought to be removed if he does not follow it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I am not asking the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] to yield. I want some time in my own right.

Mr. GILLETT. All right. I have finished, Mr. Chairman. I am very glad that the gentleman from Missouri can take the floor.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, this matter is not so much of a joke as it might seem at first blush. I most heartily indorse what the Committee on Appropriations did in this matter when they say:

> Hereafter in printing documents authorized by law or ordered by Congress or either branch thereof the Government Printing Office shall follow the rules of orthography established by Webster's or other generally accepted dictionaries of the English language.

In the beginning I wish to modify one remark that I made to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] a little while ago. I asked him if it were not true that there is not more than one citizen of the United States out of 40,000 interested in the origin or etymology of words. Of course I know that was a very extravagant question myself. What I meant was this, that the number of persons who are interested in etymology or the derivation of words is very small in comparison with the entire population of the United States. I have spent some time, and I have no doubt that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] has spent some time, ransacking the dictionaries to find out the derivation of words. Before I got to be as busy as I am now I spent a good deal of time at it. It is fascinating work. I started out to be a precisian in the use of words. Law and politics lured me from that ambitious project. It vanished along with many other dreams of my youth. But that is neither here or there. Before the President issued his remarkable ukase there was no trouble in this country about spelling. Everybody either tried to conform his spelling to the generally accepted authorities or he paid no attention to the authorities at all and spelled to suit himself.

I will not go as far as the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LIVINGSTON] went in saying that this order of the President makes "confusion worse confounded." I think that is an extravagant statement, too. But I do think that it makes a muddle where there was no sense in having any muddle. Some time before very long the people of the United States are going to insist on having a President who will attend strictly to his own constitutional functions and expend his energies only on subjects of great pith and moment. As to the Public Printer, his duty, without any statute on the subject, is to conform the spelling of these public documents that he has charge of to the usually accepted authorities in the matter of spelling, and that is what he would have done if he had been let alone. That he feels under obligations to conform his action to this order of the President I have no doubt. Failure to do so would, in all probability, mean that he would soon be ex-Public Printer. The truth is that the Public Printer has at times exercised prerogatives which nobody ever intended that he should exercise. I had a very interesting experience with the first speech I ever made in this House. I am not at all certain that any public speaker in this country, except the preacher or the lawyer or the doctor delivering a lecture, has any right to incorporate into his speech any sentence or phrase from a foreign language, because our language is the richest and most flexible ever spoken by the children of men. It grows richer and more flexible every day.

If anybody does not believe that it is the most flexible, all that he has to do is to read Don Juan to discover the most complete illustration of the flexibility of the English language. I would not recommend Don Juan to a boarding school, but in that great poem Lord Byron gave a marvelous demonstration of the flexibility of our vernacular. Our language is a hash language. Perhaps it would be in better taste to say a composite language or a verbal mosaic. It is built on a basis of German, which we often call Anglo-Saxon, a palpable misnomer, and there have been grafted on it words from every language of the world, ancient or modern. Whenever we need a new word we simply reach out into somebody else's vocabulary and appropriate it. But to return to my mutton: In the first speech I ever made here of course I made every effort to put my best foot forward. I wrote it and rewrote it and boiled it down and polished it and committed it to memory [laughter]; and I am not at all certain that it would not be better if we all did that all the time now. We would make fewer speeches, but better ones, no doubt. I wanted to be sure that I was putting the best foot forward, so I quoted a Latin sentence: "Facilis descensus averni"—"Easy the road to the deuce." I sent it down to the Printing Office, and they sent it back changed to "Facilis descensus averno," which is only the change of one letter. But I did not propose that the Public Printer should doctor up my speech, and I wanted to be certain that it was correct the way I had it. Looking over here within 40 or 50 feet I saw the most universal scholar who has been in the House in my time—Dr. William Everett, of Massachusetts—so I went to him. I presented the question to him, and he said: "Well, it does not make much difference. They both mean substantially the same thing; they are both grammatically correct; but I believe that the weight of authority is on your side."

So I sent it off to the Public Printer. In about twenty minutes Doctor Everett wrote me a note stating: "I have been investigating the matter and there are four accepted readings for that line. Facilis descensus averni; facilis descensus averno; facilis descensus averni est, and facilis descensus averno est; and the Public Printer is right." He told me afterwards that he had twenty-six editions of Virgil—twenty-three more than I knew before had been printed. Thus I settled my matter with the Public Printer.

In the shape in which this question now arises it is a practical problem. A gentleman asked me if I am in favor of phonetic spelling. I am not certain whether we could adopt it, but if we could there is no question that if we had the phonetic system of spelling which has forty-four letters in it we would absolutely save two years of the time that a child is learning to spell. They are natural-born spellers. Take any child—and every school-teacher on the floor of the House knows it—and give him the word "owl" to spell, he would spell it "ow-l" instead of "o-w-l," two letters instead of three, because there is the one sound represented by the two letters "o" and "w." If you take the forty-four letters you will have every sound included in the language. Then if you adopt the shorthand system of writing—and you can learn that as well as you can the system we now write—you will save from three to five years in the life of every citizen in this Republic in getting an education.

There is something practical about that, but there are three arguments against that. All the etymologists will be against it. The men who want to learn the derivation of words will be against it. Every printed book in the English language is an argument against it, and every human being who has learned to spell in the usual way is a living, moving argument against it. They do not want to take the trouble to learn to spell any other way. But there is no doubt that if that system were adopted two or three years in the life of every child now living and during the life of every child to be born in the future would be saved in the matter of getting an education.

As to this order of the President, it is absolutely pitiable. It produces confusion without doing any good. I undertake to say that if you take the scholars of the House, such as my learned friend from Massachusetts, and ask them to pick 300 words for the experiment in simplified spelling no two would pick the same words and no two would agree on the spelling of the 300 words. The President says "thru;" but the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] objects to spelling the word "through" in the way that the President spelled it all through his message—"thru"—because in certain places the letter "u" has a different sound from what it has in the word "through." The gentleman from Massachusetts would spell it "throo," because, so he thinks, "u" never has the sound of "oo." Now, that is all a question of geography. It depends on the section of country you are in as to whether certain sounds prevail. For instance, the word "calf" is as much entitled, under Webster's Standard Dictionary, to be pronounced "c-a-w-f" as "palm" is entitled to be pronounced "p-a-w-m;" yet let a man go into an agricultural section of the country, where they raise calves, and go around through the country talking about a c-a-w-f, and he will run good risk of having a writ de lunatico inquirendo sworn out for him.

The changing of the spelling of these 300 words does not do any good. It simply muddles things.

Mr. GILLETT. Does not the gentleman think that this simplification of spelling, which, of course, he knows is going on slowly all the time, is a desirable thing?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Why, certainly I do.

Mr. GILLETT. Then here are 300 words, most of them being changed very slightly. Why is not the adoption of this list an acceleration of the progress in that direction? Why does the gentleman say it is so confusing?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It gets up two systems of spelling right away.

Mr. GILLETT. Every change gets up two systems of spelling.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I know, but it is very gradual.

Mr. WILLIAMS. On the very point you are talking about, take the word "thru." That might spell "through" in German, it might spell "through" in half a dozen languages, but the English "u" is never pronounced "oo," and you can not make "throo" out of it. In New England there is a disposition to make "oo" sound out of "u," the old English "u." In other parts of the world "u" is pronounced "eu," and if the President was going to spell phonetically he might have done better by using "throo." This is just an illustration of the wonderful diversities of opinion which will spring up at once as to how you are going to make the spelling correspond with the sound.

Mr. GILLETT. I do not think you can suggest a single other word in the list of 300 as to which the same thing is true.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It is just the old question of "shibboleth" and "sibboleth" over again. One of the most distinguished Members of the House (I will not name him, because it might seem invidious) invariably pronounces the word "does" as though it were spelled "doos." He is not going to agree to this simplified scheme of spelling. But what I was trying to get at is the practical part of it, in answer to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT]. I say that the spelling of the English language is a growth, and every man who has ever read Chaucer, and from him on up, knows that very thing.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Will the gentleman permit an interruption there?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yes; with pleasure.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. If all of these changes mean growth, then where growth has taken place why should not the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, as well as the other literature of the country, accept it?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Well, these 300 words have not developed as a growth yet.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Oh, I think they have.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. They have not. Here is where the trouble comes in about it. All over this country, without any law about it except the law of custom, where we get the common law, we have been accepting Webster's Dictionary as the established authority, or Worcester's or some of the rest of them. Now, there must be somewhere in the neighborhood of from fifty to seventy-five thousand school-teachers in the United States, and maybe more. They apply for school certificates under the statutes of their States. In Missouri we have three or four different kinds of certificates. If they stand such and such an examination, they get a certificate for life. If they stand another test, they get a certificate for five years, but the most of them get yearly certificates. Spelling is one of the things on which they are examined. I always did doubt whether there was any sense in examining anybody on spelling, because it is largely a matter of memory, except in the case of scholars who go into the derivation of words. Suppose some of these faddists got hold of these examinations, and a teacher should come up for examination; these 300 words are in the list; and the teacher spells every one of them according to the authorized standard dictionary. That teacher gets zero on spelling when graded by a faddist.

Another thing about it. We appoint boys to West Point and to Annapolis. They are examined on spelling. They are graded on spelling. Now, inasmuch as this question has been raised, suppose they set up this improved standard of spelling, but suppose they do not tell the boys what standard they are going to be judged by. Then they take enough words out of this preferred list of correctly spelled words under the new system, 300, to make up that examination, and the boys spell them according to the old standard. Every one of them gets zero on spelling.

No sensible man will sanction such rank injustice as that.

Then turn it round the other way. Suppose the applicants for school certificates and the appointees to West Point and Annapolis all believe in the simplified spelling, and these 300 words are given them to spell and they spell them according to the new style and the examiners all believe in the old style, the result is again zero in spelling for them all.

No sensible man will sanction such rank injustice as that.

Mr. GILLETT. I would like to ask the gentleman from Missouri if he does not have exactly that difficulty now with such words as "honor" and "candor," which are among the list of 300. They are spelled sometimes o-u-r and sometimes o-r. According to the theory of the gentleman, he would have the some difficulty to-day when a boy passed an examination. There are two standards, and you can not say that this one is right or that one is right; both are right. The 300 words are words of that kind which already have two classes of spelling, and that confusion exists now. This simplifies and recognizes one spelling instead of the other.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Common usage in this country has left the "u" out of the second syllable in all such words as "honor," "candor," etc.

Mr. GILLETT. They are spelled both ways by the standard dictionaries.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I know they are, but they are not spelled both ways by the bulk of the people, and the majority have as much right to determine the system of spelling as the system of government.

Mr. GILLETT. The boy would be right in spelling it either way.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I know he would.

Mr. GILLETT. And so he would with any of the 300 words.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The main thing to be said about this is that it produces confusion without doing any good. I say that inasmuch as the question was raised, the Committee on Appropriations did well to bring in this proviso and let us express our opinion about it. I am willing to go the whole hog on reformed or simplified spelling, but I am not willing to take 300 words out of 120,000 and pester ourselves and everybody else with this new-fangled orthography. At that rate we would require 400 years to make a new dictionary, and then some, for while we are correcting the 120,000 words we now have we would accumulate a few thousand new words which would need correcting.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LIVINGSTON] asked me to control the time in his absence. I now yield as much time as he wants to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MACON].

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, it is not my purpose to speak upon the subject of appropriations at this time, nor shall I speak but a short while upon any other subject; but, sir, there is one question that, in my judgment, concerns the farming interests of this country more than any other, and to that cause do I propose to address myself at this hour.

A good many years ago I happened to be a member of the legislature of the State of Arkansas, and while serving in that capacity I prepared and introduced a bill in that body to prevent the dealing in futures in agricultural products. The legislature saw fit to enact the measure into law, and the result was that bucket shops and agricultural gamblers and speculators were driven out of business in that State for the time being; but the interested parties were not willing to abide by the action of the legislature, and hence made a test case of the question in the courts of the State upon the ground that the law was unconstitutional in that it conflicted with that clause of the constitution which prohibited a legislative enactment in restraint of trade. The supreme court of the State, however, held that the law was not in conflict with the constitution, that it did not restrain legitimate trade in any sense of the word, and consequently every little bucket shop was driven from the State; but later the question was before the Supreme Court of the United States, and there it was held that a legislature of a State could not enact a law that would prevent a citizen of one State from having a future transaction with a citizen of another State upon the ground that it would be interfering with interstate transactions. In order, therefore, that the State law might become effective, it became necessary under the holding of the Supreme Court that Congress should pass a law preventing or prohibiting interstate transactions of that character. As soon as the Supreme Court holding was made known to me I resolved that if I was ever in a position to do so I would do everything in my power to have the Congress of the United States pass a law prohibiting interstate buying or selling or otherwise dealing in what is known as futures in so far as it affected agricultural products. So when I had the good fortune to become a member of this body I took the matter up, and I discovered that Senator BERRY, a distinguished Senator from my own State, had introduced a bill of similar character in the Senate and that it was then pending before that body. Considering his long service in the Senate entitled him to recognition upon the question as against myself, I did not introduce a bill upon the subject during the early days of my service here.

But it has been decreed that he must retire from legislative life on the 4th day of March next. Knowing that fact, I did not consider that the proprieties required that I longer wait upon his action in the matter, and hence I have prepared and introduced in this body, for the earnest consideration of its membership, the bill that I now send to the Clerk's desk to be read in my time and to be made a part of my remarks upon the subject under consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 20554) to prohibit interstate buying or selling or otherwise dealing in what is known as futures.

Be it enacted, etc., That interstate buying or selling or otherwise dealing in what is known as futures, either in cotton, meat, grain, or any other agricultural product whatsoever, is hereby declared to be unlawful.

SEC. 2. That whoever shall so engage in buying or selling or otherwise dealing in futures in the United States of America, either in cotton, meat, grain, or any other agricultural product, shall be guilty of a felony, and upon conviction shall be fined in any sum not less than $1,000 or imprisoned not less than one year, or both.

SEC. 3. That no letter, postal card, circular, newspaper, pamphlet, or writing or publication of any other kind containing money or any other representative of value or information of any character to be used in any manner connected with, concerning, or in furtherance of any project or transaction pertaining to the buying or selling or otherwise dealing in what is known as futures, either in cotton, meat, grain, or any other agricultural product, shall be carried in the mail or delivered at or through any post-office or branch thereof or by any letter carrier or other postal agent or authority. Whoever shall knowingly deposit or cause to be deposited, or who shall knowingly send or cause to be sent, anything to be conveyed or delivered in violation of this section, or who shall knowingly deliver or cause to be delivered by mail anything

SEC. 4. That all laws in conflict with this act be, and they are hereby, than $500 or by imprisonment for not less than six months, or both. demeanor, and upon conviction shall be punished by a fine of not less herein forbidden to be carried by mail, shall be deemed guilty of a misrepealed.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, it is known of all men that the farmers of the world sustain it and that they have done so since its foundation. Therefore, if any class of people on earth are entitled to recognition by way of legislative enactment, they are entitled to it. Civilization, prosperity, comfort, and happiness owe more to the farmers than to any other class of people on earth, for, as stated, they have sustained the earth from its creation. Without the fruits of the farmers' toil, lawyers, doctors, bankers, merchants, mechanics—nay, sir, every other class of citizens upon the face of the earth—must within about nine days after the farmers' products give out be sent to their grave by the pangs of starvation, or else become cannibals, feasting upon their fellows, or wild men living upon the herbs and berries of the forests. In addition to producing every morsel of food upon which man subsists the farmer produces every rag of apparel that shields his form from the freezing blasts of a winter's storm or the scorching rays of a summer's sun. Then, sir, if the farmers be the one class that feed and clothe the peoples of every character, I can see that it is the highest duty of the people's representatives to consider their cause first when they come to the enactment of law bearing upon any subject. But, sir, strange as it may seem, instead of considering the farmers' cause first, it is nearly always put aside to the last, and when the time does come to consider them the Congress is so busy in winding up its business that it can not find time to give any thought whatever to the farmer or his cause. The farmers of the country, recognizing the havoc that has been annually wrought to their cause by the dealing in futures in their products, have petitioned legislatures and Congresses from time to time to enact some law that would relieve them from the great evil that necessarily came of such gambling transactions. Last year the farmers of this country produced about 550,000,000 dollars worth of cotton, more than a billion dollars worth of corn, and nearly three-quarters of a billion dollars worth of wheat, and yet there were several hundred times as many bales of cotton, bushels of corn and wheat sold by the stock gamblers of the country as were raised. Sold in competition with the honest product, of the honest toil, of the honest farmer, and by reason of that nefarious practice prices were run up and down at the will of the speculator, so as to cause havoc with the honest price of the product from one day to another throughout the year. I have seen cotton fluctuate in price as much as $10 a bale within as many hours. There was no apparent reason for such a change in price other than the will of the gambling speculator. Such a practice is destructive of all honest value of the product and results in the enrichment of the speculator and the impoverishing of the men who produce it.

Mr. Chairman, aside from the great injury done the farmer by the bucket shops of the country, good citizens of every community have been wooed by them to a financial doom. These good citizens are told that some one invested a hundred dollars yesterday and made as much or more upon the investment, and hence they are encouraged to place their hard-earned coin upon the turn of the wheel of the speculator and are drawn into a whirlpool of ruin before they can extricate themselves from the great danger that always attends such investments. When they lose, as they nearly always do, they are then told by these captains of the bucket-shop industry that if they will try their fortune again they are sure they will come out all right and win back what they lost on the other transaction. Thus they are led on, step by step, until they become out-and-out gamblers themselves. To show to what extremes these speculators will go in order to lure the good citizenship of the country into their net, I will send a letter to the Clerk's desk to be read that I received from Mr. W. H. Avery, of Eldorado, Kans., and a letter that he inclosed me in the one just mentioned, written by J. K. Comstock & Co., of Chicago, to Mr. W. S. Avery, of Eldorado.

ELDORADO, KANS., December 6, 1906.

Hon. Mr. MACON, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I notice that you have introduced a bill to do away with "bucket shops." I inclose a letter from one of these concerns. Such letters are received about twice each month, and are usually sent to young men working on salary, and this man has in some instances gotten all their wages. I hope your bill will become a law at this session of Congress.

Very respectfully,

W. H. AVERY.

CHICAGO, December 3, 1906.

Mr. W. S. AVERY, Eldorado, Kans.

Wheat is cheap, and here is your opportunity. If market closes lower than 79 cents on Friday, so much the better for you and your purchase. If above 79 cents, it shows advance has started sooner than we expected. Everything is in your favor.

Don't delay. Send order by return mail so we can book it. If far away "wire it" at our expense and let funds follow by first mail. Orders mailed Friday, December 7, accepted. Six dollars and twenty-five cents buys five ups on 5,000 bushels for seven or fifteen days; $12.50 buys five ups on 5,000 bushels for seven and fifteen days.

Very truly, yours,

J. K. COMSTOCK & CO.

Mr. MACON. You will observe from the reading of Mr. Avery's letter that these gamblers are anxious to catch the young men of the country, and, from the reading of the Comstock letter, that they want to catch them quick. They are not willing for them to wait to send in their orders by letter for fear they will have time to think and decide not to engage in the nefarious practice; consequently they are called upon to "Wire it at our expense." Since introducing this bill I have received letters from each of the great subdivisions of the United States urging me to do all I could to have it passed at this session, but I will not take up the time of the House by having more of them read. I had the Avery and Comstock letters read for the purpose of showing that the people of the country are being filched of their hard earnings in every quarter of it by these speculators and the wily practices resorted to by the speculators to catch the innocent "nibbler." The Comstock letter represents that the concern deals in grain and provisions, and you would naturally suppose from the large letters on the letter head that they were legitimate dealers, but when you glance at the right-hand corner of the page you will find printed "Ups and downs a specialty," which would give the whole matter away to an experienced business man, but, as Mr. Avery says, these communications are nearly always sent to young men who are working on a salary, and they, being without experience, do not comprehend at a glance that they are dealing with speculating sharks, and hence are caught before they know it. Yes, sir, as Mr. Avery says, this concern sends out this character of letter to the young men of the country about twice a month, encouraging them to take stock in their hazardous business, and urging them to be quick about it, to write at once, and if far away to wire at their expense. Mr. Chairman, in order to catch an idea of the infamy of the business engaged in by Comstock & Co., it is only necessary to read the first part of their letter to Mr. Avery, which is as follows:

DEAR SIR: There is certainly going to be something "doing" in this wheat market, and it may be this coming week, and if you will only take a risk of $6.25 or $12.50 you stand an excellent chance of getting 5,000 or 10,000 bushels of wheat for this small amount of money.

Why, sir, any man of any sense at all ought to be able to see robbery stamped all over the face of that declaration. It means, simply, assuming wheat to be worth a dollar a bushel, that if one were to put up $6.25 and get 5,000 bushels of wheat in return therefor that some one must necessarily be robbed of $4,993.75 in order for him to get it.

Mr. Chairman, I can not conceive of a more reprehensible business than that of controlling the price of the products of the toiling masses of the country by speculative practices and at the same time debauching the young men of the country, teaching them the gambling habit, whereby they may rush in with their savings of a week or month, perhaps a year, and have them vanish on a simple turn of the speculative wheel instead of "a turn of the card."

Gentlemen, if the farmers who have been clamoring for this kind of legislation for years will only take the matter up in a plain, practical, business way with their Representatives in Congress, they will have this bill passed; but unless they unite upon the subject and organize and direct, nay, command, their Representatives here to vote for a measure of this character they will never get any relief from these "skin-game" speculators. They go on from bad to worse, enticing men of splendid character into this gambling practice, and in a sense debauching the morals of many of the best citizens of the community. How often is it in reading the press that you see where the cashier, or the assistant cashier, or the teller of this or that bank has become a defaulter in the sum of from $10,000, perhaps, to $500,000, all by reason of speculating in futures? Gentlemen, it is demoralizing to business in every way, and there is no one who can advocate it, from a moral or a business standpoint, except the speculator, who filches money from the pockets of the people who play at their game of hazard and ruin the farmer by controlling the price of the product of his toil. I want the farmers of this country to organize themselves and see to it that this or a measure similar to it is passed. I have no personal pride in passing this particular bill, and I am willing for it to pass under the name of any other member of this body. I simply want it passed, and I do not care whose name it bears. I want some measure passed that will give relief along the lines indicated by the measure. Sirs, a law prohibiting interstate transactions of this kind, supplemented by a legislative act preventing a citizen of a State from having similar transactions with citizens of the same State, would put an end to the whole business, and certainly the passage of this bill will stop these "luring" letters that are sent out by these gambling institutions twice a month, according to Mr. Avery, from going through the mails and enticing and inducing the young men of the country to "wire" their $6.25 in, if they have not time to write, so that the transaction can be made without delay or without fail.

Mr. GARRETT. May I ask the gentleman a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Arkansas yield?

Mr. MACON. Certainly.

Mr. GARRETT. Does not the gentleman think there might be some very proper and profitable legislation along the line of excluding from the mails letters of the character which the gentleman has had read?

Mr. MACON. This bill provides for that.

Mr. GARRETT. The bill provides that? I am not familiar with the bill.

Mr. MACON. Yes, sir; the bill provides that all matter, written or printed, which in any wise pertains to dealing in futures shall be excluded from the mail. There is nothing, in my judgment, that concerns the farmer so much just now as this very question. I believe it is of more importance to him than any other bill that is pending before Congress at this hour. I say that with a full knowledge of the fact that there are many important measures pending here that would be helpful to the farmers if enacted into law; but, sirs, I believe this is above all with them, because it deals with a practice that controls the price of their products absolutely. They have nothing to say about it at all. It makes the price fictitious all the time. They do not know, gentlemen, where they are at at any stage of the proceeding. Sirs, as I have indicated, a bale of cotton, well rounded, weighing 500 pounds, worth $50 to-day, ought to be worth $50 to-morrow, and would be worth $50 to-morrow but for this speculation in price, which, gentlemen, will run it down perhaps to where it is only worth $40 to-morrow. When the little fellows take hold of the bait and begin to nibble, the prices begin to fluctuate at once, and it is only a question of a short time when they will be safely landed in the speculator's basket, where they can flounder to the crack of doom without hope of relief. That kind of dealing makes a fictitious price, gentlemen, and is unjust in every conceivable sense, and should not be tolerated by the representatives of the American people when they know that the foundation of every institution rests upon the farmer as its corner stone. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, the reason this kind of legislation is ignored by Congress is because the farmer goes along in his everyday way, following the mule from daylight until dark, too busily engaged making an honest living to agitate questions, too busy to think whether he will wire his Representative about this or that species of legislation, too tired at night to write him a letter requesting him to interest himself in this or that kind of legislation, and hence he is neglected by his Congressman. But the stockbrokers in the city of New York, in Chicago, and in all of the other speculative centers are never tired; they are never too busy to look out for their interests. They, sirs, have their eyes open for such legislation as this all the time, and they can and will use the wire or the mail or any other instrumentality that can be brought to bear in order to prevent legislation of this sort. But if the farmers will organize themselves as they should, they can have their day of legislation; if they resolve that, "by the Eternal," a measure of this kind shall be passed, that they shall have relief, sirs, they can get it. All they will have to do will be to say to a candidate for Congress, "I will not vote for you for the nomination unless you pledge yourself to vote for a bill to prohibit dealing in futures." If he refuses to pledge himself, then they can nominate a candidate who will pledge himself to do it, and they can find some one in every community who will. Sirs, standing here as a Democrat, loving the principles of Democracy as I do, I want to say to you that if the farmers will consult their own interests they will not again vote for anyone for nomination or election to Congress who will not pledge himself to vote to kill the "future business." If that is party treason, make the most of it. The farmers must open their eyes to the facts as they are; they have got to wake up, and if they will do it they will accomplish something along legislative lines.

But, as I have said, they have been too busy, they have not had the time; but the time is coming when they will have it; and when they do wake up, when they do start, they will make just as good hands in the matter of controlling legislation as they made soldiers in the mighty conflict between the States of this Union; and no braver or better soldiers than they ever put foot upon a battlefield or rode a charger to his death. Therefore, gentlemen, I warn you now to give the matter some thought. Investigate, see for yourselves if you do not think that the farmers are being imposed upon by the speculators of this country; see if you think it is right that they shall make the farmers' cotton worth $40 one day and $50 the next, and vice versa; see whether you think the farmer or the speculator ought to control the price of the farmers' cotton, their corn, their meat, and wheat. The speculators are doing it now, three hundred and sixty-five days in the year. Will you, the people's representatives, allow them to continue to do so is the question that I submit to each and every one of you?

Mr. GARRETT rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MACON] yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT]?

Mr. MACON. Certainly.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman if he can state approximately the effect that these "future" prices have on "spots?" I believe that the real thing is called "spots."

Mr. MACON. The "real thing" is called "spots."

Mr. GARRETT. Now, has the gentleman kept a sufficiently careful tab on prices during any given season to be able to state approximately how much the price of "futures" affects the price of "spots?"

Mr. MACON. I do not know, sir; nor do I know that anyone else does. I have a letter in my office which indicates that there is a difference of about a cent and a half between the "futures" and the "spots."

Mr. GARRETT. And does the price of the "spots" follow in fluctuation pretty much the price of the "futures?"

Mr. MACON. Yes, sir; it does absolutely. Each morning these bucket shops get telegraphic communications from their brokers, saying that middling cotton is worth so much that morning. They will immediately send runners all over the town to persons that they think would like to buy or sell at the opening figure, and it is not long before the "suckers" show up. The merchants have fallen into line with them in a large measure, and when the news comes to the broker he communicates with them by a phone, or otherwise, and they immediately adopt the speculator's price for their price. And so it has gone on and on until it has gotten to where the speculator controls the price of cotton, wheat, corn, and meat every hour of every day of every year from one end of this country to the other.

Mr. GARRETT. Can the gentleman state whether it is the practice of cotton dealers, I mean reputable cotton dealers, in the real article at the time of purchasing cotton to also purchase some cotton "futures" for the purpose of protecting themselves on the market? Is that the practice?

Mr. MACON. I believe when they buy "spots" they are forced to sell "futures" against the purchase on account of the spectacular fluctuation of the market furnished them by the speculators.

Mr. GARRETT. Is it not true that the effect of future dealing is to force legitimate cotton dealers into that practice?

Mr. MACON. There is no doubt about that. If you could do away with this "rapid-fire" speculation that could be avoided, but so long as prices change $5 per bale in a few hours or in a day it will continue. We must do something to break up this practice that is plunging so many into crime and bankruptcy. These men are driven into the practice. It is hateful to them, and they would shout for joy to know that they were rid of it forever.

Mr. GARRETT. Now another question. Does the gentleman know a single instance in his observation where any individual in his section of the country has kept up this dealing in cotton futures for as much as three years, that that individual has not "gone broke," as they say, using a common expression?

Mr. MACON. I do not know of any.

Mr. GARRETT. They all eventually go to the wall.

Mr. MACON. In the very nature of things they will go to the wall if they keep it up.

Mr. WALLACE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MACON. Certainly.

Mr. WALLACE. You have alluded to bucket shops. Does your bill also cover cotton exchanges?

Mr. MACON. The bill covers everything that pertains to "dealing in futures." It seeks to prevent anybody from dealing in "futures" through an exchange, "bucket shop," or any other instrumentality of whatever name or character.

Mr. WALLACE. I thought that was your purpose, and therefore I asked the question.

Mr. GARRETT. I will ask the gentleman if he does not think it would be well to grant inquisitorial powers to the grand jury?

Mr. MACON. I think it would be well to require the district judge to make specific mention of the provision of the statute to the grand jury at every sitting of the court.

I have heard it said by gentlemen that it is necessary to have future transactions in order to establish markets, but that is not true. We have a tobacco market that is not established by "future" transactions. Tobacco stands on its own bottom. It is put in the hogshead and stored away in the warehouse, and buyers come and buy it according to the rule of supply and demand.

Mr. JAMES. I would state to the gentleman that tobacco is sold absolutely at the price fixed by the trust.

Mr. MACON. I suppose they can fix it; they usually do as they please, because we can not get the courts to prosecute them.

Mr. JAMES. Nobody is to be deceived by the idea that the price of tobacco is controlled by the law of supply and demand, because it is absolutely dictated by the trust; and in order to protect our part of the country from that, organizations have been made for the protection of the tobacco grower against the trust.

Mr. MACON. I am glad that is true. I think trusts ought to be organized against everywhere and prosecuted to the letter.

Mr. JAMES. The tobacco trust has monopolized the tobacco market absolutely, and denies the farmer the right to sell in an open market, but permits him only to sell in a monopolized market.

Mr. MACON. Well, of course, the trusts have things pretty much their own way, for the reason stated a moment ago. I was merely speaking of tobacco as an illustration. If its price was not controlled by the trust it would be established by the law of supply and demand, the very best market maker in the world. So would the price of cotton, meat, and grain be fixed by that God-given law but for "bucket shops."

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am through with the subject for this time. I have had more to say than I thought when I took the floor, but, sir, my sincere desire to do something for the farmer, who has done so much, and who is still doing so much for mankind, has controlled me in what I have said, and is the only excuse I have to offer for having detained the House as long as I have. Judging by the small amount of legislation that has been enacted by Congress in behalf of the farmer, I am constrained to think that his cause has consumed but a bagatelle of the time of this body for the past forty years. Seemingly we have had legislation for everybody and everything but the farmer in that time, and it strikes me that it is high time for Representatives to interest themselves in his cause.

Therefore, gentlemen, I am going to ask you to give this measure careful consideration. Get a copy of the bill and read it, consult your constituents about it, and see whether or not, in your honest judgment, the condition of the agricultural toilers of this country would not be bettered if a measure of this character should become a part of the law of our land. [Applause.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I now yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD].

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Chairman, the expenditures of the United States Government have reached an appalling figure, and they have become so voluminous and so complicated that it is a matter of impossibility for any individual Member here to vote intelligently upon any particular item. Take, for instance, a few items in the present bill, "two clerks of class 4, four clerks of class 3, six clerks of class 2, and twenty-five clerks of class 1, etc." What Member here is in position to know whether the number of clerks in the various classes is demanded by the actual necessities of the service, or whether the compensation defined in the bill is a just compensation? What member of the Appropriations Committee is able to give a satisfactory explanation of the necessity of the number of clerks in the different classes and the compensation provided?

The Manual of the House has provided certain committees whose duty it is to make a thorough investigation of the expenditures in each Department, and the particular rule providing for these committees reads as follows:

42. The examination of the accounts and expenditures of the several departments of the Government and the manner of keeping the same; the economy, justness, and correctness of such expenditures; their conformity with appropriation laws; the proper application of public moneys; the security of the Government against unjust and extravagant demands; retrenchment; the enforcement of the payment of moneys due to the United States; the economy and accountability of public officers; the abolishment of useless offices; the reduction or increase of the pay of officers, shall all be subjects within the jurisdiction of the nine standing committees on the public expenditures in the several Departments, as follows:

43. In the Department of State: To the Committee on Expenditures in the State Department.

And the enumeration continues until every Department is assigned to a committee of investigation.

Thus the rules provide committees the specific duty of which is to examine thoroughly every expenditure in every Department of the Government. And yet these committees never hold meetings, and I doubt whether 90 per cent of the members of these committees can tell you to-day where their committee room is located. And the chairmen of these committees are making use of the committee rooms. Whether they are using them for their own personal purposes or for public purposes other than those provided in the rule for these committees, I am not in position to say. But we have reached that amazing condition where the chairmen of these committees have monopolized the committee rooms, and Members themselves hardly feel at liberty to enter them. And I dare say that the same situation obtains with reference to many other committees than these committees on expenditures.

I make the assertion in good faith that it is doubtful if 90 per cent of the members of these various committees on expenditures in the different Departments could locate the committee rooms if they were asked to do so to-day. [Laughter.] This statement is applicable to every one of these committees except the Committee on Expenditures in the Agricultural Department. The chairman of that committee, Mr. LITTLEFIELD, of Maine, during the last session of Congress introduced a bill authorizing his committee to send for witnesses and papers and to institute an investigation of the expenditures in the Agricultural Department in line with the spirit of the Manual. The committee to which it was referred reported it favorably. The House adopted it, and an investigation of the Agricultural Department began. The result we have yet to learn.

The chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Commerce and Labor introduced a similar resolution; it was held up in the Committee on Rules, and no other chairman has made, so far as I know, any very great effort to revive these committees and give them the functions which they were originally designed to exercise under the intendment of the law.

I introduced myself bills reviving all of these committees except the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Commerce and Labor and the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Agriculture. These bills were referred to the Committee on Rules, and there they sleep to-day. The Committee on Rules has taken no step to give these committees the control and the authority for investigation which they should possess by favorably reporting such bills. These are some of the reasons that the expenditures of the Government are passing beyond the management and even the comprehension of the House. We are not making the investigation which we should make under the rule. We have allowed the committees whose duty it is to conduct such investigation to become absolutely inactive.

It is an illustration of the utter helplessness into which the House has fallen under the domination of the Speaker and the Committee on Rules. Once the Government was in reality a Government of three departments, the executive, the judicial, and the legislative, but the inactivity of these committees is one of the greatest illustrations of the humiliating condition which we occupy to-day before the country, the Speaker regarded as the House and the Members of the House as mere automatons registering his will. It was once a government of the legislative, executive, and judicial departments, but the delectable triumvirate which now dominates the Republic is composed of Theodore Roosevelt, JOSEPH G. CANNON, and the eternal devil. [Laughter and applause.]

A MEMBER. To what department of the Government does he belong? [Laughter.]

Mr. SHEPPARD. To all departments, under the present political dispensation; the invisible but most influential attendant at every Cabinet meeting.

Mr. WALLACE. Can the gentleman from Texas inform me whether the Committee on Improvement of the Levees of the Mississippi River has ever been revived?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Are you a member of that committee?

Mr. WALLACE. I was for two years, and there was never a called meeting of it, to the best of my recollection.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Did you know where the committee room was located?

Mr. WALLACE. I walked in front of the door once, but never darkened it. [Laughter.]

Mr. MACON. I will tell the gentleman that we brought that committee to life at the last session of Congress, and it recommended to the House and the House passed a bill from that committee.

Mr. WALLACE. I thank the gentleman for the information, and congratulate him and all who were interested in bringing it about.

Mr. BINGHAM. I will ask the gentleman in charge of the time on the other side [Mr. LIVINGSTON] if he has anyone else who desires to speak at the present time?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I have no other demand from my side of the House.

Mr. BINGHAM. There is no demand from that side of the House for time, but I understand there will be to-morrow; and I move that the committee do now rise.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, before that motion is declared carried, I ask leave to extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can do that in the House.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HEPBURN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 21574, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

REPRINT OF LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, being informed that copies of the House bill now under consideration are exhausted, together with the report, I ask unanimous consent for a reprint of the bill and report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent for a reprint of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill and the report thereon. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The message transmitting these ordinances contains the following:

The attention of Congress is invited to the statement of the Secretary of State that the transmission of these ordinances does not imply any request that they be printed.

Apparently they are not very bulky, and if there is no motion to the contrary, the message and the accompanying documents will be referred to the Committee on Insular Affairs, and be printed.

AFFAIRS IN PORTO RICO.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, on motion of Mr. FORAKER, was, with the accompanying papers and illustrations, referred to the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

On November twenty-first I visited the island of Porto Rico, landing at Ponce, crossing by the old Spanish road by Cayey to San Juan, and returning next morning over the new American road from Arecibo to Ponce; the scenery was wonderfully beautiful, especially among the mountains of the interior, which constitute a veritable tropic Switzerland. I could not embark at San Juan because the harbor has not been dredged out and can not receive an American battle ship. I do not think this fact creditable to us as a nation, and I earnestly hope that immediate provision will be made for dredging San Juan Harbor.

I doubt whether our people as a whole realize the beauty and fertility of Porto Rico and the progress that has been made under its admirable government. We have just cause for pride in the character of our representatives who have administered the tropic islands which came under our flag as a result of the war with Spain; and of no one of them is this more true than of Porto Rico. It would be impossible to wish a more faithful, a more efficient, and a more disinterested public service than that now being rendered in the island of Porto Rico by those in control of the insular government.

I stopped at a dozen towns all told, and one of the notable features in every town was the gathering of the school children. The work that has been done in Porto Rico for education has been noteworthy. The main emphasis, as is eminently wise and proper, has been put upon primary education; but in addition to this there is a normal school, an agricultural school, three industrial and three high schools. Every effort is being made to secure not only the benefits of elementary education to all the Porto Ricans of the next generation, but also as far as means will permit to train them so that the industrial, agricultural, and commercial opportunities of the island can be utilized to the best possible advantage. It was evident, at a glance, that the teachers, both Americans and native Porto Ricans, were devoted to their work, took the greatest pride in it, and were endeavoring to train their pupils not only in mind, but in what counts for far more than mind in citizenship—that is, in character.

I was very much struck by the excellent character both of the insular police and of the Porto Rican regiment. They are both of them bodies that reflect credit upon the American administration of the island. The insular police are under the local Porto Rican government. The Porto Rican regiment of troops must be appropriated for by the Congress. I earnestly hope that this body will be kept permanent. There should certainly be troops in the island, and it is wise that these troops should be themselves native Porto Ricans. It would be from every standpoint a mistake not to perpetuate this regiment.

In traversing the island even the most cursory survey leaves the beholder struck with the evident rapid growth in the culture both of the sugar cane and tobacco. The fruit industry is also growing. Last year was the most prosperous year that the island has ever known before or since the American occupation. The total of exports and imports of the island was forty-five millions of dollars, as against eighteen millions in 1901. This is the largest in the island's history. Prior to the American occupation the greatest trade for any one year was that of 1896, when it reached nearly 23 millions of dollars. Last year, therefore, there was double the trade that there was in the most prosperous year under the Spanish régime. There were 210,273 tons of sugar exported last year, of the value of $14,186,319.00, $3,555,163.00 of tobacco, and 28,290,322 pounds of coffee, of the value of $3,481,102.00. Unfortunately what used to be Porto Rico's prime crop, coffee, has not shared this prosperity. It has never recovered from the disaster of the hurricane, and, moreover, the benefit of throwing open our market to it has not compensated for the loss inflicted by the closing of the markets to it abroad. I call your attention to the accompanying memorial on this subject of the Board of Trade of San Juan, and I earnestly hope that some measure will be taken for the benefit of the excellent and high-grade Porto Rican coffee.

In addition to delegations from the Board of Trade and Chamber of Commerce of San Juan, I also received delegations from the Porto Rican Federation of Labor and from the Coffee Growers' Association.

There is a matter to which I wish to call your special attention, and that is the desirability of conferring full American citizenship upon the people of Porto Rico. I most earnestly hope that this will be done. I can not see how any harm can possibly result from it, and it seems to me a matter of right and justice to the people of Porto Rico. They are loyal, they are glad to be under our flag, they are making rapid progress along the path of orderly liberty. Surely we should show our appreciation of them, our pride in what they have done, and our pleasure in extending recognition for what has thus been done by granting them full American citizenship.

Under the wise administration of the present governor and council marked progress has been made in the difficult matter of granting to the people of the island the largest measure of self-government that can with safety be given at the present time. It would have been a very serious mistake to have gone any faster than we have already gone in this direction. The Porto Ricans have complete and absolute autonomy in all their municipal governments, the only power over them possessed by the insular government being that of removing corrupt or incompetent municipal officials. This power has never been exercised save on the clearest proof of corruption or of incompetence such as to jeopardize the interests of the people of the island; and under such circumstances it has been fearlessly used to the immense benefit of the people. It is not a power with which it would be safe, for the sake of the island itself, to dispense at present. The lower house is absolutely elective, while the upper house is appointive. This scheme is working well; no injustice of any kind results from it, and great benefit to the island, and it should certainly not be changed at this time. The machinery of the elections is administered entirely by the Porto Rican people themselves, the governor and council keeping only such supervision as is necessary in order to insure an orderly election. Any protest as to electoral frauds is settled in the courts. Here again it would not be safe to make any change in the present system. The elections this year were absolutely orderly, unaccompanied by any disturbance, and no protest has been made against the management of the elections, although three contests are threatened where the majorities were very small and error was claimed; the contests, of course, to be settled in the courts. In short, the governor and council are cooperating with all of the most enlightened and most patriotic of the people of Porto Rico in educating the citizens of the island in the principles of orderly liberty. They are providing a government based upon each citizen's self-respect and the mutual respect of all citizens; that is, based upon a rigid observance of the principles of justice and honesty. It has not been easy to instill into the minds of people unaccustomed to the exercise of freedom the two basic principles of our American system, the principle that the majority must rule and the principle that the minority has rights which must not be disregarded or trampled upon. Yet real progress has been made in having these principles accepted as elementary, as the foundations of successful self-government.

I transmit herewith the report of the governor of Porto Rico, sent to the President through the Secretary of State.

All the insular governments should be placed in one bureau, either in the Department of War or the Department of State. It is a mistake not so to arrange our handling of these islands at Washington as to be able to take advantage of the experience gained in one when dealing with the problems that from time to time arise in another.

In conclusion, let me express my admiration for the work done by the Congress when it enacted the law under which the island is now being administered. After seeing the island personally, and after five years' experience in connection with its administration, it is but fair to those who devised this law to say that it would be well-nigh impossible to have devised any other which in the actual working would have accomplished better results.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, December 11, 1906.

PURCHASE OF DEPARTMENT SUPPLIES.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Organization, Conduct, and Expenditures of the Executive Departments, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith for the consideration of the Congress the report to the President by the Committee on Department Methods relative to the purchase of Department supplies. I heartily approve the recommendations of the committee.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, December 11, 1906.

MESA VERDE NATIONAL PARK.

Mr. PATTERSON. At the last session the Senate passed the bill (S. 3245) creating the Mesa Verde National Park. The House passed a bill by the same title and for the same purpose, and that House bill was passed by the Senate. A motion was made and carried recalling the Senate bill from the House, and it has been returned, and there is a motion pending to reconsider the vote by which the Senate bill was passed. I ask that the motion to reconsider be now put.

Mr. ALDRICH. When did the bill pass?

Mr. PATTERSON. The bill was passed at the last session of Congress.

Mr. ALDRICH. And the motion is to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed at the last session of Congress?

Mr. PATTERSON. The bill passed the Senate and went to the House, but in the meantime a House bill, with the same title and for the same purpose, was passed, and that House bill was passed by the Senate. At the last session I made a motion to recall the Senate bill. It was adopted, and a motion was entered to reconsider the vote by which the Senate had passed the Senate bill, and the question on the motion to reconsider has never been taken.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the votes by which the bill was ordered to a third reading and passed will be reconsidered.

Mr. PATTERSON. I move that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

SENATOR FROM UTAH.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. President, I ask that Senate resolution 142 be now laid before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution indicated by the Senator from Michigan, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution reported by Mr. BURROWS from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, June 11, 1906, as follows:

Resolved, That REED SMOOT is not entitled to a seat as a Senator of the United States from the State of Utah.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. President, no duty devolving upon the Senate can be more important than that imposed by the fifth section of the first article of the Constitution of the United States, wherein it is provided (touching the Congress) that "Each House shall be the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own members."

The proper exercise of this power, coupled with that other provision of the Constitution which declares that "Each House may determine the rules of its proceedings, punish its members for disorderly behavior, and, with the concurrence of two-thirds, expel a member," is the only method by which the legitimacy and integrity of this body can be secured and maintained. Whenever, therefore, the right of a Senator to a seat in this Chamber is challenged for any cause, it is incumbent upon the Senate to make investigation and pass judgment upon the issue so raised. No other tribunal is clothed with jurisdiction to try and determine such a controversy.

When the credentials of the Hon. REED SMOOT were laid before the Senate, certifying to his election as a Senator from the State of Utah for the term of six years from the 4th of March, 1903, there was at the same time presented to the Senate a protest against his being, in the language of the remonstrance, "permitted to qualify by taking the oath of office or to sit as a member of the United States Senate."

THE PROTEST.

Subsequently, and on the 5th of March, 1903, conforming to the established practice of the Senate to accord to the holder of a duly authenticated certificate of election the prima facie right to admission, the oath of office was administered to Mr. SMOOT and he was admitted to the membership of this body as a Senator from the State of Utah. On the same day the protest against his admission was, by order of the Senate, referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. The grounds of such protest are summarized in its preamble as follows:

We protest that Apostle REED SMOOT ought not to be permitted to qualify or take the oath of office or to sit as a member of the United States Senate for reasons affecting the honor and dignity of the United States and their Senators in Congress, and upon the grounds and for the reason that he is one of a self-perpetuating body of fifteen men, who, constituting the ruling authorities of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints, or Mormon Church, claim, and by their followers are accorded the right to claim, supreme authority, divinely sanctioned, to shape the belief and control the conduct of those under them in all matters whatsoever, civil and religious, temporal and spiritual, and who, thus uniting in themselves authority in church and state, do so exercise the same as to inculcate and encourage a belief in polygamy and polygamous cohabitation; who countenance and connive at violations of the laws of the state prohibiting the same, regardless of pledges made for the purpose of obtaining statehood, and of covenants made with the people of the United States, and who, by all means in their power, protect and honor those who in themselves violate the laws of the land and are guilty of practices destructive of the family and the home.

In a further protest, presented to the Senate and referred to the committee, it is charged that—

The oath of office required of and taken by the said REED SMOOT as an apostle of the said church is of such a nature and character as that he is thereby disqualified from taking the oath of office required of a United States Senator.

Later, and on the 27th of January, 1904, the Senate, by resolution, authorized and directed the Committee on Privileges and Elections—

To investigate the right and title of REED SMOOT to a seat in the Senate as a Senator from the State of Utah.

In the execution of this order the Committee on Privileges and Elections proceeded to make inquiry into the various allegations contained in the protests, and generally to comply with the mandate of the Senate—

To investigate the right and title of REED SMOOT to a seat in the Senate as a Senator from the State of Utah.

In the performance of this duty protracted hearings were had, at which more than a hundred witnesses were examined, and the testimony, covering over 3,000 pages of printed matter, has been submitted to the Senate.

Of course it is impossible in the discussion to review in detail before the Senate this great mass of evidence, but the report of the committee sets forth the substance thereof bearing upon the vital issues involved. I shall attempt no more, therefore, than to touch upon the salient points in the case and the evidence relating thereto.

Let me say at the outset, touching the charge that the Senator from Utah is a polygamist, and for that reason disqualified from holding a seat in this body, no evidence was submitted to the committee in support of such allegation, and, so far as the investigation discloses, the Senator stands acquitted of that charge. This relieves the inquiry of its personal character, always distressing, and the Senator stands before the Senate in personal character and bearing above criticism and beyond reproach, and if found disqualified for membership in this body it must be upon other grounds and from other considerations. I propose, therefore, to state as briefly as possible the reasons which impel the majority of the committee to the conclusion reached in their report.

HISTORY OF THE MORMON CHURCH.

In passing upon the issue involved it is important, indeed absolutely essential, to an intelligent application of the evidence elicited and the law applicable thereto to recall and hold in mind the accredited facts of history in connection with the organization and development of the Mormon Church, especially that community known as the "Utah Mormons" or "Brighamites," with headquarters at Salt Lake City, presided over by one Joseph F. Smith, recognized and acknowledged by his devotees as "president, prophet, seer, and revelator," and with which organization Senator SMOOT is publicly identified as one of the so-called "apostles," and who, by virtue of his ecclesiastical office therein, occupies a conspicuous place in this Mormon hierarchy.

The regular and legitimate Mormon Church had its origin in and grew out of an alleged discovery of some metallic plates, said to have been found near Palmyra, N. Y., by one Joseph Smith, bearing certain inscriptions which were said to have been translated by him and embodied in what is known and accepted as the "Book of Mormon," belief in which formed, in 1830, the basis of an organization styling itself "The Church of Latter-Day Saints," which for fifteen years increased in membership and extended its influence, until in 1844 it numbered about 50,000 adherents. On the 27th day of June, 1844, Joseph Smith, the founder of this cult, while confined in jail at Carthage, Ill., was set upon by a mob and killed.

With the details of the early history of this people, from 1830 to 1844, and their tenets we have nothing to do. It is sufficient for the purpose of this discussion to state that previous to the death of the prophet there were no dissensions in the organization so far as known, all subscribing to a common creed and holding a common faith. Judge Phillips, in the circuit court of the United States for the western district of Missouri, in delivering the opinion of that court in 1894 in what is known as the "Temple Lot Cases," involving the title to certain real estate, said:

Beyond all cavil, if human testimony is to place any matter at rest, this church was one in doctrine, government, and purpose from 1830 to June, 1844, when Joseph Smith, its founder, was killed. It had the same federal head, governing bodies, and faith. During this period there was no schism, no dissensions, no parting of the ways in any matter fundamental or affecting its oneness.

THE REORGANIZED CHURCH.

The death of Joseph Smith in 1844, however, carried dismay and demoralization throughout the entire membership of the Mormon Church, scattering its adherents in divers directions and for the time being seemed to presage the complete overthrow and dissolution of the organization. Recovering, however, from the shock, the scattered bands soon reappeared in various parts of the country and promulgated their doctrines with increased zeal, and set to work to reassemble and reorganize their scattered forces, resulting finally in the formation of what is now known and recognized as the "Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints," with headquarters at Lamoni, Iowa, and presided over by Joseph Smith, a son of the prophet. The courts have repeatedly declared this organization to be the legitimate successor of the original Mormon Church, and its adherents, numbering some 50,000 peaceable, patriotic, and law-abiding citizens scattered throughout the United States in small church societies, conforming to the laws of their country wherever they may be and adhering to the faith of the founder of their creed, repudiating and denouncing the doctrine of polygamy and its attendant crimes, without temple, endowment house, or secret order, worship in the open like other church organizations, unquestioned and unmolested.

BRIGHAM YOUNG'S USURPATION.

During this period of disintegration one Brigham Young, who had identified himself with the Mormon organization as early as 1832, a man of indomitable will and undaunted courage, bold and unscrupulous, seized upon the occasion of the demoralization incident to the death of the prophet to place himself at the head of some 5,000 Mormons, and marching over desert and mountain, established himself with his adherents in the valley of Salt Lake, July 24, 1847, then Mexican territory, where he undoubtedly indulged the hope that the new doctrine of polygamy about to be publicly proclaimed by him might be promulgated with impunity and practiced and maintained without interference by the United States. These hopes, however, were destined to be blasted, for by the treaty of Guadalupe-Hidalgo of February 2, 1848, this territory passed from the jurisdiction of Mexico to the sovereignty of the United States, and its inhabitants thereupon became amenable to its laws.

Upon this transfer of sovereignty, and in 1849, Brigham Young and his followers, without authority from any source whatever, proceeded to set up a government of their own, embracing a territory of imperial dimensions, christening it the "State of Deseret," electing Brigham Young, the head of the church, governor; Heber C. Kimball, an apostle, lieutenant-governor, and filling all other official positions in the proposed State with their trusted adherents. At the same time a general assembly was chosen, which in 1849 petitioned Congress to admit the "State of Deseret" into the Union, and commissioned a Delegate to the Lower House of Congress, who subsequently presented his credentials and the memorial praying for statehood.

EARLY ATTEMPT TO OBTAIN STATEHOOD.

Shortly previous to this time it began to be bruited that the leaders of this organization and founders of the new State were fugitives from justice and apostates from the true Mormon faith and were living in polygamy; and it is an historic fact that when Brigham Young arrived in Salt Lake, in 1847, he had seventeen wives, and all the so-called apostles, twelve in number, except possibly one, from two to twenty wives each. This rumor gained credence and confirmation by a protest against the admission of the State of Deseret sent to the Congress of the United States December 31, 1849, and now on file in its archives, from which I make the following extracts:

Your petitioners respectfully represent that whereas efforts are now being made by the Salt Lake Mormons to obtain, by false representations and fallacious presentations, from the Government of the United States a State organization to be called the State of Deseret; and whereas we believe that it would be highly detrimental to the best interests of our country to comply with their request, we do therefore respectfully petition your honorable body to provide some other way for the government of the Salt Lake settlement. Your petitioners know most assuredly that Salt Lake Mormonism is diametrically in opposition to the pure principles of virtue, liberty, and equality, and that the rulers of the Salt Lake church are bitter and inveterate enemies of our Government. They entertain treasonable designs against the liberties of American freeborn sons and daughters. * * * They have elected Brigham Young, who is the president of their church, to be the governor of the proposed State of Deseret. Their intention is to unite church and state. * * * We have authentic information that more than 1,500 Salt Lake Mormons took the following oath in the Temple of God at Nauvoo:

"You do solemnly swear, in the presence of Almighty God, His holy angels, and these witnesses, that you will avenge the blood of Joseph Smith on this nation, and teach your children, and that you will from this time henceforth and forever begin and carry out hostilities against this nation, and to keep the same intent a profound secret now and forever. So help me God."

The rulers of the Salt Lake church hypocritically pretend to venerate the name and character of the prophet Joseph Smith, that they may retain their popularity among that people who believe that he was a true prophet. These rulers are apostates from the true Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints, which church Joseph Smith was president of. They teach and practice polygamy. * * * Surely your honorable body will not lend your aid to legalize adultery and all manner of wickedness. These men have left their country for their country's good. They have left it that they might escape the punishment which their crimes have invoked. * * * They have been guilty of murders, treason, robbery, counterfeiting, swindling, blasphemy, and usurpation of power, both political and ecclesiastical. This is the character of the man who is the political and ecclesiastical governor of the Salt Lake colony. The Salt Lake settlement is like Sodom and Gomorrah. Save the rising generation of that land from being trained up in such a sink of corruption, blasphemy, and treason.

The practice of polygamy by this band of apostate Mormons received further confirmation in the official report of the Indian agent for the Territory of Utah, dated March 29, 1852, in which it was stated:

Among these men (speaking of the Mormons) was Willard Richards, who kept a harem of some dozen or fifteen women, to all of whom he is wedded. He is acting secretary of state and postmaster of the city.

Upon the presentation of the remonstrance referred to, the National House of Representatives declined to consider the petition for the admission of the "State of Deseret" into the Union, or receive its representative, but in lieu thereof and on the 7th day of September, 1850, Congress passed an act providing for the organization and government of the Territory of Utah. In 1850 President Fillmore appointed Brigham Young governor of the Territory for the term of four years, who entered upon the duties of the office in February, 1851, and thus the chief polygamous saint and head of the church became the chief executive of the Territory. These public and official declarations confirmatory of the rumors of the practice of polygamy by Brigham Young and his apostles made further concealment of their crime impossible, and it became necessary in some way to excuse or justify so flagrant an assault upon public decency and the civilization of the age.

THE POLYGAMIC REVELATION.

To that end a special conference of the sect was called to convene at Salt Lake City on the 28th day of August, 1852, over which Brigham Young presided, attended by the so-called apostles and high officials of the church to the number of over 2,000, at which conference, for the first time, the doctrine of polygamy was publicly proclaimed and declared to be an accepted tenet of the Utah Mormon faith. Preliminary to its formal promulgation, and to promote its reception by the followers of Brigham Young, it was deemed expedient that some of the high dignitaries who were associated with him should bear testimony to the saintly character of their master and the divine origin of the nefarious doctrine. To this end Heber C. Kimball, one of the first presidency and a polygamist, in calling the meeting to order, took occasion to say:

Brother Brigham Young is the successor of Joseph Smith and a better man never lived upon the earth, nor ever sought the interest of this people more fervently.

Elder Benson, another polygamist, joined in the laudation by saying:

I know that the principles that have been taught by the Prophet Joseph and Brothers Brigham, Heber, and Willard—and by every other good man in this church are correct principles, and that these men have been borne on triumphantly over every trial and difficulty they have been called to pass through. The elders, therefore, can go to the nations with their consciences as clean as drifting snow, and with the satisfaction that all is right in Zion and we are led by the best men upon the face of the earth. I am glad in my heart, and I say, God bless Brigham, Heber, and Willard. They are the counsel of heaven to this people, and I mean to honor them in the earth wherever I go, and I would preach down in the bowels of hell the same as I do here and not be ashamed of it.

Composing the first presidency—

Pandemonium would be a fit place for its promulgation.

My story all the time is, Hurrah for Mormonism. * * * I only throw out these few hints that you may be prepared to act when you receive the proper instructions from your president.

Then came Orson Pratt, one of the oldest and most famous of the apostles and the husband of three wives, who public declared:

It is quite unexpected to me to be called upon to address you on the subject of the plurality of wives. It is rather new ground to the inhabitants of the United States, and not only to them, but a portion of the inhabitants of Europe. A portion of them have not been in the habit of preaching a doctrine of this description; consequently we will have to break up new ground. It is well known, however, to the congregation before me that the Latter-Day Saints have embraced the doctrine of the plurality of wives as a part of their religious faith.

In order to induce his followers more readily to accept this infamous doctrine, Brigham Young himself invoked the name of Joseph Smith, the martyr, whom many sincerely believed to be a true prophet, and ascribed to him the reception of a revelation from the Almighty in 1843, commanding the saints to take unto themselves a multiplicity of wives, limited in number only by the measures of their desires. Why and how this revelation had been kept a secret for nine years Brigham Young explained as follows:

You heard Brother Pratt state this morning that a revelation would be read this afternoon which was given previous to Joseph's death. It contains a doctrine which a small portion of the world is opposed to. Though that doctrine has not been preached by the elders, this people have believed in it for many years.

The original copy of this revelation was burnt up; William Clayton was the man who wrote it from the mouth of the prophet. In the meantime it was in Bishop Whitney's possession. He wished the privilege to copy it, which Brother Joseph granted. Sister Emma burnt the original.

The revelation will be read to you. The principle we believe in. And I tell you—for I know it—it will sail over and ride triumphantly above all the prejudice and priestcraft of the day; it will be fostered and believed in by the more intelligent portions of the world as one of the best doctrines ever proclaimed to any people. I am now ready to proclaim it.

This revelation has been in my possession many years; and who has known it? None but those who should know it. I keep a patent lock on my desk, and there does not anything leak out that should not.

Such the mythical story palmed off on a deluded people. Let me now quote the material part of the pretended revelation of polygamy as given out by authority of Brigham Young in 1852:

Verily, thus saith the Lord unto his servant Joseph: * * * behold and lo, I am the Lord thy God * * * therefore prepare thy heart to receive and obey the instructions which I am about to give unto you, for all those who have this law revealed unto them must obey the same, for behold, I reveal unto you a new and everlasting covenant, and if ye abide not that covenant, then are ye damned; for no one can reject this covenant and be permitted to enter into my glory; * * * and as pertaining to the new and everlasting covenant, it was instituted for the fullness of my glory, and he that receiveth a fullness thereof must and shall abide the law or he shall be damned, saith the Lord God. And again, as pertaining to the law of the priesthood, if any man espouse a virgin and desire to espouse another, and the first give her consent, and if he espouse the second, and they are virgins and have vowed to no other man, then is he justified. He can not commit adultery, for they are given unto him, for he can not commit adultery with that that belongeth to him and to none else; and if he have ten virgins given unto him by this law he can not commit adultery, for they belong unto him and are given unto him; therefore is he justified.

Thus did Brigham Young and his associates attempt to explain and justify a practice revolting to every sense of public decency, subversive of the home, and destructive of the very foundations of society. Thus were laid with unholy hands what Brigham Young was pleased to call the foundations of "Zion," upon which it was proposed to erect "the kingdom of God on earth." But a doctrine so monstrous needed something more than the unsupported testimony of Brigham Young to insure its reception and give it credence, in view of the fact that it had no warrant in the Book of Mormon and was specially condemned in the book of "Doctrines and Covenants," wherein it is declared "One man should have one wife, and one woman but one husband." To give this creed the semblance of authority and insure its permanency as an article of this Utah Mormon faith the doctrine of monogamy was torn from the book of "Doctrines and Covenants," and the doctrine of polygamy inserted in its stead, where it is still retained as a cardinal principle of the Utah Mormon faith. In this way was the practice of polygamy inaugurated in the Territory of Utah and fostered and encouraged by the leaders of this sect.

DOMINATION BY HIERARCHY.

The subsequent history of this community is too familiar to justify extended review. From the hour they took possession of the territory in 1847 the domination of this Mormon hierarchy in civil as well as so-called "religious" affairs has been absolute and supreme, and there was then inaugurated and carried on for over forty years a carnival of crime in this Territory unexampled in the history of a civilized state. The armies of the United States were forbidden to come within its borders; Federal judges and other Government officials were driven from the Territory; the statutes of the United States spurned and trampled on; the ministers of the law insulted and defied; lawlessness ran riot and there was no authority in the Territory respected or enforced but that of the Mormon hierarchy. The conditions at this time can not be more accurately or graphically described than in the report of the chief justice and the associate justice of the supreme court of the Territory, who, unable to discharge their functions, were compelled to fly from the Territory, stating in their report to the President of the United States, December 19, 1851:

It becomes our duty as officers of the United States for the Territory of Utah to inform the President that we have been compelled to withdraw from the Territory and our official duties in consequence of an extraordinary state of affairs existing there which rendered the performance of those duties not only dangerous, but impracticable, and a longer residence in the Territory, in our judgment, incompatible with a proper sense of self-respect and the high regard due to the United States. We have been driven to this course by the lawless acts and the hostile and seditious feelings and sentiments of Brigham Young, the executive of the Territory, and the great body of the residents there, manifested toward the Government and officers of the United States in aspersions and denunciations so violent and offensive as to set at defiance not only a just administration of the laws, but the rights and feelings of citizens and officers of the United States residing there. To enable the Government to understand more fully the unfortunate condition of affairs in that Territory, it will be necessary to explain the extraordinary religious organization existing there, its unlimited pretensions, influence, and power, and to enter into a disagreeable detail of facts, and the language and sentiments of the governor and others high in authority toward the Government, people, and officers of the United States.

We found upon our arrival that almost the entire population consisted of a people called "Mormons," and the Mormon Church overshadowing and controlling the opinions, the actions, the property, and even the lives of its members; usurping and exercising the functions of legislation and the judicial business of the Territory; organizing and commanding the military; disposing of the public lands upon its own terms; coining money and forcing its circulation; openly sanctioning and defending the practice of polygamy or plurality of wives; exacting the tenth part of everything from its members under the name of tithing, and enormous taxes from citizens not members; penetrating and supervising the social and business circles and inculcating and requiring as an article of religious faith implicit obedience to the counsels of the church as paramount to all the obligations of morality, society, allegiance, and of law. At the head of this formidable organization stood Brigham Young, the governor, claiming and represented to be the prophet of God, and his sayings as direct revelation from heaven, commanding thereby unlimited sway over the ignorant and credulous.

The report then recites a long catalogue of declarations of hostility to the General Government by Brigham Young, from which I take the following:

Zachary Taylor is dead and in hell, and I am glad of it. And I prophesy by the power of the priesthood that is upon me that any President of the United States who lifts his finger against this people shall die an untimely death and go to hell. * * * The United States officers may remain in the Territory so long as they behave themselves and pay their board, but if they do not they would kick them to hell, where they belong. * * * That he had ruled that people for years and could rule them again, and he would kick any man out of the Territory who would dictate to or advise him of his duty.

A professor of the University of Deseret declared:

The Government of the United States is a stink in the nostrils of Jehovah. * * * We can save it by theocracy, but rather than save it by any other way, we will see it damned first.

The report concludes:

The governor has been accustomed to enter the legislative hall under the provisional State government and dictate what laws should and should not be passed, and enter the court and jury rooms and dictate what verdict should be rendered, and he has given us ample evidence that he was equally omnipotent and influential with the Mormon people under the Territorial government.

It is impossible for any officer to perform his duty or execute any law not in sympathy with their views as the Territory is at present organized. * * * No man dare open his mouth in opposition to their lawless exactions without feeling its effects upon his liberty, his business, or his life. And thus, upon the soil of the United States, and under the broad folds of its Stars and Stripes, which protect him in his rights in every part of the civilized world, there is a spot where the citizen is browbeaten and despoiled of his liberties as a free man by a religious despotism.

We deem it our duty to state, in this official communication, that polygamy, or plurality of wives, is openly avowed and practiced in the Territory, under the sanction and in obedience to the direct commands of the church. So universal is this practice that very few, if any, leading men in that community can be found who have not more than one wife each. The prominent men in the church, whose example in all things it is the ambition of the more humble to imitate, have each many wives—some of them, we were credibly informed and believe, as many as twenty or thirty, and Brigham Young, the governor, even a greater number. It is not uncommon to find two or more sisters married to the same man, and in one instance, at least, a mother and her two daughters are among the wives of a leading member of the church. This practice, regarded and punished as a high and revolting crime in all civilized countries, would, of course, never be made a statutory offense by a Mormon legislature; and if a crime at common law, the courts would be powerless to correct the evil with Mormon juries.

Such was the deplorable condition of affairs in the Territory of Utah in 1851.

HOSTILITY TO THE UNITED STATES.

When, in 1857, the President of the United States determined upon the removal of Brigham Young from the office of governor of the Territory, the newly appointed executive deemed it prudent to proceed to his post of duty with a military escort, whereupon Brigham Young declared that the newly appointed governor should not administer the office, and it became necessary to increase the military force and place it under the command of Col. Albert Sidney Johnston. The then Secretary of War, Mr. Floyd, in his annual report dated December 5, 1857, set forth the condition of affairs in this Territory as follows:

From the first hour they fixed themselves in that remote and almost inaccessible region of our territory, from which they are now sending defiance to the sovereign power, their whole plan has been to prepare for a successful secession from the authority of the United States and a permanent establishment of their own.

President Buchanan, in his message to Congress of December 8, 1857, explanatory of his official acts in connection with the government of Utah, said:

As Chief Magistrate I was bound to restore the supremacy of the Constitution and laws within its limits. In order to effect this purpose I appointed a new governor and other Federal officers for Utah, and sent with them a military force for their protection and to aid as a posse comitatus in case of need in the execution of the laws. * * * Whilst Governor Young has been both governor and superintendent of Indian affairs * * * he has been at the same time head of the church called the "Latter-Day Saints," and professes to govern its members and dispose of their property by direct inspiration and authority from the Almighty. His power has been therefore absolute over the church and state. * * * All the officers of the United States, judicial and executive, with the exception of two Indian agents, have found it necessary for their personal safety to withdraw from the Territory, as there no longer remains any government in Utah but the despotism of Brigham Young.

Thus did it come to pass that after ten years of the domination of the Mormon hierarchy in Utah the President of the United States was constrained to make the startling announcement in his annual message to Congress that there no longer remained any government in the Territory of Utah but the "despotism of Brigham Young." He ruled supreme. Pretending to be the vicegerent of the Almighty, he defied the Government of the United States and played upon the passions, prejudices, and fears of the people until he held complete mastery over the lives and fortunes of his deluded followers.

LEGISLATION AGAINST POLYGAMY.

This declaration of President Buchanan in 1857 aroused the Congress and the country to the necessity of taking some steps to suppress this crime and relieve the people of Utah from the domination of so despotic a power. To this end numerous measures were promptly introduced in both Houses of Congress looking to the accomplishment of such purpose, but not until 1862 was an act passed defining the crime of bigamy and punishing persons adjudged guilty of such offense in any of the Territories of the United States by a fine not exceeding $500 or by imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years, and at the same time annulling all acts and laws of the legislative assembly of the Territory of Utah "which establish, support, maintain, shield, or countenance the practice of polygamy, evasively called 'spiritual marriage,' however disguised by legal or ecclesiastical solemnities, sacraments, ceremonies, or other contrivances;" and, further, annulling the ordinance incorporating the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints, and making it unlawful for any corporation or association for religious or charitable purposes to acquire or hold real estate in any Territory of the United States of a greater value than $50,000, forfeiting and escheating to the United States all holdings by such corporation in excess of such value. This comprehensive measure remained, however, for many years a dead letter. The great issues of the civil war and the problems growing out of that conflict overshadowed and obscured for the time being all other questions of domestic concern, and for twenty years the act of 1862 was disregarded and defied, while the hierarchy continued its unrestrained debauchment and despotic sway. No sooner, however, had the storm of war passed and the calm of peace returned than the attention of Congress and the country was again directed by several Presidents of the United States to the continued existence of the criminal practices in the Territory of Utah.

President Grant, in his third annual message, submitted to Congress December 4, 1871, said:

In Utah there still remains a remnant of barbarism, repugnant to civilization, to decency, and to the laws of the United States. Neither polygamy nor any other violation of existing statutes will be permitted within the territory of the United States. It is not with the religion of the self-styled saints that we are now dealing, but with their practices. They will be protected in their worship of God according to the dictates of their consciences, but they will not be permitted to violate the laws under the cloak of religion.

In his fourth annual message, of December 2, 1872, in referring to the Territories, he said:

In but one of them (Utah) is the condition of affairs unsatisfactory. * * * It has seemed to be the policy of the legislature of Utah to evade all responsibility to the Government of the United States, and even to hold a position in hostility to it. I recommend a careful revision of the present laws of the Territory by Congress and the enactment of such a law as will secure peace, the equality of all citizens before the law, and the ultimate extinguishment of polygamy.

And again, in his seventh annual message, December 8, 1875, President Grant said:

In nearly every annual message that I have had the honor of transmitting to Congress I have called attention to the anomalous, not to say scandalous, condition of affairs existing in the Territory of Utah, and have asked for definite legislation to correct it. That polygamy should exist in a free, enlightened, and Christian country without the power to punish so flagrant a crime against decency and morality seems preposterous. True, there is no law to sustain this unnatural vice, but what is needed is a law to punish it as a crime. * * * But as an institution polygamy should be banished from the land.

President Hayes, in his fourth annual message, December 6, 1880, said:

It is the recognized duty and purpose of the people of the United States to suppress polygamy where it now exists in our Territories and to prevent its extension. The longer action is delayed the more difficult it will be to accomplish what is desired. Prompt and decided measures are necessary. The Mormon sectarian organization, which upholds polygamy, has the whole power of making and executing the local legislation of the Territory. By its control of the grand and petit juries it possesses large influence over the administration of justice. Exercising, as the heads of this sect do, the local political power of the Territory, they are able to make effective their hostility to the law of Congress on the subject of polygamy and, in fact, to prevent its enforcement. Polygamy will not be abolished if the enforcement of the law depends on those who practice and uphold the crime. It can only be suppressed by taking away the political power of the sect which encourages and sustains it.

The power of Congress to enact suitable laws to protect the Territories is ample. It is not a case for halfway measures. The political power of the Mormon sect is increasing. It controls now one of our wealthiest and most populous Territories. It is extending steadily into other Territories. Wherever it goes it establishes polygamy and sectarian power. The sanctity of marriage and the family relation are the corner stone of our American society and civilization. Religious liberty and separation of church and state are among the elementary ideas of free institutions. To reestablish the interests and principles which polygamy and Mormonism have imperiled and to fully reopen to intelligent and virtuous immigrants of all creeds that part of our domain which has been in a great degree closed to general immigration by intolerant and immoral institutions, it is recommended that the Territory of Utah be reorganized.

President Garfield, in his inaugural address, March 4, 1881, said:

The Mormon Church not only offends the moral sense of mankind by sanctioning polygamy, but prevents the administration of justice through ordinary instrumentalities of law.

He expressed the opinion that Congress should prohibit polygamy, and not allow—any ecclesiastical organization to usurp in the smallest degree the functions and power of the National Government.

In 1881, President Arthur, in his annual message to Congress, called attention to the continued practice of polygamy in the Territory of Utah in the following language:

For many years the Executive, in his annual message to Congress, has urged the necessity of stringent legislation for the suppression of polygamy in the Territories, and especially in the Territory of Utah. The existing statute for the punishment of this odious crime, so revolting to Christendom, has been persistently and contemptuously violated ever since its enactment. Indeed, in spite of the commendable efforts on the part of the authorities who represent the United States in that Territory, the law has in very rare instances been enforced and, for a cause to which reference will presently be made, is practically a dead letter. The fact that adherents of the Mormon Church, which rests upon polygamy as its corner stone, have recently been settling in large numbers in Idaho, Arizona, and other of the Western Territories, is well calculated to excite the greatest interest and apprehension. It imposes upon Congress and the Executive the duty of arraying against this barbarous system all the power which under the Constitution and the laws they can wield for its destruction.

Following this suggestion of President Arthur, Senator Edmunds introduced a bill to amend the act of July 1, 1862, which was passed by Congress and approved March 22, 1882. This act, known as the "Edmunds law," was the most drastic yet proposed, and struck a deadly blow at the very root of the evil. It made bigamy, polygamy, and polygamous cohabitation crimes punishable by fine and imprisonment; it excluded from the jury box on the trial of any person charged with the violation of such act every person who had been, or was then, living in violation of this statute, or who believed in the rightfulness of the acts prohibited; it disfranchised all persons who were guilty of violating the provisions of such enactment, and rendered them ineligible for election or appointment to any office and disqualified them from holding any place of public trust, honor, or emolument in such Territory or under the United States; it vacated all the registration offices in the Territory of Utah, and imposed upon a commission of five persons appointed by the President of the United States and confirmed by the Senate all the duties relating to the registration of voters, the conduct of elections, and the canvass and declaration of the result. In other words, it practically took into its own hands, through its own official instrumentalities, the entire administration of the affairs of that Territory. Upon the passage of this act, instead of conforming to its provisions and yielding obedience to its mandates, the Utah hierarchy made open war against it, and under date of October 6, 1885, issued the following pronunciamento:

An epistle from the first presidency to the officers and members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints.

The war is openly and undisguisedly made upon our religion. * * * We did not reveal celestial marriage. We can not withdraw or renounce it. God revealed it, and he has promised to maintain it and to bless those who obey it. Whatever fate then may threaten us there is but one course for men of God to take—that is, to keep inviolate the holy covenants they have made in the presence of God and angels. For the remainder, whether it be life or death, freedom or imprisonment, prosperity or adversity, we must trust in God. We may say, however, if any man or woman expects to enter into the celestial kingdom of our God without making sacrifices and without being tested to the very uttermost, they have not understood the gospel. * * * Upward of forty years ago the Lord revealed to his church the principle of celestial marriage. * * * "For, behold, I reveal unto you a new and everlasting covenant; and if ye abide not that covenant, then are ye damned; for no one can reject this covenant and be permitted to enter into my glory." Who would suppose that any man in this land of religious liberty would presume to say to his fellow-man that he had no right to take such steps as he thought necessary to escape damnation? Or that Congress would enact a law which would present the alternative to religious believers of being consigned to a penitentiary if they should attempt to obey a law of God which would deliver them from damnation?

We find in this epistle, denunciatory of the Edmunds law, a reassertion of the dogma of polygamy that it was of divine origin and believed in and practiced as a part of the Utah Mormon creed. The act of 1882, designed to suppress these crimes, continued to be openly or secretly violated and the practice of polygamy and polygamous cohabitation among this sect continued unabated, and every device which the ingenuity of man could discover was employed to prevent the enforcement of the law and shield its violators from punishment. After another five years of forbearance and national humiliation it became manifest that some more drastic measure must be enacted to insure the suppression of these crimes, to which end, in 1887, Congress passed what was known as the Edmunds-Tucker law, strengthening and enlarging the acts of 1862 and 1882 by providing, among other things, that in any prosecution for bigamy, polygamy, or unlawful cohabitation, under any statutes of the United States, the lawful husband or wife of the person accused shall be a competent witness; that in any such prosecution an attachment for witnesses may be issued in the first instance without a previous subpœna; it punished persons convicted of adultery by imprisonment in the penitentiary; it defined the crime of incest and provided adequate punishment therefor; it annulled all laws of the legislative assembly of the Territory of Utah which provided that prosecutions for adultery could only be commenced on complaint of the husband or wife; it empowered the marshal of the Territory and his deputy to cause all offenders against the law, in his view, to enter into recognizance to keep the peace and appear at the next term of the court having jurisdiction of the case; it required every ceremony of marriage of any kind to be authenticated by a certificate stating the fact and nature of the ceremony, the full names of the parties and of every officer, priest, or person taking part in the performance of such ceremony, and signed by the parties to such ceremony and by every person taking part in the same, such certificate to be filed in the office of the probate court and immediately recorded, and a failure to comply with the requirements of this act to be punished by fine and imprisonment.

It made it the duty of the Attorney-General of the United States to institute and prosecute proceedings to forfeit and escheat to the United States the property of corporations obtained or held in violation of the act of 1862 (which act, it will be remembered, made the holding in excess of $50,000 of real estate unlawful), such property so forfeited and escheated to be disposed of and the proceeds applied to the use and for the benefit of the common schools in the Territory; it disapproved and annulled all laws of the legislative assembly of the State of Deseret, creating the "Perpetual Emigration Fund Company" and prohibited the legislative assembly of the State of Utah from reviving such corporation, or passing any law to accomplish the bringing of persons into the Territory for any purpose whatever, and directed the Attorney-General of the United States to institute proceedings in the supreme court of the Territory to carry the act into effect and pay the debts and dispose of the assets of such corporation according to law, the surplus, if any, to be escheated to the United States and expended for the benefit of the common schools of the Territory; it authorized and directed the Attorney-General of the United States to take the necessary proceedings to wind up the affairs of the corporation, known as the "Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints" according to law; it conferred upon the President the power to appoint all probate judges within the Territory of Utah and annulled all legislative acts providing for their election by the legislature; it took from the women of the Territory the right of suffrage, and annulled all acts of the Territorial assembly authorizing the registration and voting of females; it imposed upon every lawful voter as a condition precedent to his right to register or vote or hold office in the Territory of Utah, the taking of an oath, not only to support the Constitution of the United State and obey the laws, especially the acts of 1862 relating to bigamy, and this act in relation to the crimes defined and forbidden, and provided further that no person who shall have been convicted of any crime under this act, or previous acts of Congress, or who shall be a polygamist or cohabit polygamously with another, shall be entitled to vote at any election in the Territory, or serve on a jury, or hold any office of trust or profit; it annulled all laws looking to the organization or maintenance of the Nauvoo Legion and declared that the militia of the Territory should be subject to the laws of the United States; and in a word, this community of polygamists and lawbreakers were practically denied all participation in the government of the Territory of Utah and the entire administration of affairs taken charge of by the Government of the United States.

This series of enactments by the National Government was so sweeping and drastic as to carry conviction to the minds of the leaders of this Mormon community that the National Government had finally determined to enforce obedience to its authority and uproot and utterly destroy the last vestige of this "twin relic of barbarism." Doomsday had come for this abomination and the hierarchy saw no possible avenue of escape except through the intervention of the courts of the United States, which, it was hoped, would pronounce these enactments an infringement of that provision of the Constitution which declares that "Congress shall make no law respecting the establishment of religion or prohibit the free exercise thereof." It was contended then, as it is by some to-day, that polygamy and polygamous cohabitation are religious rites with which the National Government has no power to interfere. But this contention was summarily disposed of by the Supreme Court of the United States in several cases, particularly the case of the Mormon Church v. The United States, 136 U. S. Supreme Court Reports, page 1, which tore the mask from this hypocritical pretense and exposed it to public scorn and contempt. I beg to quote the opinion of the court, delivered by Justice Bradley:

It is unnecessary here to refer to the past history of the sect, to their defiance of the Government authorities, to their attempt to establish an independent community, to their efforts to drive from the Territory all who were not connected with them in communion and sympathy. The tale is one of patience on the part of the American Government and people and of contempt of authority and resistance to law on the part of the Mormons. Whatever persecutions they may have suffered in the early part of their history, in Missouri and Illinois, they have no excuse for their persistent defiance of law under the Government of the United States.

One pretense for this obstinate course is that their belief in the practice of polygamy, or in the right to indulge in it, is a religious belief, and therefore under the protection of the constitutional guaranty of religious freedom. This is altogether a sophistical plea. No doubt the thugs of India imagined that their belief in the right of assassination was a religious belief; but their thinking so did not make it so. The practice of suttee by the Hindoo widows may have sprung from a supposed religious conviction. The offering of human sacrifices by our own ancestors in Britain was, no doubt, sanctioned by an equally conscientious impulse. But no one on that account would hesitate to brand these practices now as crimes against society, and obnoxious to condemnation and punishment by the civil authority. * * *

Then, looking at the case as the finding of facts presents it, we have before us—Congress had before it—a contumacious organization wielding by its resources an immense power in the Territory of Utah and employing those resources and that power in constantly attempting to oppose, thwart, and subvert the legislation of Congress and the will of the Government of the United States. * * *

Notwithstanding the stringent laws which have been passed by Congress, notwithstanding all the efforts made to suppress this barbarous practice, the sect or community composing the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints perseveres, in defiance of law, in preaching, upholding, promoting, and defending it.

It is a matter of public notoriety that its emissaries are engaged in many countries in propagating this nefarious doctrine and urging its converts to join the community in Utah. The existence of such a propaganda is a blot on our civilization. The organization of a community for the spread and practice of polygamy is, in a measure, a return to barbarism. It is contrary to the spirit of Christianity and to the civilization which Christianity has produced in the western world. The question therefore is whether the promotion of such a nefarious system and practice, so repugnant to our laws and to the principles of our civilization, is to be allowed to continue by the sanction of the Government itself.

THE MANIFESTO AGAINST POLYGAMY AND POLYGAMOUS COHABITATION.

These several statutes to which I have referred, following each other in quick succession, each more drastic than the preceding, and all adjudged constitutional by the Supreme Court of the United States, brought the hierarchy to a realizing sense of its impotency to longer contend against the authority of the United States, and it therefore made haste to find some way to save its members from imprisonment and their property from confiscation. To this end the head of the church bowed at last in submission to the National Government and in 1890 promulgated what is known as the "manifesto," advising his followers to submit to the laws and refrain from further violation, the material portion of which is as follows:

To whom it may concern: Inasmuch as laws have been enacted by Congress forbidding plural marriage, which laws have been pronounced constitutional by the court of last resort, I hereby declare my intention to submit to those laws and to use my influence with the members of the church over which I preside to have them do likewise. * * * And I now publicly declare that my advice to the Latter-Day Saints is to refrain from contracting any marriages forbidden by the law of the land.

This manifesto was signed by "Wilford Woodruff, president of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints."

This proclamation, emanating from so commanding a source and communicated to a people taught to believe that their prophet was the inspired "mouthpiece of God," was expected to command prompt and implicit obedience by the entire Mormon community, and the hope was indulged and belief engendered in the public mind that at last the Utah hierarchy and its adherents would abandon the infamous practice of polygamy and polygamous cohabitation and conform to the mandates of the law and the spirit of the manifesto and that this foul blot upon our civilization was about to be forever removed.

PRAYER FOR AMNESTY.

This gratifying expectation was greatly strengthened by the prompt action of the first presidency and the twelve apostles in presenting to the President of the United States in 1891, the year following the manifesto, a petition humbly imploring amnesty for themselves and their followers and restoration to all their rights and privileges as citizens. This petition, asking immunity for the past and plighting their honor and faith for the future, was couched in such humble terms as to inspire confidence in their sincerity and a measure of sympathy for their misguided followers. The material part of the petition is as follows:

We, the first presidency and apostles of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints, beg, respectfully, to present to your Excellency the following facts: We formerly taught our people that polygamy, or celestial marriage, was right; that it was a necessity to man's highest exaltation in the life to come; that doctrine was publicly promulgated by our president, the late Brigham Young, forty years ago, and was steadily taught and impressed upon the Latter-Day Saints up to a short time before September, 1890. They accepted the doctrine, and many personally embraced and practiced polygamy. When the Government sought to stamp the practice out our people, almost without exception, remained firm, for they * * * still felt that their lives and their honor as men were pledged to a vindication of their faith. * * * Following this conviction, hundreds endured arrest, trial, fine, and imprisonment. More, the Government added disfranchisement to other punishments of those who clung to their faith and fulfilled its covenants. This being the true situation, and believing that the object of the Government was simply the vindication of its own authority and to compel obedience to its laws, * * * we respectfully pray that full amnesty may be extended to all who are under disabilities because of the operation of the so-called Edmunds and Edmunds-Tucker law. Our people are scattered, homes are made desolate, many are still imprisoned, others are banished or in hiding. * * * As shepherds of a patient and suffering people, we ask amnesty for them and pledge our faith and honor for their future. And your petitioners will ever pray.

This petition was signed by the first presidency, composed of Wilford Woodruff as president, and his two counselors, George Q. Cannon and Joseph F. Smith, the present head of the church, and ten of the twelve apostles.

This cry for amnesty appealed to the generous impulses of President Harrison, who, on the 4th of January, 1893, issued the following proclamation:

Whereas Congress by a statute approved March 22, 1882, and by statutes in furtherance and amendment thereof defined the crimes of bigamy, polygamy, and unlawful cohabitation in the Territories and other places within the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States and prescribed a penalty for such crimes; and

Whereas on or about the 6th day of October, 1890, the Church of the Latter-Day Saints, commonly known as the Mormon Church, through its president issued a manifesto proclaiming the purpose of said church no longer to sanction the practice of polygamous marriages, and calling upon all members and adherents of said church to obey the laws of the United States in reference to said subject-matter; and

Whereas it is represented that since the date of said declaration the members and adherents of said church have generally obeyed said laws and have abstained from plural marriages and polygamous cohabitation; and

Whereas by a petition dated December 19, 1891, the officials of said church, pledging the membership thereof to a faithful obedience to the laws against plural marriage and unlawful cohabitation, have applied to me to grant amnesty for past offenses against said laws * * *;

Now, therefore, I, Benjamin Harrison, President of the United States, by virtue of the powers in me vested, do hereby declare and grant a full amnesty and pardon to all persons liable to the penalties of said act by reason of unlawful cohabitation under the color of polygamous or plural marriage who have since November 1, 1890, abstained from such unlawful cohabitation, but upon the express condition that they shall in the future faithfully obey the laws of the United States hereinbefore named, and not otherwise. Those who shall fail to avail themselves of the clemency hereby offered will be vigorously prosecuted.

Subsequently, and on the 25th of September, 1894, President Cleveland issued a similar proclamation, excepting, however, from its benefits—

All persons who have not complied with the conditions contained in the Executive proclamation of January 4, 1893.

These pleas for amnesty were granted, prison doors opened, church property restored, all disabilities resulting from violation of law removed, and it was confidently hoped that the people of Utah, under this later dispensation, by conforming to the mandates of the law and the civilization of the age, would enter upon a new era of peace, order, and prosperity. But the plans of the hierarchy were not yet fully realized, and would not be until the territory had escaped from Federal domination by securing the freedom of statehood, and the time seemed opportune for such a consummation.

ADMISSION OF UTAH AS A STATE.

Previous to this and during all the years of Utah's Territorial existence efforts were repeatedly made to escape the direct domination of the National Government by securing admission into the Federal Union. If my recollection serves me correctly, at least half a dozen attempts were made to secure statehood previous to 1890, all of which proved abortive, for the reason that the people of the Territory under the domination of the Mormon hierarchy were not obedient to the laws of the United States—were not law-abiding citizens—and therefore not regarded fit to be intrusted with self-government. After the manifesto of 1890 and the general amnesty following, and the liberal spirit which seemed to have taken possession of the public mind, the effort for statehood was renewed, and as early as 1892, only two years after the manifesto, a movement was inaugurated to that end and followed with such persistency that two years later an enabling act was passed, and in 1896 Utah was admitted into the Union as a sovereign State.

And thus was the prophecy of Brigham Young fulfilled:

Do not be discouraged by your repeated failures to get into the Union as a State. We shall succeed, we shall pull the wool over the eyes of the American people and make them swallow Mormonism, polygamy and all.

We shall drop the old issue between the Mormons and the Liberals in Utah, ally ourselves with the two great national parties, dividing ourselves about equally, so as to fall in with the one in power. We don't know and we don't care about the issue. We must be at peace with them in order to get into the Union. After that we can snap our fingers in their faces, restore the good old times when we dwelt undisturbed in these valleys of the mountains, and cast out devils as we used to do.

Thus was consummated in the brief period of six years what nearly half a century had failed to secure. No stronger proof of public confidence in the sincerity of these people could possibly have been given. However, to make assurance doubly sure that the hierarchy would keep faith with the nation, it was provided, among other things, in the enabling act of July 16, 1894, that—

The constitution shall be republican in form, and shall provide by ordinance irrevocable without the consent of the United States and the people of said State;

That perfect toleration of religious sentiment shall be secured, and that no inhabitant of said State shall ever be molested in person or property on account of his or her mode of religious worship, provided that polygamous or plural marriages are forever prohibited.

Subsequently, and when the constitution was framed, these requirements of the enabling act were embodied in the constitution of the State, coupled with the further provision that—

There shall be no union of church and state, nor shall any church dominate the State nor interfere with its functions—under which constitution, thus framed and ratified by the people, Utah was admitted to the freedom of statehood. Following her admission, the usual steps were taken to set the machinery of the State government in motion and to adjust it to its new relations as a member of the Federal Union. To this end, State and Federal officials were elected from time to time, when, on the 26th of January, 1903, the governor of the State certified that on the 21st day of January, 1903—

REED SMOOT was duly chosen by the legislature of Utah to represent said State in the Senate of the United States for a term of six years from March 4, 1903.

It is concerning this election that protest was made, and the Committee on Privileges and Elections ordered to "investigate the right and title of REED SMOOT to a seat in the Senate as a Senator from the State of Utah." Such investigation, your committee, after patient and protracted hearings, has concluded, and submits the result of its deliberations to the judgment of the Senate.

The issues involved in the controversy are fully set forth in the protest submitted to the Senate and referred to your committee, constituting the basis of the committee's inquiries. The gravamen of the charge in the protest against the senior Senator from Utah is not that he is an adherent of the Mormon Church (for church affiliation is a matter of free individual choice), but—that he is one of a self-perpetuating body of fifteen men, who, constituting the ruling authorities of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints, or "Mormon Church," claim, and by their followers are accorded the right to claim, supreme authority, divinely sanctioned, to shape the belief and control the conduct of those under them in all matters whatsoever—civil and religious, temporal and spiritual—and who thus, uniting in themselves authority in church and state, do so exercise the same as to inculcate and encourage a belief in polygamy and polygamous cohabitation, who countenance and connive at violations of the laws of the State prohibiting the same, regardless of pledges made for the purpose of obtaining statehood, and of covenants made with the people of the United States, and who by all means in their power protect and honor those who with themselves violate the laws of the land and are guilty of practices destructive of the family and the home.

SUBSTANCE OF THE CHARGES.

These charges may be epitomized as follows: That Senator Smoot is disqualified from holding a seat in the Senate of the United States for the reason—

First. That at the time of his election the State of Utah and the legislature thereof were under the complete domination of the Mormon hierarchy, of which he is a member, and that such hierarchy so far "interfered with the functions of the State" as to secure the election of one of its own members and an apostle, and that his certificate of election by the legislature was only the recorded edict of the hierarchy in defiance of the constitutional inhibition that "no church shall dominate the State nor interfere with its functions."

Second. That this Mormon hierarchy, of which the Senator is a conspicuous member, inculcates and encourages belief in and the practice of polygamy and polygamous cohabitation in violation of the laws of the State prohibiting the same and in disregard of pledges made for its suppression; and Third. That the Senator, in connection with and as a member of such organization, has taken an oath of hostility to the Government of the United States incompatible with his obligation as a Senator.

These are the main grounds upon which his exclusion is sought, each of which I propose to discuss in the order named.

Touching the question of the domination of this organization through its governing body in political affairs and its "interference with the functions of the State," in spite of the constitutional inhibition, the evidence is most convincing. Before proceeding, however, to its consideration, and in order to measure its full force, it is important to bear in mind the dominating power of the president and the twelve apostles and the influence they exert over their followers. The power exercised by this governing body, which, for brevity, is designated "The hierarchy," is far-reaching and commanding, holding in its grasp practically the entire membership of the organization and through it the domination of the State, by arrogating to itself and inculcating the belief in its followers that they are endowed with supernatural powers as "prophets, seers, and revelators," and specially commissioned by the Almighty to dominate the affairs of this world, and that resistance to the will of this theocracy is rebellion against God.

AUTHORITY OF THE PRIESTHOOD.

The testimony taken by your committee fully sustains the allegation in the protest, "That the Mormon priesthood, according to the doctrines of that church, is vested with supreme authority in all things temporal and spiritual; and that the first presidency and the twelve apostles are supreme in the exercise and transmission of the mandates of this authority." The following citations will serve to substantiate the truth of this allegation:

Brigham H. Roberts, author of The New Witness for God, declares:

Men who hold the priesthood possess divine authority to act for God, and by possessing part of God's power they are in reality part of God. Men who honor the priesthood in them honor God, and those who reject it reject God.

The very day and hour the church was organized the Lord constituted the president of the church its prophet, seer, and lawgiver, strictly commanding the church to give heed to all his words and commandments which he shall give unto you, for his words, saith the Lord, ye shall receive as if from mine own mouth, in all patience and faith.

By the term "oracle" is meant the leaders of the church, the president and the apostles. The word of the living oracles is revelation, is the same as if God had spoken himself.

The priesthood organization, as viewed by the first presidency, is the divinely authorized and exclusive channel of communication between God and mankind.

The obligations imposed upon those who hold the high order of the priesthood require absolute obedience to the first presidency, not only as to religious and spiritual things, but also those that are civil and political.

Wilford Woodruff, at one time president of the church, declared:

Now, whatever I might have obtained in the shape of learning by searching and study respecting the arts and sciences of men, whatever principles I may have imbibed during my scientific research, yet if the prophet of God should tell me that a certain principle or theory which I might have learned was not true, I do not care what my ideas have been, I should consider it my duty, at the suggestion of my file leader, to abandon my principle or theory. Suppose he were to say the principles by which you are governed are not right, that they were incorrect, what would be my duty? I answer that it would be my duty to lay those principles aside and to take up those that might be laid down by the servant of God.

The church of Christ is governed by the laws of God, which laws He reveals to the church through him who is the president thereof, and if the church should reject that law, they reject the law of God, and would be under condemnation, and under God's displeasure. There can never exist two supreme lawmaking powers in any organization at one and the same time. God has appointed but one supreme lawmaking power in his church, and that is the presidency of the church; the word of the president of the church which the saints are commanded to receive as the very word of God.

Joseph F. Smith, the president of the church, declared in 1900:

The question with me is, when I get the word of the Lord as to who is the right man, will I obey it, no matter whether it does come contrary to my convictions.

Priesthood is power with God conferred upon men, by which he becomes an agent for God, authorized to act in His name. Men who possess the priesthood possess divine authority thus to act for God, and by possessing part of God's power they are in reality part of God.

In a magazine called "The Juvenile Instructor," expressly designed for the young and edited by Joseph F. Smith, appears the following:

The priesthood is a sacred thing. The Lord has not given to members of the church the right to find fault with or condemn those who hold the priesthood, neither is it the right of an elder or other official to judge or censure or speak disrespectfully or condemnatory of his file leader or of men who preside over him.

Parley P. Pratt, an apostle and author of acknowledged authority, says:

This priesthood holds the keys of revelation of the oracles of God to man upon the earth; the power and right to give laws and commandments to individuals, churches, rulers, nations, and the world; to appoint, to ordain, and establish constitutions and kingdoms; to appoint kings, presidents, governors, or judges.

The priesthood upon the earth is the legitimate government of God, whether in the heavens or on the earth, and it is the only legitimate power that has a right to rule upon the earth.

James E. Talmage, professor of geology in the State University of Utah, and a high authority in the church, in his work called "Articles of Faith," says:

Twelve men holding the apostleship properly organized constitute the quorum of the apostles. These the Lord has designed as the twelve traveling councils. They form the traveling presiding high council to act under the direction of the first presidency in all parts of the world. They constitute a quorum, whose unanimous decisions are equally binding in power and authority with those of the first presidency of the church.

Matthias F. Cowley, one of the twelve apostles, says:

It is an undeniable fact in the history of the saints that obedience to whatever has come either by written document or verbally from the presidency of the church has been attended with good results. On the other hand, whosoever has opposed such counsel without repentance has been followed with evidence of condemnation.

If Brother Brigham tells me to do anything, it is the same as though the Lord told me to do it. This is the course for you and every other saint to take.

Governor Thomas, in a report of affairs in Utah, declares:

While the Mormon masses are too sincere to voluntarily make false pretenses, they can be induced to accept and adopt a form of words however contradictory, if advised to do so by their authorities, for obedience to the priesthood and to obey counsel is diligently inculcated as a first duty. The orthodox Mormon, in every political and business act, puts the church first, the country afterwards. It can not be otherwise, for the priesthood claim all government but its own to be illegal, and to exercise all political power and temporal dominion by divine right.

Brigham Young declared:

No man need judge me. You know nothing about it, whether I am sent or not. Furthermore, it is none of your business, only you listen with open ears to what is taught you.

Wilford Woodruff is a prophet, and I know that he has a great many prophets around him, and he can make scriptures as good as those in the Bible.

The living oracles are worth more to the Latter-Day Saints than all the Bibles. Compared with the living oracles, these books are nothing to me.

The Utah Commission, in its report of 1887, declared:

Standing face to face with the law, the leaders and their obedient followers have made no concession to its supremacy, and the issue is squarely maintained between assumed revelations and the laws of the land.

The right of the hierarchy to dominate in secular as well as spiritual matters is openly proclaimed by those who assume to speak for the church. As late as 1904 one of the twelve apostles, in a public address, declared:

That from the view point of the Gospel there could be no separation of temporal and spiritual things, and those who object to the church people advising and taking part in the temporal affairs have no conception of the gospel of Christ.

The hierarchy secures obedience to its domination by claiming that its members are inspired and that they are the "mouthpiece of God," and their adherents are enjoined always to take counsel of their superiors, which means to "receive counsel" and obey it, and they are taught to believe that if they fail to do so they are not only excommunicated from the church, but they forfeit all hope of future happiness. The absolute submission of the great mass of the Mormon people to the mandate of their leaders is illustrated in the declaration of a prominent official when he declared that "if your file leader says white is black, it is your duty to say white is black."

Justice Zane, of Utah, in 1887, speaking of the power of this hierarchy, said:

At the head of this corporate body, according to the faith professed, is a seer and revelator, who receives in revelation the will of the infinite God concerning the duty that man owes to himself, to his fellow-beings, to society and human government, and to God. In subordination to this head is a vast number of officials of various kinds and descriptions, comprising a most minute and complete organization. The people composing this organization claim to direct and lead by inspiration, which is above all human wisdom, subject to a power above all municipal government, above all man-made laws.

These excerpts, taken from the testimony, official documents, and public writings of the leading authorities of the church, justify the allegation in the protest that the hierarchy, of which the Senator is a member, "is vested with supreme power in all things temporal and spiritual" and will serve to illuminate the testimony bearing upon the question of church domination.

One of the most serious charges urged against the right of the Senator to a seat in this body is that he is a member of the governing body of the Mormon Church, which assumes the right to exercise, and does exercise, a controlling influence over the membership of that organization in secular as well as spiritual matters, and so dominates in civil and political affairs as to effectuate, in fact, a complete union of church and state, with the church in the ascendant, in violation of the constitution of the State of Utah, and that the Senator's election was the result of such union and such domination.

DOMINATION OF THE HIERARCHY IN SECULAR AFFAIRS.

As to the domination of the hierarchy in secular affairs, a few extracts from the testimony will suffice. The Deseret News, owned by and the official organ of the Mormon Church, whose utterances are regarded as expressing the views of the first presidency and the twelve apostles, in a report of the proceedings of a Mormon conference held in 1897, only a year after the admission of the State, declared:

Apostle M. W. Merrill elaborated upon the danger of criticising the action of the members of the priesthood. He said that the apostles and presidents of stakes were placed in their positions over the church by the Lord and that they did not secure these positions themselves, and that the people should take counsel of the bishop of their ward or the president of the stake before entering upon any new enterprise.

Public officers, sworn to enforce the law, persistently refuse to prosecute offenders against the law prohibiting polygamous cohabitation.

Certain members of the church, failing to obey the orders of the church officials in a purely business matter, are reprimanded because "they did not abide by the counsel that was given them."

The members of the Mormon Church are directed by the Mormon priesthood as to what business institutions they shall patronize.

The high council of the Mormon Church and the city council of Brigham City met in joint session at the behest of the Mormon authorities to determine whether an electric-light plant shall be owned by the municipality or by private individuals.

A bishop is deposed from his office in the church because he promised to obey the laws against polygamy.

Another official is excommunicated for being a member of an organization for the enforcement of the law and because he was opposed to the influence of the church in political affairs.

Another is degraded in the church for refusing to obey his "file leader."

In another case a member of a firm doing business in Salt Lake City is expelled from the Mormon Church because he persisted in engaging in mining operations contrary to the prohibitions of the church.

As recently as the year 1903 two members of the Mormon Church, having built a dancing pavilion in opposition to "counsel," were summoned for trial before the church authorities and only saved themselves from excommunication by turning over to the church officials the management of the pavilion and 25 per cent of the net earnings.

A railroad station is located by direction of the church authorities. Four members of the church are excommunicated for apostasy "in desiring to open up mines against the teachings of the holy priesthood."

As late as 1897 a Mormon official was deposed from his official position in the church for distributing at a school election a ticket different from that prescribed by the church authorities.

In 1905 a teacher in the Mormon Church was cut off from the church ostensibly for criticising the head of the hierarchy for his polygamous practices, but in reality for engaging in the manufacture of salt against the interests of the president of the church and his associates.

A high official in the Mormon Church, assuming jurisdiction in a controversy concerning the title to real estate, entered judgment against the party, and not only directed a conveyance of the title, but enforced the decree by spiritual penalties, and the victim of this outrage, a feeble woman, was excommunicated from the church and driven to insanity for refusing to obey the dictates of the church leaders and relinquish the title to one who had no shadow of legal right whatever.

The controlling influence of this hierarchy in secular affairs is most forcefully exemplified in its invasion of the public schools of the State and by its edicts suspending their functions, and opening religion classes, where the youth are instructed in the doctrines of the Mormon Church by teachers in the common schools supported by State taxation, in violation of the express provision of the Constitution that "No public money or property shall be appropriated for or applied to any religious worship, exercises, or instruction," and wherein the course of study prescribed by the ruling authorities of the church for these religion classes consists of the lives of the most noted polygamists in the history of the Mormon Church. That the hierarchy dominates in these matters is conclusively established by the fact that when this practice was disclosed before the committee these religion classes were, by order of the hierarchy, discontinued.

It will therefore be seen that while in spiritual matters its domination is practically supreme, yet in temporal affairs it seems to be equally potential. This is not surprising when it is remembered that the head of the organization is connected in an official capacity with a large number of the leading industries in the city of Salt Lake and throughout the State of Utah.

Mr. Smith, in reply to the question "What is your business?" said:

My principal business is that of president of the church. I am engaged in numerous other businesses. I am president of Zion's Cooperative Mercantile Institution; president of the State Bank of Utah; president of Zion's Savings Bank and Trust Company; president of the Utah Sugar Company; president of the Consolidated Wagon and Machine Company; president and director of the Utah Light and Power Company; president and director of the Salt Lake and Los Angeles Railroad Company; president of the Salt Air Beach Company; president and director of the Idaho Sugar Company; president of the Island Crystal Salt Company; president and director of the Salt Lake Dramatic Association; president and director of the Salt Lake Knitting Company; director in the Union Pacific Railroad; vice-president of the Bullion, Beck & Champion Mining Company, and I am editor of the Young Men's Improvement Association, a periodical, the Improvement Era, and also the Juvenile Instructor.

Apostles Grant, Winder, John Henry Smith, Lyman, Lund, and REED SMOOT are associated with me in the directorate of the Zion's Cooperative Mercantile Institution.

This Mormon organization seems, therefore, to be a stupendous business concern, with ramifications in every part of the State, thus enhancing its ecclesiastical control by the potency of its industrial alliances.

DOMINATION IN POLITICAL AFFAIRS.

But it is further charged in the protest that this governing body, of which the Senator is a conspicuous and influential member, claims the right to dictate and control, and does dictate and control, the civil and political affairs of the State of Utah, resulting in the practical establishment of a union of church and state, contrary to the express inhibition of the Constitution. The evidence upon this point is voluminous and convincing.

Since the admission of Utah into the Union, January 6, 1896, the people of the State of Utah have been, if possible, more completely under the domination of the Mormon hierarchy than during the long years of their Territorial existence. Immediately, and at the very first election thereafter, the hierarchy resumed its domination in State affairs, taking possession practically of every official position in the State government, and has held them ever since with unyielding tenacity. As a Territory its officials were appointed by the Federal Government, selected from outside the Territory, and, as a rule, were independent of and in no way connected with the Mormon organization, while as a State substantially every State official has been chosen from the membership of this organization. Every governor, every secretary of State, every State treasurer, every State auditor, and every State superintendent of education has been an adherent of this organization. The only office held by a non-Mormon under the State government during the ten years of its existence, as an elective officer, has been the attorney-general. In the first legislature, elected in 1896, the senate, composed of 18 senators, was equally divided between Mormons and Gentiles, and in the house of representatives of 45 members, 34 were Mormons and 11 Gentiles, giving to the joint convention of the two houses 43 Mormons and 20 Gentiles. It might be noted in this connection that in the first legislature there were 9 polygamists and 17 officials of the church holding the grade of bishop or higher.

The senate of 1897 had 15 Mormons and 3 Gentiles, and among the Mormons 1 polygamist and 1 plural wife and 3 church officials, while in the house there were 38 Mormons, of whom 5 were polygamists and 13 held high church positions, and 7 Gentiles, giving in the joint assembly of 63, 53 Mormons and only 10 Gentiles.

The fourth legislature, of 1901, with 18 senators, 14 were Mormons, of whom 2 were polygamists and 3 held high church offices, and 4 Gentiles, while of the 45 members of the house 32 were Mormons, 13 Gentiles, and of the Mormons, 1 was a polygamist and 9 held high ecclesiastical positions, giving in joint assembly 46 Mormons and 17 Gentiles.

In the fifth legislature, 1903, of the 18 senators 12 were Mormons, 6 of whom were high church officials, and 6 Gentiles, and in the house of 45 members 34 were Mormons, 3 of whom were polygamists and 6 high church officials, and 11 Gentiles, giving on joint ballot 46 Mormons and 17 Gentiles. This was the legislature from which the Senator secured his election.

In the sixth legislature, 1905, 11 of the 18 senators were Mormons, 4 holding high ecclesiastical positions, and 7 Gentiles, and in the house 33 of the 45 members were Mormons, with 1 polygamist and 9 bishops, and 12 Gentiles, and making in joint assembly 44 Mormons and 19 Gentiles.

It will be observed, therefore, that there has never been a legislature elected in the State of Utah since her admission into the Union that did not have a membership of more than two-thirds adherents of the Mormon Church, and therefore under its complete domination.

Thus possessed of the instrumentalities of official control, it has dominated the State with an iron hand, and in its political dictation it has not only controlled the affairs of the State of Utah, but has reached beyond the confines of the State and exerts a potential influence in shaping and directing the policies of States adjacent thereto.

At the meeting of the first legislature of Utah committees were appointed by the officials of the Mormon Church to wait upon the legislature with a view of dictating and supervising legislation. Early in the history of the State the officials of the church directed that the rank and file should divide on political lines, about equally, one-half going to one of the great political parties of the nation, the other half to the other, so that the entire strength of the organization could be cast to one party or the other as the interests of the organization might demand. One of the witnesses declared:

> Whenever the church indorses a man he will be elected; whenever they put upon him the seal of their disapprobation, he will not be elected.

It appeared in evidence before your committee that candidates for office in the State of Idaho desiring success usually visit Salt Lake City and arrange for their campaign with the leaders of the Mormon Church, and in this way the will of the church is carried out.

In 1904 a leading Mormon in a State convention in the State of Idaho made the statement that in case a certain resolution should be withdrawn he would go to Utah and ask the president of the Mormon Church to cease interfering in Idaho politics.

One of the most flagrant instances of political domination was the case of Moses Thatcher. The constitution of the State of Utah, it will be remembered, provides:

> There shall be no union of church and state, nor shall any church dominate the State or interfere with its functions.

Preliminary to the admission of Utah as a State, and in anticipation of it, in 1895, an election was held for members of the legislature and State officers and for Representative in Congress. Moses Thatcher, an apostle, was a candidate for United States Senator and Brigham H. Roberts for Representative in Congress. Thatcher was at that time "out of harmony" with the hierarchy because of his previous conduct in reference to the political affairs of the Territory. In 1891 it had been agreed among the ruling authorities of the Mormon Church that men who were high in authority in that church, and who believed in Republican principles, should go out among the Mormon people and endeavor to persuade the voters to vote the Republican ticket, while those who could not indorse the principles of the Republican party should remain silent. Moses Thatcher, a Democrat, did not conform to this resolution, but made several speeches for the Democratic ticket. It was afterwards asserted by Joseph F. Smith that the "counsel" of the leaders of the Mormon Church "was obeyed by all the apostles and high authorities except Moses Thatcher, who talked to the people contrary to the wishes of his brethren."

When Moses Thatcher therefore consented to the use of his name as a candidate for the Senate, in 1895, he was taken to task by the high priesthood for disobeying counsel, and at the October conference of the Mormon Church in 1895, at a secret meeting of the high priesthood, it was agreed to put in operation all the machinery of the church to defeat Moses Thatcher and Brigham H. Roberts. The result of the election was that Brigham H. Roberts was defeated for the office of Representative and a Republican legislature elected, thus insuring the defeat of Moses Thatcher to the Senate.

During the political campaign of 1895 and on the 13th of October of that year, at Logan, a bishop of the Mormon Church said to an assembly of teachers of the church that two men, one of the twelve and one a president of the seventies (meaning Thatcher and Roberts), had, contrary to the wishes of the first presidency and contrary to counsel, accepted nominations for high offices. He said:

> It is unnecessary for me to name the men. You know who they are. I speak this for your own good. You know how to vote.

On the same day at Brigham City the president of a stake at a religious meeting of Mormons declared to those who were assembled that it was the desire of the first presidency that Thatcher and Roberts should be defeated. At the meeting of the first presidency and twelve apostles of the Mormon Church held in the month of October, 1896, to take action in the case of Moses Thatcher for his refusal to obey the political mandates of the first presidency, George Q. Cannon, in justifying the action of the quorum of twelve apostles in deposing Moses Thatcher as an apostle, used this language:

> When I respect and honor Wilford Woodruff, I bow to God, who has chosen him. * * * If I listen to Wilford Woodruff, if I look to him to see how the spirit of God moves upon him, if I ask his counsel and take it, it is because God has commanded me. God has given him the keys of authority. * * * When Joseph F. Smith obeys Wilford Woodruff he does it upon the same principle. We reverence him as the prophet of God and as our leader. We listen to him and are guided by his slightest wish. It is because we know that he is the servant of God, chosen by the Almighty to fill that place, and that he holds the keys of the priesthood of this generation on the earth at the present time.

There was another cause of offense to the hierarchy. In 1896 the first presidency and ten of the apostles formulated what has since been known as the "political manifesto," which required all prominent officials of the church to obtain the consent of the first presidency and twelve apostles before becoming candidates for public office. This manifesto both Moses Thatcher and Brigham H. Roberts at first refused to sign. Brigham H. Roberts was afterwards compelled by the first presidency and twelve apostles to sign the manifesto, but Moses Thatcher persistently refused.

At the April conference of 1896 Moses Thatcher was dropped from the quorum of twelve apostles because of his refusal to sign the political manifesto. Subsequently he declared himself a candidate for the United States Senate. The legislature elected was Democratic, and the indications were that he would be elected. Thereupon the whole power of the church was brought to bear upon members of the legislature to compass his defeat, and in this the church was successful, Mr. Rawlins being elected over Thatcher. This result was accomplished by the leaders of the Mormon Church directing Mormons who had been voting for Judge Henderson to vote for Rawlins. One Mormon member refused, saying:

> I will not do it, and I know just exactly what it means, and I know that I will be sent on a mission.

Moses Thatcher was afterwards put upon trial and escaped being excommunicated from the Mormon Church only by a humiliating recantation and acceptance of the political manifesto.

In 1898 Brigham H. Roberts, restored to church favor, was elected to Congress by over 5,000 majority.

The legislature of 1899 was largely Democratic, but party dissension prevented the election of a Senator. In this legislature, however, the Mormon Church made a determined effort to elect one McCune, a Gentile, and would have succeeded had not charges been made against McCune for attempted bribery. In connection with McCune's candidacy, Judge Powers testifies as follows:

> The legislature was largely Democratic, thirteen Republicans and fifty Democrats. In that legislature I was a candidate for Senator, Judge William H. King, and Alfred W. McCune. Undoubtedly McCune was the church candidate. Heber J. Grant, the apostle, took a very active part in the campaign before the legislature for Mr. McCune. Mr. Grant is a very pleasing letter writer, and in one of his letters, which is dated December 9, 1898, to J. Golden Kimball, one of the first presidents of the seventies, speaking of the Senatorial campaign, he recites the amounts of money that Mr. McCune had contributed to the Mormon Church for temples and meetinghouses and missionary funds, and things of that kind, and the moneys that his wife had given to the church, and then his letter has this significant paragraph: "I wish to say to you that before entering the race to assist Mr. McCune to become a United States Senator I obtained the full, free, and frank consent of President Snow to work for Mr. McCune. Two years ago, at the time of the Moses Thatcher fight, President Woodruff told me that of all the men mentioned as prospective Senators he would prefer Mr. McCune."

Among other reasons that he states why Mr. McCune should be elected is the fact that he is not a Mormon, but in sympathy with them, and could therefore do more in the Senate for them than a Mormon could.

In 1892 Bishop Warburton, a Democrat, called upon a number of his Democratic brethren in the first municipal ward of Salt Lake City and told them that most of them had been through the temple and understood their obligations, and that he had received a message from the first presidency to the effect that it was the desire that Frank J. Cannon should be elected to Congress.

In 1889 a Mormon named Robbins offered himself as an independent candidate for a political office as against the candidate favored by the Mormon Church. Shortly prior to the election Apostle John Henry Smith visited Mr. Robbins's district, had the people called together, and in a public speech stated that he was an apostle of the Mormon Church; that they had chosen and sustained him in that position and had covenanted to sustain him as their counsel and advisor, and he now wished them to thoroughly know and understand that he was there to see and to counsel and advise and persuade them to vote the People's (Mormon) ticket.

In another county in Utah at the same election there was a contest between two Mormons for a public office. One was an independent candidate, the other the regular Mormon candidate. At a Mormon conference George Q. Cannon, a prominent Mormon official, addressed the people, dwelling wholly upon politics, and among other things said:

> Now, brethren, you will shortly have an election here, and how will you act—after the order of the world, to stir up strife and contention, or will you do it after the order of God and elect the men whom God wants?

A Mr. Stephens, called as a witness for the Senator, said:

> There is a general feeling in the State of Utah that the election of an apostle to the Senate means the church in politics, and a like feeling that REED SMOOT was elected to the Senate because of the fact that he was a Mormon apostle.

LEGISLATION FAVORING POLYGAMY.

In the year 1901 the Mormon legislature of Utah passed what was known as the Evans bill, which was aimed to prevent prosecutions for polygamous cohabitation. This action, if not inspired by the president of the Mormon Church, was openly favored by him. It was vetoed, however, by a Mormon governor upon the ground that the bill, if passed, would bring about an amendment of the Constitution of the United States under which those guilty of the crime of polygamous cohabitation would be prosecuted and punished in the Federal court.

But the interference by the leaders of the Mormon Church in political affairs has not been confined to Utah. In Idaho the Mormons have for a number of years held the balance of political power, and have exercised the authority of the church whenever the interests of that church seemed to require it. In the year 1902 the legislature of that State passed a resolution providing for a constitutional convention to amend the constitution so as to eliminate the clause by which members of the Mormon Church might be disfranchised. This action was taken shortly after a visit to the State capitol by Apostle John Henry Smith, who seemed to be the political sponsor of the church, and it was the general impression that the passage of the resolution was brought about through his influence.

In 1904 it was so generally understood that Mr. Gooding was nominated through the influence of the Mormon Church over Governor Morrison that the leading Republican paper of Boise published at the head of its editorial column these words: "Zion has spoken."

In 1902 Matthias Cowley, an apostle of the Mormon Church, went through the counties of Idaho telling the Mormons of that State that it was the will of the church that they should vote a certain ticket.

In 1900 Joseph F. Smith, in an address delivered at the general conference of the church in the tabernacle, declared that it was the duty of the members of the church to take counsel in political affairs.

In 1904 a county committee issued a circular urging the defeat of a candidate for Congress because of his testimony in this case before the Committee on Privileges and Elections. Another witness declared that if Senator KEARNS had not received the support of President Snow he could not have been elected.

The presidents of the several stakes in Utah are selected by the president of the church.

The Hon. Caleb W. West, governor of the Territory of Utah, in one of his reports to the Secretary of the Interior, forcefully said:

> In the Mormon polity, established and governing the people of this Territory since its settlement, the unity of the church and state is perfect and indissoluble. It is based upon the complete and absolute control of a priesthood—wielding a supreme power, exercised and yielded to, as emanating from God—in all things secular as well as spiritual. The word of this priesthood is to the Mormon people the command of God, not only in matters of faith and morals, but in all civil, political, and commercial affairs. This priesthood not only rules the church but governs the state.

Senator Edmunds well said in a recent publication referring to this case:

> The investigation has developed evidence showing that the hierarchy continues to control the government of the State, and that the choice of officers and their official actions in some degree at least are subject to its control. It can quite correctly say with the French king, I am the State.

THE POLITICAL MANIFESTO.

But nothing so completely shows the domination of this church in civil affairs as the adoption of what is commonly known as the political manifesto. A rule of the church promulgated by the hierarchy in 1896 requires every leading official of the church, before accepting any political position or nomination therefor, to take counsel of the church officials and obtain the consent of the presiding officers in the priesthood. Such a rule precludes any member of that church from serving the State or the nation either by appointment or popular election unless he has been first designated by the hierarchy. Under this rule it is for the first presidency to say whether a high official can be a candidate or not, according to his will and that of the twelve apostles, and it is in evidence that the Senator himself was compelled to obtain permission of the church before he presumed to announce himself as a candidate for the Senate. He was nominated by the hierarchy and the selection ratified by the legislature. No more cunningly devised scheme could possibly be concocted to put the church in politics and make it potential therein than this. For, the moment it is known that a candidate has the indorsement of the church and permission of the hierarchy to be a candidate, that moment he has back of him the whole power of the Mormon Church and his election is assured.

There has been no case in which a candidate for a high office in Utah has obtained the consent of the church to run and has been defeated, and there is no case in which one did not receive such consent and has been elected. The consent of the hierarchy is a command of the church.

THE MORMON HIERARCHY ENCOURAGES POLYGAMY.

The right of Senator SMOOT to retain his seat in the Senate as a Senator from the State of Utah is still further challenged upon the ground and for the reason that—

> He is a member of the governing body of the Mormon Church, commonly called "the hierarchy," and that such governing body, with which he affiliates, so exercises its authority as to inculcate and encourage a belief in polygamy and polygamous cohabitation; that it countenances and connives at the violation of laws prohibiting these offenses in spite of pledges made for the purpose of obtaining statehood, and who, by all means in their power, protect and honor those who violate the laws of the land and are guilty of practices destructive of the family and the home.

That the Senator is a member of such organization, holding therein the high office of an apostle, a position second only in dignity and power to the presidency itself, is conceded.

It only remains, therefore, to inquire, under this head, whether this governing body does, as a matter of fact, so exercise its authority as to inculcate and encourage belief in the practice of polygamy and polygamous cohabitation, and whether it countenances and connives at the violation of laws prohibiting such crimes, and if so, whether by being a member affiliating with and constituting a part of such governing body and participating in its counsels the Senator has disqualified himself by reason thereof for membership in this body. These are the vital questions under this branch of the inquiry.

So far as the continued belief in the rightfulness of polygamy is concerned by members of this cult there is no conflict of opinion. Such belief has never been discarded. Of all the witnesses testifying before your committee not one of high or low degree in regular standing in the organization declares an abandonment of his belief in the doctrine, and in so far as they make known their convictions they all affirm their continued adherence to it. In no single instance is it in evidence that any member of the organization, from the head of the church to its humblest disciple, has renounced belief in the doctrine of polygamy. Joseph F. Smith, the dominating spirit of this church, testified as follows:

> Mr. TAYLER. The revelation which Wilford Woodruff received in consequence of which the command to take plural wives was suspended did not, as you understand it, change the divine view of plural marriage, did it?
> Mr. SMITH. It did not change our belief at all.
> Mr. TAYLER. It did not change your belief at all?
> Mr. SMITH. Not at all, sir.
> Mr. TAYLER. You continued to believe that plural marriages were right?
> Mr. SMITH. We did. I do, at least. I do not answer for anybody else. I continued to believe as I did before.

One of the last witnesses sworn in behalf of the Senator, Professor Linford, president of Brigham Young College, the head of the chief educational institution of the State, a Mormon, but not a polygamist, testified:

> Mr. CARLISLE. Do you or do you not believe in the principle of plural marriage—that is to say, I do not now ask you to state whether you believe in it as lawful under present circumstances; but do you or do you do not believe it is right in and of itself?
> Answer. My belief in the principle does not extend to the carrying of the principle into practice under present conditions.
> Mr. CARLISLE. That is not an answer to my question. My question is, Do you believe that principle is right in and of itself, without regard to any law or any question it would involve?
> Answer. Yes, sir; I believe it is a correct principle. I believe the principle of plural marriage is as correct a principle to-day as it was then.

So from the head of the church and the head of the university comes the common affirmation that belief in polygamy as a principle of human conduct is still adhered to and maintained as a true tenet of the Utah Mormon faith. The fact of such existing and continued belief in polygamy is material only as giving color to the probability of its continued practice.

Let us inquire, then, whether this hierarchy not only believes in polygamy as an abstract principle, but continues the practice of polygamy and polygamous cohabitation and countenances the violation of laws prohibiting such crimes.

The evidence upon this point is so complete and overwhelming as to leave no doubt as to the truth of the allegation. It has passed beyond the region of controversy. The proof is indubitable that in spite of the manifesto of 1890, issued by the head of the church, counseling the suspension of polygamy; in spite of the most solemn pledges made by the convicted and imprisoned leaders in order to secure amnesty for past offenses; in spite of the expressed inhibition of the constitution of the State under which they live and upon the faith of which Utah was admitted into the Union; in spite of the statutory prohibition of the Commonwealth, it appears that a majority of the members of this hierarchy have continually and persistently lived in polygamy, and are to-day openly and confessedly defying the laws of the land prohibiting such crimes. The record is so shocking as to challenge credulity.

The first witness called in behalf of the protestants was Joseph F. Smith himself, the head of the church, who, from his position, would be more apt to be cognizant of the fact if it existed than anyone else, and could therefore speak with greater accuracy in relation to the continuance of these crimes. He testified as follows:

Mr. TAYLER. Is the cohabitation with one who is claimed to be a plural wife a violation of the law of the church as well as the law of the land?

Mr. SMITH. That was the case, and is the case even to-day. It is contrary to the rule of the church, and contrary, as well, to the law of the land for a man to cohabit with his wives. * * * I have cohabited with my wives; not openly—that is, not in a manner that I thought would be offensive to my neighbors; but I acknowledge them; I have visited them. They have borne me children since 1890, and I have done it, knowing the responsibility and knowing that I was amenable to the law. * * *

Mr. TAYLER. In 1892, Mr. Smith, how many wives did you have?

Mr. SMITH. I had five. * * *

Mr. TAYLER. How many children have been born to you by these wives since 1890?

Mr. SMITH. I had eleven children born since 1890.

Mr. TAYLER. Those are all the children that have been born to you since 1890?

Mr. SMITH. Yes, sir; those are all.

Mr. TAYLER. Were those children by all of your wives—that is, did all of your wives bear children?

Mr. SMITH. All of my wives bore children.

Mr. TAYLER. Since 1890?

Mr. SMITH. That is correct. I said that I have had born to me eleven children since 1890, each of my wives being the mother of from one to two of those children. * * *

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Smith, I will not press it, if you have any objection to stating how many children you have in all.

Mr. SMITH. Altogether?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. SMITH. I have had born to me, sir, forty-two children—twenty-one boys and twenty-one girls—and I am proud of every one of them. * * *

The CHAIRMAN. Do you obey the law in having five wives at this time and having them bear to you eleven children since the manifesto of 1890?

Mr. SMITH. Mr. Chairman, I have not claimed that in that case I have obeyed the law of the land.

I do not claim so, and, as I said before, that I prefer to stand my chances against the law. I should like to repeat in connection with this question that it is a well-known fact throughout all Utah, and I have never sought to disguise that fact in the least or to disclaim it, that I have 5 wives in Utah. My friends all know that—Gentiles and Jews and Mormons. They all know that I have 5 wives.

The committee was astounded to hear from this head of the church itself, not only that he believed in the rightfulness of polygamy as an abstract principle, but that he himself was daily exemplifying his belief by living in open and notorious polygamy in the capital city of the great State of Utah, and had been ever since the manifesto, and, more than that, that he proposed to continue the practice so long as he pleased, defiantly asserting that "The Congress of the United States has no business with my private conduct." We were amazed to learn from this head saint and seer, this prophet and revelator, this mouthpiece of God, this shepherd of a patient and suffering flock, this convicted and amnestied offender against law and decency, whose faith and honor had been hypothecated for himself and his followers for the observance of the law, confess that he was now living with 5 women as his wives, and had been ever since 1890 in open defiance of divine and human statutes, and had had 42 children, 11 of whom had been born to him since the manifesto.

But that is not the whole truth as it is to-day. The account of prophet and saint is entitled to further credit. If the public press is to be credited, this number has been augmented during the past year to 43, and while we are discussing the right of the representative of the hierarchy to a seat in this body we can imagine its saintly head sitting in the home of his fifth plural wife, rocking the cradle of the latest illegitimate offspring of his debauchery and crime, and with sanctimonious air singing the familiar hymn of his church:

Now the Gentile reign is o'er,
Darkness covers earth no more.
* * * *
Gentile tyrants sink to hell;
Now's the day of Israel.

Startling as was this disclosure, your committee was astounded when it appeared in the investigation that not only was the head of this church living in polygamy, but that a large number of his apostolic associates—at least eight of the twelve, including some of the very men who had petitioned for and received Executive clemency for their crimes from two Presidents—had been ever since the manifesto, and were at this very time, living in polygamous cohabitation with a multiplicity of wives in defiance of law and in violation of their plighted faith and honor.

This continued and open practice by the members of the governing body of this church is sufficient of itself, I submit, to establish the truth of the allegation in the protest that "it so exercises its authority as to inculcate and encourage a belief in polygamy and polygamous cohabitation." For what, I submit, could be more persuasive in inculcating and encouraging belief in polygamy and the practice of polygamous cohabitation than the force of example by those who are looked upon by their devotees not only as saints and prophets of God, but vicegerents of the Almighty.

Precept is instruction written in the sand; the tide flows over it and the record is gone. Example is graven on the rock, and the lesson is not soon forgot.

Ex-Senator George F. Edmunds, in speaking of the force of example, pertinently said:

The evidence so far obtained by the Senate committee investigating the case of Senator SMOOT discloses that some, at least, of the chief rulers of the Mormon Church have deliberately and continually carried on the practice of polygamy without prosecution or annoyance in the face of their pledges made to two Presidents of the United States, and have set an example naturally and almost necessarily to be followed by their church members and adherents without any danger of interference by the legislative or any other department of the government of the State of Utah. They know that Congress has no power, and that the State has no disposition to interfere.

But this is not all. The members of this hierarchy not only teach by example, but justify their conduct openly and declare their purpose to continue the practice, the law of God and man to the contrary notwithstanding. Joseph F. Smith, the head of the church, testified in response to an inquiry by the junior Senator from Texas, Mr. BAILEY, that—

Plural marriage has stopped, but I choose rather than abandon my children and their mothers to run my risk before the law. I want to say to you that it is the law of my State. It is not the law of Congress under which I am living, and by which I am punishable. The law of my State and the courts of my State have competent jurisdiction to deal with me in my offense to the law, and the Congress of the United States has no business with my private conduct any more than it has with the private conduct of any citizen of Utah or any other State. It is the law of the State to which I am amenable.

It will be observed that Mr. Smith denies the right of the United States to interfere with his private conduct as a citizen of the State of Utah touching the violation of her laws, affirming that he is amenable only to the laws of the State and subject only to the jurisdiction of her courts. He evidently understands the strength of his position, that he can have five wives or fifty within the limits of the State of Utah, and that the United States has no power to interfere to suppress the crime or punish the criminal. He knows that Congress has no power, and that the State has no disposition to interfere. With the National Government impotent and the State government under the masterful domination of the hierarchy, no wonder he is emboldened to declare that it is his purpose to persist in his career of crime and take his chances of punishment in the courts of a State which are made and unmade at his supreme will.

THE MANIFESTO PROHIBITS POLYGAMOUS COHABITATION.

For years he has lived in the capital city of Utah, going in and out before her people in open defiance of the law, unquestioned and unmolested. So long, therefore, as this hierarchy can continue its domination, just so long may it be expected that these crimes against society and the State will continue and the offenders go unwhipped of justice. While it is undoubtedly true, as Mr. Smith declares, "that the Congress has no business with his private conduct," yet when he seeks to thrust a representative of a criminal organization into either House of Congress it then becomes the "business," as well as the duty of the body to which he is accredited, to invoke for its protection that provision of the Constitution which imposes upon it the right to judge of the "elections, returns, and qualifications of its own members."

But what excuse is proffered for this continued criminal life? It is declared that the manifesto of 1890 only interdicted future plural marriages, and that those who had entered into polygamous relations prior to the manifesto were at liberty to continue cohabitation with their several wives. But this contention is futile in face of the declaration of Wilford Woodruff himself, through whom it was promulgated, who declared that "It was intended to stop polygamous cohabitation, as well as future plural marriages," in which interpretation the succeeding polygamous heads of the church, including Joseph F. Smith himself, have reluctantly concurred. In reply to a question by the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] Mr. Smith said:

The manifesto declared positively the prohibition of plural marriages, and in examination before the master in chancery the president of the church and other leading members of the church agreed that the spirit and meaning of that revelation applied to unlawful cohabitation as well as to plural marriages.

Senator BAILEY. I understand you, both plural marriage and unlawful cohabitation are forbidden by the statutes of Utah and the revelation of God. Is that true?

Mr. SMITH. That is the spirit of it, sir.

Any other construction of the manifesto is not in harmony with the understanding of the two Presidents from whom amnesty was obtained. The amnesty granted both by President Harrison and President Cleveland proceeded upon the supposition that not only the practice of plural marriages, but polygamous cohabitation had been prohibited and was abandoned. Joseph F. Smith, in reply to a question put by the lamented Senator from Massachusetts, Mr. Hoar, then a member of the committee, admitted that by continuing to cohabit with his plural wives, though taken before the manifesto, he was not only violating the law of the land, but the mandate of the Almighty.

CONDITIONS ON WHICH AMNESTY WAS GRANTED.

President Harrison, in his proclamation, declared:

Whereas Congress defined the crime of "bigamy," "polygamy," and "unlawful cohabitation" * * * and it is represented that the adherents of such church have abstained from plural marriages and "polygamous cohabitation" * * * and the officers of said church have applied for amnesty, pledging their faithful observance of the laws against plural marriage and "unlawful cohabitation" * * * and whereas amnesty has been granted to individual applicants, conditioned upon their observance of the law against "unlawful cohabitation" * * * therfore I, Benjamin Harrison, grant full amnesty to all persons liable to penalties by reason of "unlawful cohabitation," and who have since November 1, 1890, abstained from "unlawful cohabitation."

President Cleveland's proclamation of amnesty was equally explicit upon the question of polygamous cohabitation. More than this, when the manifesto was issued it was given out in the public press and in interviews with the heads of the Mormon Church that "polygamous cohabitation," as well as the taking of new wives, was included in the manifesto.

And yet this head of the hierarchy declares his purpose to continue to defy the law of the land and public decency, submitting only to the laws of the State government under his complete thraldom, backed by public sentiment, which he declares is content to permit him to revel in the debaucheries of his harem unquestioned and unmolested.

But this is not the head and front of the offending. Not only is it established that a majority of the hierarchy is living in polygamous cohabitation, but the evidence points with unerring certainty to the fact that at least five of these apostles, George Teasdale, Abram H. Cannon, John W. Taylor, M. F. Cowley, and M. W. Merrill, have taken additional wives since the manifesto in open defiance of its express prohibition. Aside from this it is shown by the testimony beyond all controversy not only that the majority of the apostles are living in polygamous cohabitation, including the president of the twelve, but that this practice prevails to an alarming extent throughout Utah and in adjacent States and Territories. As to the extent of this practice nothing definite can be known. Plural marriages are performed in secret in darkened rooms, on the highways remote from habitation, and frequently in Mexico and other places without the jurisdiction of the United States. The guilty parties then returning to Utah and there, following the example of their president and a majority of the apostles, live in polygamous cohabitation, unquestioned and unmolested, in full membership and communion with the Utah Mormon Church. With the head of the church and a majority of the apostles living in open polygamy, is it any wonder that the practice continues, and, for myself, I expect to see it continue and increase until by an amendment to the Federal Constitution the practice is inhibited everywhere throughout the United States.

As ex-Senator Edmunds, speaking of this condition well said:

All this is consistent with more than half a century of its history, and should surprise nobody except those whose generous and confiding faith in promises led them to believe that the settled polity of a great and powerful church organization would be or remain reversed when that organization should become independent of the only power it had any reason to fear.

POLYGAMY COMMENDED AND APPROVED BY THE HIERARCHY.

But not only are polygamy and polygamous cohabitation inculcated by the daily lives of the governing body of the church, but in innumerable ways is their practice commended and approved. The doctrine of monogamy that "one man should have one wife, and one woman but one husband," contained in the Book of Mormon and transcribed into the Book of Doctrines and Covenants, has been torn therefrom by this Utah sect, and the doctrine of polygamy substituted therefor, where it is retained to-day and published in the Book of Doctrines and Covenants and placed in the hands of Mormon teachers and scattered broadcast, while the manifesto, the antidote for this poison, is carefully excluded and withheld from the publication. Thus is the doctrine of polygamy promulgated and kept alive as an existing tenet of this Utah Mormon faith. Not only by the written word is this infamous doctrine sanctioned, but the living oracles of the church do not hesitate to justify the crime.

When President Snow, in 1900, stated that the Mormon Church had abandoned the practice of polygamy and the solemnization of plural marriages, and that the church did not advise or encourage unlawful cohabitation on the part of any of its members, Apostle Cannon, after denouncing the law against unlawful cohabitation as unconstitutional, expressed the fear that—

Some sneaking whelps might use this declaration of President Snow as a pretext for deserting some of their wives. If they did, they are the fellows that ought to be disciplined.

Apostle Penrose, referring to the effect of convictions for polygamy, declared in the Deseret News, the official organ of the church:

No church member would suffer, so far as his standing in the church is concerned, because he has been convicted. No one has ever lost religious prestige because he had been convicted in a criminal court.

George M. Cannon, a leading member of the church, declared:

I do not believe that any man who entered into polygamous relations prior to the manifesto should be disturbed in these relations by the church or any member of the same. I do not believe any man who continues such relations to be guilty of moral turpitude.

Joseph F. Smith, the sainted head of the church, pardoned for his crimes upon the pledge of his honor to obey the law, after his testimony before the committee, wherein his polygamous relations were disclosed, and as recently as 1904, declared in a public address in the tabernacle at Salt Lake City that if he were to discontinue the polygamous relations with his plural wives he should be forever damned and forever deprived of the companionship of God and those most dear to him throughout all eternity.

When complaint was made against Heber J. Grant, one of the twelve apostles, for living in polygamous cohabitation, he was at once promoted by the first presidency and the twelve apostles to a foreign mission, declared by Smith to be both important and honorable. A book entitled "Ready References," published under the auspices of the Mormon Church for the use and guidance of missionaries and students, is devoted chiefly to an advocacy of polygamy.

In 1898, at a conference of young people's societies, a Mrs. Freeze, a Mormon, defended the practice of polygamy, not only as being right, but a divine command.

Apostle Woodruff stated that belief in polygamy was as much a part of the faith of the Mormon Church to-day as it ever was, and that while in deference to the laws of the United States plural marriages were not practiced at the present time, it was nevertheless believed to be right, and the Government was condemned for suppressing it, and the young people present were admonished that they could not deny this part of the Mormon belief without at the same time denying the prophet.

In a report of the Utah Commission, made after the manifesto, it is stated that polygamous marriages are being conducted in Utah by the church, and asserted that some forty polygamous marriages could be accounted for, and the total percentage in the Mormon Church was 12,000 out of 51,000, but that records of plural marriages are kept secret in the Mormon temples.

Angus M. Cannon, the possessor of three wives, as late as 1904 is exalted to be a patriarch of the Mormon Church.

It is a significant fact that no one who has taken a plural wife since 1890 has been punished by the church authorities.

Plural marriage performed in Mexico by a lawful priest of the Mormon Church is considered by the church as ecclesiastical, legal, and valid.

In Idaho resolutions against polygamy and polygamous cohabitation were opposed by members of the Mormon Church as being hostile to the church.

When the records of marriages in the Mormon Church were called for by the committee, the head of the church refused to permit the book containing the records of plural marriages to be brought before the committee.

J. M. Tanner, a polygamist and reputed to have taken a plural wife since the manifesto, is appointed superintendent of the Sunday schools of the Mormon Church throughout the world, the Senator concurring in the selection.

In 1903 Heber J. Grant stated before the students in the State University of Salt Lake City that he gave $50 for himself—

> $50 for each of my wives. I have got two wives, and I would have a third if it were not for the law.

I submit, therefore, in the light of all the testimony in the case, it can not be successfully contended that the hierarchy, of which the Senator is a member, does not use its authority to inculcate and encourage a belief in polygamy and polygamous cohabitation and protect and honor those who violate the laws prohibiting such crime.

REED SMOOT RESPONSIBLE FOR ACTS OF THE ORGANIZATION OF WHICH HE IS A MEMBER.

It remains to inquire whether the Senator, by being a member of this polygamous hierarchy, affiliating with and constituting a part of such organization and participating in its councils, has disqualified himself by reason thereof for membership in this body. The contention is made that, conceding all the allegations against this governing body to be true, yet it in no way affects the right and title of the Senator to a seat in this Chamber. This is the crucial question.

It was conceded by counsel for the Senator at the outset of the investigation that if he was a polygamist in fact, that, upon principle and precedent, would be sufficient ground for his exclusion, but the contention is made that to be connected with and a member of a band of polygamists in no way exposes him to such condemnation. The consideration of this question necessarily involves not only the character of the hierarchy as a whole, its teaching and practice, but the conduct of the Senator as a member of that body in connection therewith. As to the character of the hierarchy itself, I think I am justified in saying, in the light of history and the testimony, that from the time Brigham Young and his followers entered the Territory of Utah in 1847 until this hour the organization has been a criminal one. And what was the character of this hierarchy as a whole when the Senator became identified with it?

At the time of the manifesto in 1890, every member of the first presidency, the president and his two counselors, together with the twelve apostles, with but a single exception, was a notorious polygamist and living in polygamous cohabitation with a multiplicity of wives—from two to nine each. In 1896, the year of Utah's admission into the Union, the first presidency and the twelve apostles were unchanged, either in personnel or practices, all but one continuing in polygamy. In 1900, four years after Utah's admission into the Union, there was no change in the practice of the individual members of this governing body, except one of the apostles had ceased his polygamous relations as the result of a divorce obtained from him by his legal wife. The only change in its personnel was the elevation of the senior Senator from Utah, in April, 1900, to fill a vacancy in the apostolate caused by the death of one of its members. It is important to note in passing that when the senior Senator from Utah became a member of this hierarchy, in 1900, the three persons of the first presidency were all polygamists, ten of the twelve of his apostolic associates were living in polygamous cohabitation, and that the Senator owes his elevation to the apostleship to the formal action of this body of polygamists. The very year and hour the senior Senator voluntarily identified himself with this governing body of fifteen men, fourteen of its number were living in polygamy, and the members of this hierarchy were then able jointly to muster a harem of sixty women, whom they claimed, recognized, and cohabited with as their wives.

To contend that the Senator, born and reared in Utah, and identified with the Mormon organization from childhood, instructed and nurtured in its doctrines, was ignorant of the character of this hierarchy and the criminal practices of its individual members, challenges belief and would impeach his intelligence. He must have understood perfectly well the character of the organization and the criminality of the members with whom he was to cooperate and commune.

The vital question, therefore, is, Can one become a member of and identify himself with a band of lawbreakers, knowing them to be such, participate in their counsels and sustain them in their conferences, and yet escape all responsibility for their unlawful acts? Such a contention will not stand the test of either law or reason. An eminent legal authority says:

> Every person entering into a conspiracy or common design already formed is deemed in law a party to all acts done by any of the other parties, before or afterwards, in furtherance of the common design. The principle on which the acts and declarations of other conspirators, and acts done at different times, are admitted in evidence against the persons prosecuted is that by the act of conspiring together the conspirators have jointly assumed to themselves, as a body, the attribute of individuality so far as regards the prosecution of the common design, thus rendering whatever is done or said by anyone in furtherance of that design a part of the res gestæ and, therefore, the act of all.

This doctrine is sustained by an unbroken line of authority, elementary and judicial, and I am sure can not be successfully controverted. The case of Spies and others v. The People is directly in point in support of this contention. It will be remembered in this case that Spies was arrested and tried upon a charge of the murder of one Degan by throwing a bomb which caused Degan's death. There was no evidence in the case that Spies threw the bomb, but it was proven that he belonged to an organization known as the International Association of Chicago, having for its object the overthrow of law and the destruction of government, and that members of this organization had advised the use of any force necessary to resist the law and its officers.

In denying the motion for a new trial in the anarchist case the judge who presided at the trial used the following language:

> Now, on the question of the instructions, whether these defendants, or any of them, anticipated or expected the throwing of the bomb on the night of the 4th of May is not a question which I need to consider, because the conviction can not be sustained, if that is necessary to a conviction, however much evidence of it there may be, because the instructions do not go upon that ground. The jury were not instructed to find the defendants guilty if they believed they participated in the throwing of that bomb, or advised or encouraged the throwing of that bomb, or anything of that sort. Conviction has not gone upon the ground that they did have any personal participation in the particular act which caused the death of Degan, but the conviction proceeds upon the ground, under the instructions, that they had generally by speech and print advised large classes of the people, not particular individuals, but large classes, to commit murder, and have left the commission, time, and place to the individual will and whim, or caprice, or whatever it may be, of each individual man who listened to their advices, and influenced by that advice somebody not known did throw the bomb which caused Degan's death.

It will be observed in this case that the conviction was not had upon the ground that Spies had committed the murder or participated in it, but he was convicted because he belonged to an organization which advised the commission of such acts.

The same doctrine is held in the case of Davis v. Beeson, decided by the Supreme Court in 1889. The Revised Statutes of the State of Idaho provided that—

> No person who is a member of any order, organization, or association which teaches, advises, counsels, or encourages its members, devotees, or any other person to commit the crime of bigamy, polygamy, or any other crime defined by law, either as a rite or ceremony of such order, organization, association, or otherwise, is permitted to vote at any election, or to hold any position or office of honor, trust, or profit within this Territory.

The Supreme Court upheld this provision as constitutional. It will be observed that this act disfranchises persons, not for the commission of the crime of polygamy, but upon the ground that they belong to an organization which "teaches, counsels, and encourages others to commit the crime of polygamy."

In the case of Wooley v. Watkins, Second Idaho Reports, the court say:

> Orders, organizations, and associations, by whatever name they may be called, which teach, advise, counsel, or encourage the practice or commission of acts forbidden by law, are criminal organizations. To become and continue to be members of such organizations or associations are such overt acts of recognition and participation as make them particeps criminis and as guilty in contemplation of criminal law as though they actually engaged in furthering their unlawful objects and purposes.

It is established beyond all controversy that a majority of the ruling authorities of the Mormon Church are living in open polygamy, and thereby encouraging the practice of polygamy and polygamous cohabitation, many of them having taken plural wives since the manifesto, and that the Senator, as a member of such organization, is cognizant of their crimes and indifferent to their perpetration.

ACTS OF REED SMOOT ENCOURAGING POLYGAMY.

The Senator's complicity in encouraging polygamy and polygamous cohabitation does not consist wholly in the fact that he is one of the governing body of that church. By repeated acts he has, as a member of the quorum of the twelve apostles, given active aid and support to the hierarchy in its defiance of the statutes of this State and the laws of common decency and in its encouragement of polygamous practices by both precept and example. One of the first acts of the Senator after his elevation to the apostolate was to assist by vote and influence in the elevation of Joseph F. Smith to the presidency of the Mormon Church, with full knowledge that he was living in polygamy. He has since repeatedly voted to sustain him, and even after full knowledge that Joseph F. Smith was living in polygamous cohabitation and had asserted his intention to continue in this course in defiance of the laws of God and man. He aided in the selection of Heber J. Grant as president of a mission when it was a matter of common notoriety that Apostle Grant was a polygamist. He voted to fill a vacancy in the apostolate by the election of Charles W. Penrose, even after testimony had been given in the investigation showing him to be a polygamist. It is difficult to perceive how the Senator could have given greater encouragement to polygamy and polygamous cohabitation than by thus assisting in conferring one of the highest honors of the church on one who has been and was then guilty of these crimes. As trustee of an educational institution he made no protest against the continuance in office of Benjamin Cluff, jr., a noted polygamist, as president of that institution, nor did he make any effort to discover the truth that said Cluff had taken another plural wife long after the manifesto, nor did he protest as such trustee against the election of George H. Brimhall, another polygamist, in the place of Benjamin Cluff, jr.

Since his election as an apostle of the Mormon Church the Senator has been intimately associated with the first president and with those who, with himself, constitute the council of the twelve apostles, and the fact that many of his apostolic associates were living in polygamous relations with a multiplicity of wives is a matter of such common knowledge in the community that it is incredible that the Senator should be wholly ignorant of the fact. Yet at no time has he uttered a syllable of protest against the conduct of his associates in the leadership of the Mormon Church, but on the contrary has sustained them in their encouragement of polygamy and polygamous cohabitation, both by his acts and by his silence.

Some of his more conspicuous acts in that regard have been adverted to, and his silence has been scarcely less culpable than his acts, for, in view of what has been said, it will hardly be contended, I think, that in order to render the Senator unworthy of a place in this body, he must have been an active participant in the crimes of his fellow-members in the hierarchy. Under the circumstances, his silence must be construed as giving his consent to the designs, acts, and course of conduct of those with whom he has been and is associated in the government of the Utah Mormon Church. That silence alone may make one amenable to punishment for the commission of an unlawful act in which he took no part is confirmed by no less an authority than the present Secretary of War, who was for some time one of the most eminent members of the judiciary of the United States, and who in his official utterances must be presumed to have in mind the rules of law, as well as the dictates of common sense. In his latest annual report the Secretary refers to the dismissal from the service of an entire battalion of United States soldiers because of the commission of a crime by a very few of their number. With the criminal act itself by far the greater number of the members of the battalion had absolutely nothing to do, their offense consisting in their keeping silence in regard to their knowledge of the perpetrators of the unlawful act. Concerning their guilt in thus being silent, Secretary Taft says:

> Instead of giving to their officers or to the military inspectors who were directed to make the examination the benefit of anything which they knew tending to lead to a conviction of the guilty persons, there was a conspiracy of silence on the part of the many who must have known something of importance in this regard. * * *
> Under these circumstances the question arises, Is the Government helpless? Must it continue in its service a battalion many of the members of which showed their willingness to condone a crime of a capital character, committed by from ten to twenty of its members, and put on a front of silence and ignorance which enables the criminals to escape just punishment?

The Secretary answers this question with a vigorous negative. And the question may well be asked here, Is the Senate of the United States bound to admit to its membership one who shows his willingness to condone the crimes of the members of the hierarchy to which he belongs and puts on a front of silence and ignorance, which is designed by him to encourage his associates in their nefarious conduct?

I will read what he is reported to have declared at the October conference of 1905. On the 6th of October, 1905, he addressed the seventy-sixth semiannual conference of the Mormon Church, and the Deseret News, the organ of the church, reprinted his remarks as follows:

> I believe that the Latter-Day Saints, who have the spirit of God in them, never had more confidence in a man or a set of men than they have in the presidency of the church to-day.
> I am indeed thankful for my standing in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints [Mormon]. When I study the history of the church I find that it is at all times the same. I am not ashamed of the power and position of the Mormon Church. I say to Joseph F Smith to-day, this people will never turn against thee on the testimony of a traitor.

In view of the evidence and the law in this case applicable thereto, I do not see how the contention can be successfully maintained that the Senator is entitled to a seat in this Chamber. Suppose the Senator, instead of having his credentials presented by a fellow-member, had offered the same in person and said to the Senate "I desire to be entirely frank with this body, and therefore I wish to state that, while I hold the certificate of election from the legislature of the State of Utah in due form, yet the Senate should know that I am a member of the Utah branch of the Mormon Church and one of its twelve apostles, so called, who, with the first presidency, constitute a self-perpetuating body of fifteen men and the ruling authorities of such church; that while I am not a practicing polygamist, yet a majority of my associates are, and are now and have been living in polygamous cohabitation ever since the manifesto; that the head of the church, Joseph F. Smith, is to-day living in polygamous cohabitation with five women, by whom he has had forty-three children; twelve born since the manifesto; that he openly avows his purpose to continue such practice in defiance of all law, human or divine; that no one high in authority in the church is permitted to be a candidate for or accept a public office without first obtaining permission from the church, and I received such permission from Joseph F. Smith, the head of the organization, before becoming a candidate for the Senate, without which permission I could not have been elected; that the legislature electing me was composed of a majority of the adherents of the Mormon Church; that I sustain President Smith at every conference of the church and have never questioned or protested against his course of conduct, and, while not advocating polygamy, I have never preached against it; that we interfere with the functions of the State, and that I am obligated to avenge the death of the prophet, Joseph, and to enjoin its observance upon my children." Had the Senator made such a statement to the Senate upon his first appearance, what Senator would have voted for his admission?

With this state of facts disclosed by the testimony now before the Senate, and upon which the report of the committee is based, what Senator can conscientiously vote for his retention?

THE ENDOWMENT OATH.

Another and final reason assigned why the Senator should not retain his seat in the Senate is that, as a member of the Mormon organization, he has taken an obligation incompatible with his oath as a Senator of the United States, and is thereby incapacitated from faithfully performing the duties of a Senator. There is no question but that this organization at some time in the course of its history, and under the administration of some one of its presidents, probably Brigham Young, was converted into a secret organization with signs, symbols, and oaths. A ceremony is performed in secret, called "taking the endowments," and there is no question but that the Senator took these endowments and oaths, and that they are continued until to-day and are a part of the regular ceremony of the church. Many witnesses testified in a general way with more or less particularity as to the nature of these obligations, but Professor Wolf, of Brigham Young College, having been present when the obligation was administered many times, the last occasion being as late as 1904, gives in exact words the obligation as follows:

> You and each of you do covenant and promise that you will pray, and never cease to pray, Almighty God to avenge the blood of the prophet upon this nation, and that you will teach the same to your children and to your children's children to the third and fourth generations.

The fact that such an obligation is taken by those who go through the endowment house is unquestioned, and is of such a character as to force the courts to hold that it was a bar to citizenship. In the third judicial court of Utah, in 1889, on the application of John Moore and others to become citizens of the United States, the court in denying the application said:

> In these applications the usual evidence on behalf of the applicants as to residence, moral character, etc., was introduced at a former hearing, and was deemed sufficient. Objection was made, however, to the admission of John Moore and William J. Edgar, upon the ground that they were members of the Mormon Church, and also because they had gone through the endowment house of that church, and there had taken an oath or obligation incompatible with the oath of citizenship they would be required to take if admitted.

Investigation was had, witnesses called, and the parties were excluded from citizenship upon the ground, as the court say:

> The evidence established beyond any reasonable doubt that the endowment ceremonies are inconsistent with the oath an applicant for citizenship is required to take, and that the oaths, obligations, or covenants there made or entered into, are incompatible with the obligations and duties of citizens of the United States.

THE ALLEGATIONS IN THE PROTEST SUSTAINED.

Every witness before the committee belonging to the Mormon faith now in harmony with the church, from the president down, including the Senator himself, refused to disclose the obligation.

If the oath administered in the endowment house and assumed by the Senator is of such a character as to bar an alien from citizenship in the United States, by what process of reasoning does the same oath become a passport to a seat in the Senate of the United States?

In the light of all the testimony in the case, it is submitted that the material portions of the allegation in the protest against the right of the Senator from Utah to a seat in this Chamber have been established, that the Senator is one of a self-perpetuating body of fifteen men, constituting the ruling authorities of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints, holding the office of apostle therein; that such ruling authorities of said church claim and are believed by their followers to possess supreme authority, divinely sanctioned, to shape the belief and control the conduct of those under them in all matters whatsoever, civil and religious, temporal and spiritual; that they assume to themselves authority in church and state, and so exercise that authority as to encourage a belief in and the practice of polygamy and polygamous cohabitation, in violation of the laws of the State prohibiting such crimes and regardless of pledges made for the purpose of obtaining statehood, and of covenants made with the people of the United States. That they protect and honor those who, with themselves, violate the laws of the State of Utah; and that, as rulers of said church, they dominate the State and interfere with its functions.

It is submitted, therefore, that the Senator, by becoming a member of and identifying himself with such organization and participating in its functions, has disqualified himself for membership in this body. The law fixes his status and measures the magnitude of his offending. An organization that fosters and encourages crime, tramples upon all law, human and divine, practices polygamy and polygamous cohabitation, desecrates the home, debases man, degrades womanhood, debauches public morals, strikes at the Christian civilization of the age, undermines and shakes the foundations of society and government, destroys the sanctity of the marriage relation, defies the authority of the State and National Government, registers an oath of hostility to the American nation, and brings the name and fame of the good people of Utah into disrepute, and shame and humiliation to the American people—I submit that such an organization is not entitled to have its representative in the Senate of the United States.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

On motion of Mr. LITTAUER, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 21574) the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, Mr. HEPBURN in the chair.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] as he may desire.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I have just been notified that I might submit some remarks on this bill. I shall violate to-day the general rule which obtains here in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union in considering an appropriation bill, and that rule is, as I understand it, and it has been pretty general, not to speak of the bill before the committee at all, but on some other subject than that to which the bill relates. I will on this occasion speak strictly to provisions of the bill. I understood the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee on appropriations yesterday to say in his opening remarks that so faithful was the work of the subcommittee in preparing this bill that when it came to the whole Committee on Appropriations it was accepted without alteration of any kind. I think that the bill was accepted by the whole of that committee after a very few minutes' consideration, the time being taken up principally by those who favored the bill in all respects. I do not rise, Mr. Chairman, to-day to attack it in any general way, but there is a provision in the bill that I regard of great importance and that I am very sure got into the bill without any testimony before the whole committee or the subcommittee, so far as I know, from any source to justify it.

PENSION APPEAL BOARD.

That provision will be found, I believe, on page 106 of the bill. It is proposed there to emasculate the Board of Pension Appeals, in the Interior Department, practically to disable it in every respect and to cut it almost in two in point of numbers and working force on the Board. Now, I am sure I can make good my statement that there is not one syllable of testimony taken before the committee that warrants this, nor do the facts warrant any interference with that Board as it now exists. This has been a very important board in the administration of the pension laws of this country. I may not be as familiar as to dates as some Members of the House or the committee, but a few years ago, perhaps three or four years ago, this Board was made up of twelve permanent members of the Board, and it was then found to be from two to five years behind time in its work, so that the old soldier who appealed from the decision of the Pension Office had as much hope of getting his appeal decided, and no more, than he had of going to the grave before it was decided.

The Congress of the United States listened to the appeal of these old tottering soldiers and decided to increase that Pension Appeal Board in the Interior Department twenty members, so as to make it up to thirty-two in all, and then, Mr. Chairman, I do not want to forget that the Assistant Secretary of the Interior, who has charge especially of this Pension Board, had loaned to him, for a time at least, two assistant attorneys from the Attorney-General's office, and he had another from the Land Office, so that in effect he had thirty-five members of this Board working industriously in the matter of passing upon appeals taken from the Pension Bureau. The work was progressing rapidly toward coming up even with the appeals, so that a year ago and for this fiscal year the Congress concluded that it would be wise to reduce the Pension Board in the Interior Department, leaving it at the original twelve permanent members and reducing the additional or temporary members of the Board to sixteen, leaving the total number twenty-eight, and the Assistant Secretary of the Interior returned at the end of the last fiscal year the two attorneys from the Attorney-General's office, and the use of the clerk from the Land Office was discontinued, so that we had but twenty-eight last year. Those twenty-eight proved to be very efficient, and they disposed of a very large number of appealed cases. Subsequently they passed on appeals at the rate of about 800 a month, and before that the Board averaged a thousand a month; but with sixteen in addition to the twelve, they continued during this fiscal year to dispose of about 800 a month; and so at a recent time they had disposed of current appeals, including old delayed returns, until they were within about seventeen hundred of being up to date, without any appeal cases in arrears.

The committee that reports this bill now says that by the provisions found on page 106 of the bill that the number of our permanent appeal board shall be nine, with three detailed from the present sixteen additional, and then ask three additional, to be taken by the Secretary of the Interior from the Pension Office, persons who have already been engaged in the work of dealing with the pensions that have been appealed from perhaps. It will be seen that this reduction will bring down the number of our pension board to almost one-half the number now on it.

In the report of this committee there is this stated and this only:

A reduction is made of thirteen members of the board of pension appeals, at $2,000 each.

Not one word of explanation follows to give any reason or excuse for the reduction. Now, Mr. Chairman, the number of appeals filed per month is about 800. If the board is practically cut in two the number that will be disposed of, we will see, will be about 450 in the proportion that the board will remain efficient. So that we are certain that the appeals will again continue, as in the past, to run behind, and if the appeal board dealt alone with the current appeals at the rate of about 350 per month it would leave about 1,700 undisposed of cases to go on accumulating. Whichever way they did it, that would be adding to the undisposed of cases each month, and at the end of the next fiscal year we would have in the neighborhood of 6,000 undisposed of pension appeal cases.

Is this Board important? It has proved to be a very efficient one. About 9 per cent of the appeals as perfected—I mean perfected in the sense that they got fully and fairly before the Appeal Board—were reversals of the Pension Bureau. But the result has been greater than that in favor of the applicants for pensions. They have established through these appeals precedents and rulings which govern the Pension Commissioner or Pension Bureau in the determination of other like cases. But in the process of appeal from the Pension Bureau of the Interior Department the first step taken is for the Commissioner of Pensions, through his force, to reexamine and review the cases upon which appeals have been filed, and in about 6 per cent of the cases the Bureau has reversed itself, so that the effect of this Pension Appeal Board has been to dispose, favorably to the pensioners, of about 15 per cent of the appeals filed.

Now, I have said this much for the purpose of having it understood that the question here is one of importance to the applicants for pensions. If there be those here who are opposed to these soldiers in their old days having a review at all, then let them say so and then vote to abolish the Board because they are opposed to their being pensioned under the laws of the United States. Let us not by any means of this kind fail to give them a full and fair hearing. If we err at all, why not err on the side of the old and broken soldier? But there is no danger of this Appeal Board being idle any part of the next fiscal year, and the Secretary of the Interior can be relied on to protect the Government.

Now, I am not going to give you the result alone of my own investigation of this question, but I am going to give you the testimony taken before the subcommittee of the Appropriation Committee when and before they reported this legislation. I call attention first to a letter written by the Assistant Secretary, Jesse E. Wilson, dated September 15, 1906, and addressed to the Hon. Thomas Ryan, Acting Secretary of the Interior, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, September 15, 1906.

SIR: Relative to the estimates for the next fiscal year, commencing July 1, 1907, for the members of the board of pension appeals, I have the honor to submit the following statement and suggestions:

You will recall that in the appropriation for the current year, commencing July 1, 1906, Congress provided for the continuance of 16 additional temporary members at $2,000 each instead of 20, as previously provided for. It was also provided that such employment shall cease at the end of the current fiscal year, and that vacancies occurring in this additional force during the year shall not be filled.

In my report to the honorable Secretary February 14, 1906, relative to the prospective work of the board, it was shown that about 600 appeals and motions had been filed each month, and attention was also invited to the fact that it was quite impossible to anticipate the volume of work connected with the board, or rather to definitely state what force will be necessary to dispose of the pending appeals and keep up with the current work.

During the last seven months, commencing February, 1906, there have been filed 5,689 new appeals and motions, an average of over 800 each month, showing an increase of 200 in the monthly average.

During that period 6,069 cases have been disposed of—an average of 867 each month. It thus appears that during the last seven months the number of pending appeals has been reduced from 2,074 to 1,694, a reduction of 380.

It is quite probable the number of new appeals will increase as we approach the current work. Every effort is being made to dispose of pending appeals as rapidly as possible consistent with efficient service, but with the prospective increase of the number of appeals, and the number now pending, it does not now seem wise to reduce the force at the end of the current year.

It is therefore respectfully suggested that Congress be recommended to continue the appropriation for the 16 additional members for the next fiscal year, commencing July 1, 1907.

Attention is also respectfully invited to the appropriation for the permanent members of the board for the current year.

It provides for 9 members at $2,000 each; also for 3 additional members to be selected from the Pension Office, etc. The latter were appointed seven years ago and have continued since as permanent members of the board. So that the appropriation should be for 12 permanent members of the board instead of 9, and avoid the confusion arising from designating each year three new members appointed from the Pension Office.

Very respectfully,

JESSE E. WILSON,
Assistant Secretary.

Hon. THOMAS RYAN, Acting Secretary.

Mr. PAYNE. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. KEIFER. Certainly.

Mr. PAYNE. Does the gentleman who makes that statement give any reason for the prospective increase of appeals? My offhand judgment would be that they have decreased instead of increased. As he states the matter, they will be increased, without giving any reasons for it, as far as the gentleman read. I want to know if he gave any reason for it?

Mr. KEIFER. I do not think there has been any reason stated. The fact is stated that the increase has taken place and——

Mr. PAYNE. He says that he expects them to increase.

Mr. BONYNGE. There had been an actual increase.

Mr. KEIFER. There has been an actual increase. On page 76 of the Book of Estimates——

Mr. PAYNE. That would explain it.

Mr. KEIFER. Now, while I am on this letter question, I think there is another one somewhere of a later date. I do not remember that this one I refer to now——

Mr. NORRIS. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. KEIFER. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. I want to read again, for the benefit of the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], a statement in this letter, as follows:

During the last seven months, commencing February, 1906, there have been filed 5,689 new appeals and motions, an average of over 800 each month, showing an increase of 200 in the monthly average.

Mr. KEIFER. I thought I had another letter, but maybe I have mislaid it. I will see.

There was another letter written, Mr. Chairman, on this subject, of a much later date, addressed to Hon. L. N. LITTAUER, House of Representatives, dated December 6, 1906. I do not remember that this letter was shown to the committee by the person to whom it was addressed. I do not know that it was ever disclosed to the subcommittee, but I only wish now to put it into the RECORD, for it brings up some later figures. I will read it:

Hon. L. N. LITTAUER,
House of Representatives.

SIR: In making my statement before your committee the other day, relative to the appropriation for the Board of Pension Appeals, I think I informed you that the figures as to the number of appeals filed and the number of cases disposed of were given largely from memory, and might not be strictly accurate. Your attention is invited to the letter of the Assistant Secretary to the Acting Secretary, dated September 15, 1906, copied in the Book of Estimates, page 76, which will give you some idea of the increasing number of appeals for seven months commencing with the month of February, 1906.

I desire also to call your attention to the following comparative statement showing the number of appeals filed and disposed of for five months commencing July, 1905, and the number filed and disposed of for the same period in 1906:

Date.	Appeals filed.	Disposed of.
July, 1905	488	476
August, 1905	600	464
September, 1905	517	976
October, 1905	523	981
November, 1905	530	937
Total	2,658	3,834

You see how efficient this Board was, as it was organized in 1905. The total appeals filed for that year for the five months were 2,658, and there were disposed of by the Board as then constituted 3,834.

Now I come to 1906, when the Board consisted of only twenty-eight members. I will read that:

Date.	Appeals filed.	Disposed of.
July, 1906	872	880
August, 1906	782	720
September, 1906	701	645
October, 1906	931	873
November, 1906	834	866
Total	4,120	3,984

This table shows the number disposed of by the Board as constituted when the twenty-eight gentlemen occupied it. I do not say that they dealt only with the current appeals, but if they dealt with those alone, they would not have kept pace with them.

You will observe that during the five months the average number of appeals filed per month in 1905 were 531, while during the five months in 1906 they have increased to an average per month of 824.

I will also state that at the close of the month of November, 1906, there were 1,776 appeals pending.

It is clear to my mind that if the increase of appeals filed continues, which is quite probable, the proposed reduction of the force by dropping the sixteen temporary members of the Board will result in increasing very largely the arrearages.

Very respectfully,
JESSE E. WILSON,
Assistant Secretary.

Now, turning to the testimony of this Assistant Secretary taken before the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations having this bill in charge, I find that Mr. Wilson was put under cross-examination by the distinguished members of the subcommittee for the purpose of trying to get him to admit that there was some excuse for reducing this Board below its present number, but in every case this effort failed, and the question at last being put, "Do you suggest the continuance of this entire Board with sixteen men as it was?" Mr. Wilson answered "I do." Again, Mr. Burleson asked him this question: "You think this ought to be continued one more year?" Mr. Wilson answered: "Yes, and that the vacancies be not filled." What he refers to was that if vacancies occurred in the sixteen during the year they shall not be filled, and that is the present provision of the law.

All the testimony, from every source, without any variation whatever, shows, and in fact demonstrates, that unless you intend to cut the Board down so that it will no longer be efficient, unless you intend to increase the arrears of pension appeals in the Interior Department, you must continue the Board at its present number. It has been extremely efficient as now continued. Think of these men going over and disposing of an average of 824 appeal cases in the working days of a single month, and doing it satisfactorily and carefully. Of course, in a large majority of the cases they affirm the Commissioner of Pensions. They have accomplished and expert medical officers detailed to act with the Board. They have passed upon substantively in their own Board about 9 per cent favorable to the appellants. I do not need to again remind the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union of the fact that these old soldiers of the civil war must have their cases disposed of early or they will be in their coffins, and their appeals will avail them nothing.

So that unless it is the policy now at this late period in the carrying out and execution of our pension laws that we shall adopt dilatory measures and prevent their cases getting through, it becomes our duty to maintain this Board with efficiency; and we can certainly not do it, in the light of facts which are known to those familiar with the matter, by cutting down this Board and almost cutting it in two. I have yet to hear from any member of the committee or from any source any testimony or any facts warranting the proposed reduction. I will wait to be interrupted, if anybody can point out anything that has developed in recent times before the committee or anywhere that warrants this effort to destroy in large part the efficacy of the Pension Appeal Board in the Interior Department.

Much more might be said in that direction, but I content myself now by leaving it.

SIMPLE SPELLING.

I have a word or two that I want to add, not so much in the way of an attack on this bill as to bear my testimony with reference to a matter discussed with great ability on yesterday. That is the matter relating to simplified spelling.

We are living in a great epoch-making age. For the first time in the history of our country, including American colonial days, it is proposed to legislate on the proper use of the English language in the public prints.

Should this bill become a law we will be required to write and spell according to law—according to Webster's or some other standard dictionary. In our observance of this bill, should it become a law, I hope we shall be given wisdom sufficient to enable us to spell correctly all the words we may use in our vocabulary; otherwise we shall violate the law of the land. It would be too much to expect us to be able to spell according to a standard dictionary all the English words—about one hundred and forty thousand (according to Webster's latest International Dictionary)—now in use and found in the latest accepted dictionaries of the English language.

The author of Shakespeare's plays and sonnets (about 1600) was not much of a speller, and he used only a vocabulary of about fifteen thousand words; and the blind poet, Milton, when he wrote Paradise Lost, only a little later (1640 or thereabout), was also a poor speller, and his vocabulary was confined to only 8,000 words. The great philosopher, Francis Bacon, was little better, and his vocabulary was less than that of the Shakespearean author. But the progress of the intervening three hundred years has given us more English words than these immortal authors ever dreamed of, and we have discovered that they did not know how to spell the few words they used, and now, fearing that our modern way of spelling may be interfered with, or that there is danger that we progressive Americans may retrograde to the degenerate days of Chaucer and others who, notwithstanding they did so much to create and build up the English language, were often silly enough to spell the words they used, including such as they coined, in the simplest and most natural way.

To avoid such a misfortune it is now proposed to call a halt, and, by law, say we have reached perfection in the accomplishment of correct spelling, and henceforth this nation's public literature—and there will be much of it—shall be spelled according to a standard fixed by law.

This Congress, ever to be memorable in consequence of its interstate freight rate and other laws supposed to relate to interstate commerce, and for its meat-inspection and pure-food laws, etc., is about to become especially distinguished in consequence of its being the first and only Congress of the United States, or other parliamentary body in the history of civilized nations, to legislate on the subject of how to use the alphabet in the spelling of words. In short, we are henceforth to be required by law to spell all English words correctly according to a fixed standard.

The warrant for this may be found in existing conditions. So the Appropriations Committee of this House has decided. A majority of its members have agreed to "stand pat" on the English language, although only 300 of the 140,000 words composing it have been threatened with revision. Even some of that 300 have so far undergone revision or their spelling has been so far simplified as to have, possibly unwittingly, been adopted, so spelled, into Webster's Unabridged Dictionary and other standard dictionaries by modern lexicographers.

Understand me, Mr. Chairman, I did not rise to oppose this proposed legislation, but only to emphasize its importance, and to call the attention of the members of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, if possible, the whole country and the whole world to the significant and transcendent character of the legislation we are about to write upon the statute books of our beloved country.

We have in this legislation the happy concurrence of the Supreme Court of the United States, as we are advised that that body has so far adjudicated upon the wisdom and constitutionality of the proposed law as to order, in advance of its enactment, its records to be made up according to its provisions, even requiring the attorneys and counselors at law who appear in that court to write and cause their briefs to be printed in words spelled according to standard dictionaries, or rather according to usual methods.

And, lastly, we may felicitate ourselves over the fact that this law is to be underwritten, notwithstanding his previously announced conviction that the time has come for revision and reform in spelling American-English, with the word "approved," signed by the President of the United States; this unless he shall veto the bill containing the extraordinary provision. This he will hardly do, as the bill contains an appropriation of about $31,000,000 to maintain the legislative, executive, and judicial departments of the Government for the next fiscal year, including an item for the payment of his own salary.

But, Mr. Chairman, significant in character as this proposed spelling legislation may be, I did not arise here to-day to pay more than a passing tribute to it. I arose to oppose a clause in this legislative appropriation bill and to point out a defect in it which I regard of vital importance, and which, if not corrected, will result in irremediable injustice to some of my old comrades of the civil war. [Applause.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, all free governments are delegated certain powers that are intended to be exercised for the benefit of the governed. When these powers are justly and properly exercised we have good government, but when the governmental powers are used not for the benefit of the people, or not exercised at all, then the object for which the government was created has miscarried, and the end and aim for which the grant of power was given is not attained.

The Constitution of the United States gives to the Federal Government the power to levy taxes, expend its revenues, provide for the Army and Navy, maintain a system of courts, all of which have been exercised for the benefit of the people; but there were some grants of power that were given to the Federal Government that have not been exercised by it for many years, and the neglect to do so has caused great loss to the people.

The Constitution provides "that Congress shall have the power to establish post-offices and post-roads." Millions of dollars have been appropriated from the Treasury for the establishment and maintenance of post-offices, but within the last six decades comparatively nothing has been expended toward the establishment of post-roads. In other words, a great governmental power, vested in Congress, has been neglected and not exercised for the benefit of the people, as it was intended it should be. Should the present Congress fail or refuse to make appropriations to carry on the present post-office system, would not everyone feel that a great wrong was done to the citizenship of the country; and when Congress refused to exercise its correlative power to build post-roads, is not an equal injury being done?

There is not an inhabitant of Alabama who is not entitled to have his mail delivered at his door by the Government to whom he has granted this power, whether he lives in the city or the country; and it is no answer to the demand for a fair delivery of mail matter to all that the county roads are so bad that the mail carrier can not travel them, when this very Government that is delivering the mail has been granted the power and directed by the Constitution to build suitable post-roads for mail deliveries to all.

Some contend that the State and county governments should provide the roads over which the United States mail is carried. It is true this has been done in the past, but it does not seem to me that the argument is a tenable one. Why should the grant have been given to the Federal Government to build post-roads if it had not been intended that it should exercise that grant of power? To establish post-roads must mean something more than merely using roads for postal service after somebody else built them.

The Congress has appropriated great sums of money and has granted vast tracts of public land for railroad building under the plea that they were public highways for carrying the mail. If that was a good argument then, why is it not an equally good argument now to insist that good roads should be built by the Government from the railroad towns to the rural districts to deliver the mail with reasonable speed and certainty?

Taxes are levied and collected that they may be expended for the benefit of the people. The last session of this Congress appropriated for this fiscal year:

For agriculture	$9,932,940
For Army	71,817,165
For diplomatic and consular service	3,091,094
For District of Columbia	10,138,692
For fortifications	5,053,993
For Indians	9,260,399
For legislative branch	29,741,019
For Military Academy	1,664,707
For Navy	102,071,650
For pensions	140,245,500
For post-offices	191,695,998
For sundry civil expenses	98,274,574
Total	672,987,734

being the total of ordinary expenditures, to which must be added appropriations for deficiencies for last year, miscellaneous and permanent annual appropriations, which bring the grand total up to $880,133,301, and out of it all not one dollar for post-roads to better the mail facilities of the country people; that of the grand total $258,968,790 was expended for the military establishment and only $9,932,940 to advance the cause of agriculture.

The revenue collected by the Government to meet the vast expenditures I have enumerated amounts to about $6.93 for each man, woman, and child in the United States. Of the total population of the United States only one-third live in cities of over 8,000 people; the balance live in the small towns and the country. Of the 80,000,000 people in the United States, it is readily seen how great a percentage of the revenues to support the Government are paid by the country people, and it is equally evident how small a proportion of the annual expenditures accrue directly for their benefit. In fact, the people living in the country districts saw no direct return to them of any of the money they paid in taxes to the Federal Government until the rural mail-delivery service was inaugurated, and now more than half of the rural population is deprived of daily mail service because the Government agents say the roads are too bad for the mail riders to travel—the very roads the Constitution contemplated the General Government should put in good condition to carry the mail.

In the last decade we have expended millions for good roads in the Philippines and in Porto Rico, but not one dollar in the United States to aid the people who paid the taxes and defended the country.

The Congress has expended millions of dollars on river and harbor improvements, has thrown open the doors of the Treasury when the railroad corporations asked for money and land to lay their lines across the continent, has given fabulous millions to connect the waters of the Atlantic with the Pacific Ocean, has listened to the cry of distress and has responded nobly, and the American people pay the taxes and approve your course; but to the aid of the toiling masses at home you give nothing.

Do not forget that these same country people who are asking Congress to keep the pledges of the Constitution are the class of our people who in the one hundred and twenty-five years of our nation's existence have never been appealed to by our country in vain. They are the men who, when war's ugly aspect overshadowed our land, have always responded to their country's call, from Bunker Hill to Santiago; from 1776 to 1898 they have given their lives at their country's call, and their sufferings and blood have vindicated their right to the citizenship that is entitled to be heard to-day on this great economic problem.

It is the duty of every government to expend the revenues intrusted to it where the people who have paid the taxes will derive the most benefit from the money expended. Viewing this great economic problem of good roads from that standpoint, I know of no expenditure of money by the Government that will make a greater direct return to the people.

The cost of transportation is the vital question in all modern commerce. With the world's markets in which to dispose of our products, our success and prosperity is largely dependent on costs of carrying our products to these markets.

The country has realized this fact so far as railroad freight charges are concerned, and the Congress has enacted wise legislation to regulate all freight rates, though our rates, on an average, are much less than in European countries. The cost of carrying a ton 100 miles in England is $2.35; in Germany, $2.25; in France, $2; in the United States, 72 cents, the cheapest freight rates in the civilized world, and we have very properly regulated them. On the other hand, the cost of moving our products from the farms to the railroad stations is from two to four times as much as it is in France or Germany. This part of the cost of transportation to the markets of the world is just as vital to our success and the development of our foreign trade as is the railroad freight, and it is not only neglected, but the direct authority of the Constitution, authorizing Congress to build post-roads, is disregarded.

I have seen it stated that it costs as much to deliver a bushel of grain over dirt roads 5 miles to a railroad in Illinois as it costs to carry it 1,100 miles by railroad to Buffalo, N. Y. In West Virginia it costs five times as much to carry tobacco 8 miles over muddy roads to the station as it costs afterwards to carry it 400 miles by rail to the manufacturers in Richmond, Va.

A circular of the Agricultural Department states that on an average it costs 25 cents per ton per mile for hauling farm products over common earth roads and shows the average distance hauled and average load for a 2-horse wagon to be:

Section.	Average wagon haul.	Average load, two horses.
	Miles.	Pounds.
Eastern States	5.9	2,216
Northern States	6.9	.....
Middle States	8.8	.....
Cotton States	12.6	1,397
Prairie States	8.8	2,407
Pacific States	23.3	2,197
Average in United States	12.1	2,002

Another circular of the Agricultural Department shows the average load carried and distance hauled in European countries, where they have good macadam roads, to be—

Country.	Average net load hauled by two horses.	Average distance hauled to market.
	Pounds.	Miles.
Belgium	4,400	2
England	4,500	5
France	8,000	4.4
Germany	6,000	6.8
Italy	8,800	10
Switzerland	5,510	13

Over these macadam roads it is stated that the cost of carrying farm products does not exceed 8 or 10 cents per ton per mile.

Consider this immense saving the European farmer has to his credit as compared with his American competitor, when you consider the difference between 25 cents per ton per mile and 10 cents per ton per mile—a saving of 15 cents per ton on an average haul of 12 miles, or $1.80 on every ton of farm produce carried to market by the American farmer.

Ten million bales would be an average cotton crop in the South. The weight of that crop would be about 2,193,000 tons, and a saving of $1.80 in hauling that crop to the railroad station would be a saving to the farmers of the South on their cotton crop alone of $3,947,000 each year. The same is true of the other great crops of the country. The saving to the farmers of the country in moving their crops alone would amount to many millions of dollars each year, and were the Government to expend twenty millions a year in building good roads, it would be more than returned to the people who pay the taxes each year, and we would have the permanent macadam roads for the future at a small cost of maintenance.

In view of these facts I have little patience with those who contend that dirt roads are good enough for the American farmer. All of the governments of Europe are giving national aid to road building. Not less than $7,000,000 each year are expended by the French Government in making new roads. This work employs 35,000 persons, and they now have 350,000 miles of well-paved roads. England is expending $15,000,000 a year for turnpikes.

One of the greatest advantages the European farmer has by reason of his good roads is that he can work in good weather and carry his crop to market in bad weather, and our farmers, on account of our bad roads in many parts of this country, can only do their hauling in good weather, when they could otherwise be at work.

In conclusion let me say that national aid to great undertakings has been repeatedly given in the past. The Congress has exercised its constitutional right by making appropriations for improvements of rivers and harbors, built railroads, canals, and highways, and constructed irrigation ditches. No country in the world that has good roads has accomplished the result without national aid.

The time has come for the Congress to act. Surplus revenues are accumulating in the Treasury and can be used for no better purposes. But little is done by the Government to aid agriculture, and yet the prosperity of the whole country is dependent on the success of our farming classes. To build good post roads along our mail routes would be a great economic undertaking, which should be started at once and pushed to a completion as rapidly as a wise and economic management of the problem will allow. [Applause.]

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Chairman, I now yield twenty minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK].

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, I want to avail myself of the latitude in this debate to talk about the subject of railway-mail pay. There is no more intricate complex subject in the financial affairs of the Government.

Beginning next February, before this Congress will adjourn, the mails will be weighed in that section of the country comprising Indiana, Illinois, Ohio, Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, and Missouri, and that weight will call perhaps for an expenditure of $20,000,000 annually for four years. Twenty million dollars is more than this service cost over the entire country in 1888. There are practices and methods which should be changed before February 1 of 1907.

In the report of the Post-Office Department for 1905 the average daily weight of the mails on route No. 107011, being the New York Central from New York to Buffalo, is given at 411,838 pounds for a period of seventy-eight days from February 14, 1905. If I am correctly informed, it was not 411,838 pounds, but the average daily weight was 356,000 pounds; that is 55,000 pounds less per day.

The annual rate of compensation is given at $1,985,000. If I am correctly informed it should not have been that, but should have been $1,728,000, or $257,000 less.

The average daily weight of the mail on route 109004, the Pennsylvania, from New York to Philadelphia, is given for the same period at 498,874 pounds. Apparently it was not that; it was, in all probability, 432,000 pounds. That is 66,000 pounds less. The annual rate of compensation is given at $491,000, and it should have been $427,000, or $64,000 less.

The average daily weight of the mail on route 110001, on the Pennsylvania, from Philadelphia to Pittsburg, is given at 362,000 pounds. It was probably, in fact, 313,000 pounds, and the annual rate of compensation is given as $1,410,000. That should have been $1,228,000, or $182,000 less.

If this is an overpayment on these three routes, the figures would reach $503,000.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MURDOCK. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman inform the House before he closes that portion of his remarks how he arrives at these figures?

Mr. MURDOCK. I intend to. That is the next thing in my remarks.

The basis of most of our enormous outlay for the railway carriage of mail—$45,000,000 this year—is the average daily weight. Antiquated and faulty as the system of pay is, still if we are to retain it, then the basis of that pay, the average daily weight, ought to be a true and not a false average.

That the average is mathematically false I believe, and an accountant would show, I believe, that through this false average this Government in the last ten years has paid somewhere in the region of $40,000,000 for the carriage of the mails more than it would have paid on a true average. If the average is corrected, the system of pay is still antiquated and inequitable and should be changed.

I have three features I desire to present to the House: First, the false average of daily weight; second, the justice of a lower rate on dense routes; third, a modification of the railway post-office pay. I desire to present first the false average. To-day the mails are to be weighed for one hundred and five days, Sundays and all, and this is all totaled. Then to secure the average daily weight, I am informed, the total is not divided by one hundred and five days, but by ninety days; that is, the Sundays are excluded. Reducing the system to the basis of a week, seven days' weighings are aggregated and the result is divided by six. This increases the average, of course. As nearly all the heavy averages come from routes which have Sunday mails, the loss to the Government is enormous.

This system has continued, apparently, for years. The Department has its warrant for it in an opinion given by an Attorney-General in 1884. The practice under these rulings is costing the Government dearly and immediate action should be taken to stop it.

The original authority for the average daily weight of mails is found in section 4002 of the Revised Statutes and is as follows:

The Postmaster-General is authorized and directed to readjust the compensation hereafter to be paid for the transportation of mails on railroad routes upon the conditions and at the rates hereinafter mentioned.

First. That the mails shall be conveyed with due frequency and speed, and that sufficient and suitable room, fixtures, and furniture in a car or apartment properly lighted and warmed shall be provided for route agents to accompany and distribute the mails.

Second. That the pay per mile per annum shall not exceed the following rates, namely: On routes carrying their whole length an average weight of mails per day of 200 pounds, $50, * * * the average weight to be ascertained in every case by the actual weighing of the mails for such a number of successive working days, not less than thirty, at such times after June 30, 1873, and not less frequently than once in every four years, and the result to be stated and verified in such form and manner as the Postmaster-General may direct.

The law now reads "not less than ninety." The law is thirty-three years old. Only comparatively few trains in 1873 carried Sunday mails. But, as I interpret the law, it was worded not to give an advantage to those routes having Sunday mails. The pay is for three hundred and sixty-five days of service, and if the mails were weighed for every day in the year it was carried, then any business man or corporation would insist that the average be obtained by a division of the total weight of mails by 365, and not by 365 less 52 Sundays—that is, 313.

Mr. MANN. Now, the gentleman's statement is interesting and valuable. I know nothing about it myself as to the facts. Is the gentleman sure that in ascertaining the weight the Post-Office Department weighs the mail, say, for seven days, every day in the week, and then in order to ascertain the average daily weight thereafter divides the total by 6 and then proceeds to allow for the full seven days?

Mr. MURDOCK. That is my understanding, else I certainly would not be making these remarks.

Mr. MANN. Well, if the gentleman is correct, he ought to know. It is an important matter, if that is the fact. It certainly is something that not only ought to be corrected by Congress, but the men who follow such a plan ought to be put out of office.

Mr. MURDOCK. I wish the gentleman would allow me to continue with this. I am going into the matter of computation before I finish.

The words "the average weight to be ascertained in every case by the actual weighing of the mails for such a number of successive working days, * * * as the Postmaster-General may direct," was written to secure full weighings on days when mail was carried. It was not so construed. The construing of it now is, I understand, that the pay is not per annum, but is per a 313-day period; that where the mail is carried seven days a week it is actually carried but six working days. For one I refuse to subscribe to that construction of the law.

Nor can I see how anyone claiming that there are but six working days on a route where work is performed seven days can then find an average a day by a division of the number of days in the week by the number of "working days" in the week.

On that one New York Central route we are paying $1,985,910—almost $2,000,000 annually—not counting full railway post-office car pay. It is too much to pay on a just basis. It is far too much both in the absence of a just basis and by a computation on an antiquated method or ruling.

So long as the Government pays the New York Central on an average daily weight secured by including all Sunday weights and then dividing by the number of days weighed, less Sundays, the practice calls for a distinct legislative prohibition.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. MURDOCK. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. If I understand the gentleman correctly, the theory is that the Government will not pay, that Congress did not arrange for the payment for carrying the mails on Sunday, and that therefore in computing the daily average, in computing the compensation for the averages, the carrying of the mails on Sundays is excluded. Am I right about that?

Mr. MURDOCK. I do not know that I catch the gentleman's question. If he will permit me to go on, I will get to the manner of computation.

Mr. FOSTER or Vermont. Very well.

Mr. MURDOCK. I have not found it easy to arrive at all the stages of computation. The weights are sent to the office of division superintendents, and the including of the Sunday weights, as nearly as I can find, is done there.

The basis of compensation—totaled daily weight—and the distance from station to station are sent on to Washington and the compensation adjusted here carefully. But the basis of compensation, the item of average daily weight is, under the Attorney-General's ruling, wrong before it reaches here if my information is correct.

Now to get to your proposition. The country is divided into four weighing districts, and the weighing takes place in each district once in four years. At the last weighing in which the New York-Buffalo route appeared, the weighing was "for seventy-eight successive working days," the seventy-eight day period beginning February 14, 1905, and ending May 15, 1905, ninety days thereafter. The mail was weighed, not seventy-eight days, in fact, but ninety days. The mail was weighed not only on successive working days, but on successive days, twelve Sundays included, and the Sunday weights, as far as I can find, were included in the total. But when the average was to be found the Sundays were subtracted from the ninety days, leaving seventy-eight days. Does that answer the gentleman's question?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Partially.

Mr. MURDOCK. If it does answer it partially, then I hope to answer it wholly.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Let me ask this. I was trying to ascertain just the working of the man's mind who gave this interpretation to the law.

Mr. MURDOCK. I can not answer that question.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. I was wondering whether you could give any information on that subject.

Mr. MURDOCK. But when the average was to be found the Sundays were subtracted from ninety days, leaving seventy-eight days.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. That must be on the theory the Government will not pay for services rendered on the Sabbath.

Mr. MURDOCK. I do not know what the theory was. The total weights, including Sunday weights, were divided by 78 and the false average was found. The true average would have been 356,929 pounds; that is, it would have been a true average if the total weights had been divided by the total days of weighing. As I believe it was done, and as it is done, it is false. The true average on the route, had it been employed, would have given the New York Central as an annual rate of pay $1,728,-140.60 instead of $1,985,910.27. In short, the Government is paying on this one route per year the sum of $257,769.67 more than a true average would give.

Mr. STERLING. Under that showing it is clear they do pay for carrying the mail on Sunday. They add the Sunday weights to the weights of the other days.

Mr. MURDOCK. I think they pay for that Sunday weight too. When the mails were weighed on the New York Central route from New York to Buffalo from February 14, 1905, until May 15, 1905, the aggregate of all the mails put on at each station and of all the mails put off at each station on the trips out of New York and into New York were sent into Washington. Here the adjustment of pay was made. Under the subheading of "trip out" the actual weight of mail carried from station to station is multiplied by the distance from station to station in round miles, the fractional mile under one-half mile being discarded, the fractional mile over one-half mile being added to. The total number of pounds multiplied by distance from station to station is then divided by the total number of miles and the quotient resulting is then divided by the number of days weighed for the average daily weight. This process is then repeated for the trip in. The computation is exact, save for the use of the fractional mile, which in the case of the New York Central route shows the route to be 434 miles in length for the purpose of finding the average daily weight and 439.49 miles when compensation is adjusted.

Now, in arriving at the compensation on the New York-Buffalo route allowance is made first for 5,000 pounds, at $200. As the New York-Buffalo route, No. 107011, is given an average daily weight of 411,838 pounds, after the first 5,000 pounds are deducted 406,838 pounds remain. Allowance is now made for this at the rate of $1 for every 80 pounds, giving $5,085. This and the $200 are added, giving $5,285. From this 10 per cent is taken, giving $4,756.50, and from this 5 per cent is taken, giving $4,518.67, which is the pay per mile per annum for transportation. This is then multiplied by the length of the route, this time fractional miles included. In this case $4,518.67 is multiplied by 439.49 miles, and the annual rate of pay for transportation found—in this instance $1,985,910.27.

In the section weighed in 1905, of the 880 routes weighed but 280 of them averaged twelve or less trips per week. The average of trips per week the country over is seventeen.

If the construction of the law is right, and the ruling of past Attorneys-General is to stand, and the presence of the word "working" forces a false and costly average daily weight, then it should be stricken from the law at once.

The second proposition I have to submit follows the first in that it emphasizes the antiquity of the law under which we pay for the carriage of the mail by railroads. The law of 1873 followed the law of 1845 and was a development from it. The law of 1873 provided equitable compensation when it was adopted. It provided for a decreasing rate of compensation with an increasing volume of mail handled upon the theory that as the density of traffic increases the rate should decrease.

The rates of pay under the law of 1873 and the 10 per cent horizontal reduction of 1876 and the 5 per cent horizontal reduction of 1878 are as follows:

Average weight of mail, whole distance, per day.	Original pay.	Pay, less deduction of 14½ per cent.
200 pounds or less, daily	$50	$42.75
200 pounds to 500 pounds, daily	75	64.13
500 pounds to 1,000 pounds, daily	100	85.50
1,000 to 1,500 pounds, daily	125	106.88
1,500 to 2,000 pounds, daily	150	128.25
2,000 to 3,500 pounds, daily	175	149.63
3,500 to 5,000 pounds, daily	200	171
Each additional 2,000 pounds	25	21.375

This law has as a supplement a provision for pay for full postal cars as follows:

Length of car:	Per daily line.
40 feet	$25
45 feet	30
50 feet	40
55 to 60 feet	50

I desire to handle the two provisions separately, prefacing what I have to say with the statement that all minds are confused on the subject, and there has never been an assertion vigorously made in regard to it that has not been as vigorously disputed.

I desire to pass over several points of ancient controversy at the start and go directly to my contention for a change in the law. First of these points to be passed over is the comparison between freight and mail. As mail is carried on a basis of weight multiplied by distance and freight is not, those who contend that there is analogy between freight and mail and those who contend that there is not are no nearer agreement than they were twenty years ago. Comparison of express and mail has been equally barren of agreement. There are those who have found an analogy between passenger traffic and the mail carriage, but they have not convinced those who find no analogy there. Others have brought to the solution of the difficulty a ton-mileage unit, and while this goes to a portion of the problem it can be of no service in considering all routes, for one-third of all the routes in the country carry only a few pounds per day. All hands are agreed on one proposition, find one common ground of compromise, that as the density of traffic increases the rate should decrease within certain limitations.

The law of 1873 had in it a principle of equity. The horizontal reductions of 1876 and 1878 were arbitrary.

The principle of equity in the law of 1873 was adequate in its application to its day. It provided a sliding decrease in rate of pay as the volume of mail increased, up to 5,000 pounds. Few routes carried in that day over 5,000 pounds daily. The New York-Buffalo route, which to-day carries 411,838 pounds daily, then carried 30,000 pounds. It was perhaps natural to stop the scale at 5,000 pounds and to provide a flat per-ton-per-mile rate for mail carriage above it.

If, however, in 1873 any railroad mail route had carried 411,000 pounds, the pay scale would not have stopped at 5,000 pounds, and it is indefensible not to revise it now. To deny that an extension of the 5,000-pound limit is just is flatly to deny that the graduated scale below 5,000 pounds is just. If the New York Central can carry the first 5,000 pounds on a decreasing scale with reasonable compensation, it can carry the 406,000 pounds in addition with reasonable compensation on a decreasing scale.

The scale ought to be extended beyond the 5,000-pound limit, and following a per cent of decrease on the present pay from 1 per cent to 12 per cent up to 100,000 pounds. I have framed and introduced a bill to accomplish that result.

The rate of pay provided in the bill I have introduced is as follows:

Average weight of mail whole distance per day.	Proposed rate.	Present rate.
200 pounds	$42.75	$42.75
500 pounds	64.13	64.13
1,000 pounds	85.50	85.50
1,500 pounds	106.88	106.88
2,000 pounds	128.25	128.25
3,500 pounds	149.63	149.63
5,000 pounds	171.00	171.00
6,000 pounds	180.00	183.00
8,000 pounds	200.00	204.37
10,000 pounds	216.00	225.75
12,000 pounds	235.00	247.12
15,000 pounds	260.00	277.87
19,000 pounds	296.00	320.62
24,000 pounds	345.00	375.37
30,000 pounds	400.00	439.50
40,000 pounds	490.00	546.37
55,000 pounds	625.00	705.37
75,000 pounds	800.00	919.12
100,000 pounds	1,000.00	1,187.62

For each 1,000 pounds above 100,000 pounds $9.80.

It will be asserted that this plan is unjust because of the manner in which mail cars are loaded; that inasmuch as only a few thousand pounds of mail are carried ordinarily in a single car, the proportion of live weight to dead weight defeats and nullifies the law of decreasing rate with increasing density of traffic. In other words, that the law of decreasing rate would have uninterrupted force if every car could be loaded to its storage capacity; that its force and application are interrupted when only a small part of the postal-car space is occupied by mail.

But on the dense routes the Government pays, in addition to the payment for weight, also for space and haulage. For instance, in addition to the $1,985,910.27 we pay to the New York Central on route No. 107011, New York–Buffalo, annually $265,891.45 for space and haulage. We do not pay for space on those lines where the average daily weight is small and where apartment cars are used.

And, moreover, the law of decreasing rate with increasing density is not interrupted at 5,000 pounds by the average load, as has been claimed. For years it was asserted that the average load of mail in full railway post-office cars was 2 tons. The Second Assistant Postmaster-General, in a letter to the gentleman from Minnesota last April, gave the average load from 2½ to 4 tons. On many routes it exceeds 4 tons. An illuminating item in respect to the average load is found in the storage cars—cars in which mail is packed away and removed from time to time to the distributing car. Surely on a storage car, with the mail loaded compactly and with 40,000 pounds in a car at a time, the law of decreasing rate with increasing density is uninterrupted. Now we pay for space and haulage by a law which fixes a ratio as follows:

40 feet	$25
45 feet	30
50 feet	40
55 to 60 feet	50

If postal-car pay, over and above pay for weight, is to remain part of the system of pay, then this table should have immediate revision. Like other features of the law of 1873, it may have been, doubtless was, fair in its day; but it has become antiquated and moss covered until to-day the table is ridiculous. In 1873 a 40-foot postal car was quite an achievement in car building, and a compensation for its space and haulage at the rate of 62½ cents per linear foot was considered reasonable; but the world of car building and car hauling has moved on and left this old table of pay standing absurdly out of date, for in those days a 45-foot car was so unusual, apparently, that in providing pay for it the rate was raised from 62½ cents per linear foot for a 40-foot car to 66⅔ cents per linear foot for a 45-foot car, and the 50-foot car was so unusual and its weight so extraordinary in the average train in those days that the pay provided was 80 cents per linear foot, and a 55-foot car, a monster in 1873, was paid for at the rate of 90 cents per linear foot, and a 60-foot car was put into the law presumably as a concession to the possibilities of the future.

To-day nearly all full railway postal cars are built 60 feet in length. Usually the Department, when it authorizes a 40-foot car on a line, has drawn for it and the use of the space of a 60-foot car. The Department pays, in this instance, for a 40-foot car only, but the railroad hauls daily and provides a 60-foot car. Now, the absurdity of the situation is here, that with some railroads hauling voluntarily 20 feet of extra space gratuitously, other railroads who are paid for hauling all 55 feet of space are paid not a proportionally increasing rate, but at an increasing rate of pay out of all proportion. The increase of 15 feet in space above 40 feet is provided for by an increase of pay of $25, or at the rate of $1.66 per linear foot. To put it in another way, the length increases from 40 to 55 feet, an increase of 37½ per cent, while the pay covering the increase jumps from $25 to $50, an increase of 100 per cent. I have endeavored to correct this discrepancy, which has followed from the fact that the law, which does not change, can not automatically keep step with the world, which does change.

My schedule for car pay is as follows:

Length of car:	Per daily line.
40 feet	$20
50 feet	25
60 feet	30

I have in the bill I have introduced provided for the elimination of the word "working" in the provision for weighing.

The Government is paying too much for the carriage of railway mail. In principle its system may be sound, but the system should be extended to meet the magnitude of the service. The law on full railway post-office cars should be adjusted to modern conditions in car construction and train equipment, and, if the basis of pay is to continue weight, then the weight should be computed not in conformity to some ancient reading of the law, but in accordance with the facts. We had in 1873 to deal with the proposition of the carriage of the mails over 63,000 miles of railroad. To-day it is carried over 200,000 miles of railroad. In 1873 our expenditure for this service was seven million; to-day it is forty-five million. [Loud applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. WANGER having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, sundry messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. LATTA, one of his secretaries.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield as much time to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. RICHARDSON] as he may desire.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, in the early part of the first session of the Fifty-ninth Congress I had the pleasure of introducing a bill that met with the approval of a large number of the manufacturing interests of our country. The bill is H. R. 295 and entitled "A bill to enlarge the trade and promote the sale of cotton products in foreign markets." The substance of that bill was to authorize the President of the United States—to appoint five men as commissioners, who are familiar with and well informed as to the manufacture and sale of cotton products, whose duty it shall be to carefully investigate the conditions of trade in cotton products in Asiatic, African, and South American territories and find out to what uses cotton products, both fiber and seed, are put, giving technical descriptions of their construction and preparation, the prices at which they are sold in countries of origin, methods and rules of credits and discounts, details of finishing and packing, custom laws, and methods and cost of transportation from ports to interior points, the relative cost of transportation from this country and Europe to the principal foreign markets for cotton products, the bias in favor of or against American products and the causes of such bias, and all matters relating to methods and suggestions for improving and encouraging the cotton-products trade with the countries mentioned in this section as, in the judgment of said commissioners, may be most advantageous in promoting the cotton-products trade with said foreign countries.

I did not, Mr. Chairman, press the consideration of that bill, for the reason that I was advised that it infringed somewhat upon the authority and the duties of the Secretary of the Department of Commerce and Labor, for whom I have the very greatest respect and admiration; and that my purpose could be better accomplished by an appropriation under the Department of Commerce and Labor made along that line and for the purpose of sending cotton-cloth experts to visit the foreign countries mentioned in the bill. In the appropriation bill, "Making appropriation for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, and for other purposes," approved June 22, 1906, this paragraph appeared:

For compensation at not more than $10 per day and actual necessary traveling expenses of special agents to investigate trade conditions abroad, with the object of promoting the foreign commerce of the United States, $50,000, not more than $20,000 of which shall be used in the investigation of markets for cotton products; and the results of such investigation shall be reported to Congress.

I admit, Mr. Chairman, that I was greatly disappointed at that twenty-thousand limitation in a matter of such magnitude as this. But to my very great surprise the present appropriation bill, now before the House for consideration, leaves that paragraph entirely out, and at the proper time I am advised, and believe, that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LIVINGSTON], who is in charge of the bill on this side of the House, will offer to have that paragraph reinstated and put in the bill. I say, Mr. Chairman, that I was greatly surprised at the limitation—the small amount of $20,000—and when it comes to the point of striking it out entirely, I confess that I am amazed.

Certainly no man that is informed, on the floor of this House or elsewhere, will pretend to deny that the manufacturing industry of cotton, coupled with the production of cotton, is to-day in all respects the greatest industry in the world. Were you to strike down that industry, Mr. Chairman, to-day, Great Britain in her business life would be absolutely prostrated. Germany, France, Switzerland, Japan, and other countries would receive a severe shock, and the New England States of our own country would also be greatly disturbed in their business interests.

Why, when we stop to think about $20,000 being appropriated to investigate certain foreign countries where our markets for the sale of cotton products can be advanced and promoted, we certainly ought to remember that to-day Great Britain, upon that one product of cotton, is paying to us a million dollars a day, including holidays and Sundays, and that this industry supplies a capital of more than two billions of money, and employs millions and millions of operators. It clothes the civilized world, and constitutes more than one-fourth of the exports of our country. And yet we hesitate to give $20,000 to push our market into the promising fields of these foreign countries. But, Mr. Chairman, I do not criticise the Committee on Appropriations. That has never been my habit, touching the work of any committee, since I have had the honor of being a Member of this House. I have believed, Mr. Chairman, since I have realized what the future holds for the South, and I have taken occasion at other times to express that belief, that the very foundation, sir, of the South's hope of wealth and prosperity is based upon cotton and cotton manufacture. There is no antagonism, and there ought not to be, between the spinner and the producer, and I take occasion to say here that the great Southern Cotton Association has done more to break down that seeming antagonism and difference between those two great interests, the producer and the manufacturer, than anything that has occurred in years past. They are no longer strangers to each other. Stability of price is what the producer and the manufacturer require. This acquired, then the success of each is secured in fair profits. The fact is, Mr. Chairman, when we talk about cotton manufacturing the whole thing practically hinges on the cotton-producing States of the South.

I shall not refer to statistics and figures to show how the South has developed, grown, and prospered in the last few years. It is enough for us to know that from 1900 to 1905 the taxable property of the South increased nine hundred and thirty millions, or two hundred and thirty millions a year, being 40 per cent of the whole increase in the South for the previous twenty years. We know that no other section of the world can compare with that. We know also that out of about 7,500 miles of railroad now under contract and being built that the South is building about 4,476 miles of the same. The fact is the South at this time is just entering a new era. We have passed the state of doubt and uncertainty that for years hung around our material matters. The necessity for proving our advantages has passed, for they are known to the world. Twenty years ago a man who would have predicted that the South, so busily engaged at that time in building up its waste places, would to-day be a formidable competitor for the commercial supremacy of the world would have been denounced as a wild hysterical infatuist. But yet it is true. The people of the South are beginning to realize what the potentialities of the South are. Our people are giving thought, attention, and energy to money making, and unprecedented wealth is coming our way.

We are learning that a bale of cotton costing $40 sent to Germany and manufactured into cotton handkerchiefs brings not less than $2,000. We know we have absolutely a monopoly of the production of raw cotton, and we are beginning to think that sooner or later, if Germany can do that with our raw cotton, we can do the same thing. We know that our cotton crop annually is worth to the world about $600,000,000, and when manufactured into the finished fabric will sell for $2,000,000,000. Southern farmers have learned to work in conjunction with Southern bankers, and the money to move the total cotton crop of the South no longer comes from Wall street but comes from our own home bankers. I merely, Mr. Chairman, mention these incidents of our recent past in order to emphasize the necessity of looking to an enlargement of our trade in foreign countries. We see China, with 450,000,000 of people struggling to rise in civilization and take her place with the nations of the world, waiting to be clothed with our cotton products. There is Japan with 45,000,000 of people that awaits the introduction of our cotton cloth made to suit their tastes and customs.

While I believe that cotton is the strong arm of commerce that the South leans on, yet I am fully aware and appreciate the unsurpassed mineral resources of the South. The appropriation asked is for the benefit of the cotton manufactures of the United States. It is just as important to the manufacturers of the Eastern as to the Southern States.

Why do I say that the South, more than any other section of the world, looks to this great industry as the hope for its wealth and the restoration of its ancestral wealth and power, and giving back to it the political power to which it is entitled in the councils of the nation? Why, Mr. Chairman, this is a question which is exceedingly practical. You might to-day take dynamite and blow up every steel factory and coal mine in the United States—blow them into atoms, where they could not be used or be of any benefit to mankind. If you did so, you could find a substitute for their uses. Time was not long since when we built our ships out of wood. We did not use coal in our fireplaces. We used wood. Coal and steel is found and produced in nearly all sections of the world. Strike down cotton, and where is your substitute for it? There is not enough wool made to take its place.

We have 812 counties in the South upon the production of which this great cotton industry almost entirely rests. Not over one-tenth of the available cotton lands in these 812 counties is to-day in cultivation. It stands there as an invitation for the experiment of making cotton in the South about to be made by Great Britain. How often has Great Britain, in the last three-quarters of the century, experimented, at the expenditure of millions of dollars, trying to find soil and some climate which would allow it to compete with these eight Southern States in the production of cotton? Why is it to-day that a commission is investigating the matter? In order to encourage the growth of cotton in Spain exemption from taxation was granted on lands for years and valuable prizes offered. I take occasion to read what one of our own consuls says upon that subject—Special Agent W. A. Clark:

As a result of the observations made in the American cotton fields in the spring by a commission of spinners sent out by a number of the leading cotton firms of Lancashire, a second commission, invested with larger powers, has sailed from Liverpool to visit the southern cotton fields. The first party gathered valuable statistics as to the methods and cost of growing, baling, and transport of cotton, and the second commission will gain further information and experience of the actual process of cotton picking. Beyond this, the commission of three—Messrs. H. W. MacAlister, W. J. Orr, and A. Niven Whyte—are authorized to purchase suitable areas of land on behalf of certain Lancashire firms to make a practical experiment in growing their own cotton.

Italy, Belgium, Portugal, Germany, France, and other countries have experimented in the making of cotton. It is true a certain inferior classification of cotton has been produced in certain foreign countries, but it has to be mixed with American cotton to get best results. And even such as is produced could not be brought to our country and sold for less than 14 cents per pound.

We are not objecting to that commission of spinners. Let them come and buy our unoccupied and uncultivated lands. Further than that, we will welcome them to the South because they can aid us to settle our labor question. What is the condition of the Lancashire district to-day, the great center of all the manufacturing industries of Great Britain, with Manchester the radiating central figure. They have, Mr. Chairman, in the last two or three years put in nearly 8,000,000 spindles and 46 additional mills, to do what? Why, to manufacture American cotton. It is for that reason that we should, in my opinion, give every encouragement that we can fairly and properly to having the markets of foreign countries investigated, just as this bill provided for and just as was provided for by this paragraph that was stricken from the appropriation bill. I read again, Mr. Chairman, from the report of Special Agent Charles M. Pepper, writing from Amritsar, in northern India, telling what should be done to sell more American cotton goods in that part of India. He says:

My attention has been called by commission firms in Amritsar to the growing trade in colored prints as a most promising field for the introduction of American goods, and therefore samples are forwarded to the Bureau of Manufactures with the name of the native firm through whose agency they were procured. Until the mills in the United States choose to familiarize themselves more fully than they have heretofore shown a disposition to do with the requirements of the Indian trade in piece goods these samples, bought in the Amritsar bazaars, may serve to indicate the nature of the existing demand. The samples, while a small selection and not to be understood as complete, reflect the prevailing popular taste and fairly represent the class of colored prints for which the average demand is greatest in October, 1906.

They are meant to show the quality only, designs being furnished by the dealers or commission agents.

With such a statement, Mr. Chairman, coming from a special agent on the subject of cotton and cotton manufacture, I admit that it is a matter that is very strange to me, a matter of profound astonishment that the able and distinguished members of the Committee on Appropriations, consisting of many of the very best and ablest men in this House, should have stricken that appropriation out. It is impossible to say that the matter is not of sufficient importance. Commensurate to the importance of the trade we seek to develop, the appropriation ought to have been $100,000.

Let us look now and see about Japan, Mr. Chairman. Since the close of the great Russian and Japanese war Japan has not had the opportunity to indulge its taste in using the finer fabrics of cotton; but they use the coarser materials, and it is that trade that is especially inviting to the Southern States. Special Agent W. A. Graham makes the following significant comment on the Japanese market.

MARKET NEGLECTED BY AMERICANS.

The Japanese market for cotton piece goods has not been cultivated by our cotton mill manufacturers nor by our commission merchants. On most lines no effort has been made. A representative of one of the largest American importing houses told me he had not seen an American cloth salesman for three years, but he could hardly attend to his business because of the swarm of English salesmen continually wanting to show him new samples and quote him latest prices. The indifference of the American manufacturer along this line, which is in marked contrast to his keen competition on most other lines in Japan, is undoubtedly due to the impression that this is a small market for cotton piece goods, and what field there is for cloth is being rapidly taken possession of by the native mills. To a certain extent this is a cheap market, but on certain lines there is a good demand for goods on which American mills can compete and on which, also, it will be a good many years at least before the native mills can get a monopoly.

Now, I am not one of those men who believe that a man is indulging in extreme fancy when he says that the South will soon consume in its own mills all the cotton that it produces. That is true, in my judgment, but we are to go one step further. I believe that the South in the next ten years—with its unparalleled prosperity, to which there is no comparison in any other part of the world; no such development as the South has realized in the past seven years has ever occurred before in the history of the world—I say and believe that in the next ten years the South will consume in its own mills, in all probability, the 10,000,000 or 12,000,000 bales of cotton that it made last year or may make this; but when we reach that time and period when the South will consume its own cotton, then the demand for cotton in the world will amount to 30,000,000 bales, and the South will respond to the demand and produce every bale of it. Our lands are growing daily in value. Land comparatively poor and unproductive, and that a few years ago sold for $1.50 per acre, sells now at from $10 to $12 per acre. Such, cultivated by intelligent labor, with a free use of a fertilizer, can be made, with careful cultivation, to produce quite a bale of cotton to the acre.

There is no conflict between the manufacturing interests of New England and the South. There can not be any, because when the demand of the world comes for twenty, thirty, forty million bales of cotton we can produce them, and the New England mills will naturally secure what they demand for manufacturing purposes. The president of the Southern Cotton Association, Mr. Jordan, says that if the time ever comes when there is need for it, the South can produce 300,000,000 bales of cotton. Cotton is the primary hope of our section.

But I read again from the report of the special agent, William Whittam, jr. He was sent over there, an expert manufacturer, not a man who is sent on a jaunting trip; not a man to go over there merely for pleasure at the expense of the Government, but he says the cotton-cloth exports of the United States for the nine months of 1906 ending September 30 fell off nearly $10,000,000 as compared with the same period of 1905, but were still $11,000,000 in excess of the 1904 period.

The following shows the total shipments of cotton cloth:

The cotton-cloth exports of the United States for the nine months of 1906 ending September 30 fell off by nearly $10,000,000, as compared with the same period of 1905, but were still $11,000,000 in excess of the 1904 period. The following shows the total shipments of cotton manufactures for the first nine months of the years named. The figures are from the summary of imports and exports furnished by the Bureau of Statistics.

Cotton cloths.	1904.	1905.	1906.
Uncolored	$11,416,691	$30,877,439	$15,853,881
Unbleached			4,288,966
Bleached			671,619
Dyed, colored, or printed	3,909,005	5,326,767	5,551,382
Wearing apparel, cotton	2,191,352	2,858,834	3,665,265
Waste, cotton	1,121,729	821,947	1,473,714
Yarn, cotton	175,612	241,324	299,691
All other cotton manufactures	2,493,638	2,548,795	2,556,744
Total	21,308,027	42,675,106	34,361,262

Certainly these figures should admonish us as to our danger. I am an earnest advocate of the expansion of our commercial trade. It is manifest that we will soon demand an outlet for our cotton trade. Why not take steps to encourage this development in foreign countries? The very small appropriation asked for is surely a forerunner of our efforts to expand our trade and not leave it to Great Britain, Germany, and other countries to take the cotton we raise, convert it into paying fabrics, and drive us or keep the United States out of all the markets of the world in the sale of our cotton cloths. That is our situation now.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it is a remarkable thing that after selling to Europe $400,000,000 worth of cotton, leaving $200,000,000 for our own consumption here at home, Great Britain should export in cotton cloth over $300,000,000 and that Germany should export more than $100,000,000, and even Switzerland exports to foreign countries more cotton cloth than the United States. We are bound to progress and improve and develop on that line if we expect to do anything. It is no sectional question. It is a question of material development and growth of the United States.

Why, Mr. Chairman, I said that we have a monopoly—that those eight States, 812 counties, cultivating only one-tenth of the arable cotton land in those States, have a greater monopoly than the Standard Oil Company or the beef trust, the steel trust, or any of those great combnations; but it is a monopoly, if you please, not given to us by the Dingley tariff, but given by the beneficent goodness of God, and it can not be taken from us by law.

Why is it that this cotton monopoly exists? I have recently read for the second or third time one of the most valuable books that have ever given an explanation of why the South alone is capable of producing cotton. Take it here in the District of Columbia; the experiment has been tried, and it has been found that here the stalk will grow most beautifully and vigorously. The white and red blooms will come, and the boll will form apparently healthy and vigorous, and there it stops. The boll dries up and dies. There is something wanting in the climatic conditions. In that great work, Service Afloat, written by Admiral Semmes, the great Confederate admiral, whose book is daily growing in value and importance and will continue to do so as the world lives, is the only satisfactory explanation I have ever seen of why it is. Of course it is attributable to the Gulf Stream. He says that the trade winds, as they pass over the Gulf Stream, by suction draw up the heat of that stream, and it is gently dispensed on the earth as a warm bath, beginning at the State of Virginia and ending at the western borders of Oklahoma. At a certain season that tepid bath is drawn back into the trade winds and produces the dry season that is necessary for the maturity of the boll and the production of cotton.

Mr. Chairman, when this provision is brought up, and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LIVINGSTON] makes his motion to reinstate that paragraph, as I said just now, for $50,000, twenty thousand of which is to be used by the Department of Commerce and Labor in sending these expert men to these foreign countries to find out what kind of cloth our mills must manufacture, adapted to the markets of those foreign countries, I hope attention will be given to it and that it will be reinstated in the bill.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Chairman, I yield one hour to my colleague [Mr. PERKINS].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PERKINS] is recognized for one hour.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, a few days ago I introduced a bill into this House on the subject of a progressive inheritance tax. I know full well, Mr. Chairman, that question will not be a practical question in the immediate future, certainly not at this session. I also know full well that a tax of that nature is as certain to be a part of the legislation of this Government in the future as the sun is to rise, and for that reason I do not think it will be a waste of the time of the House to discuss the principle that underlies an inheritance tax, and the reason why, as it seems to me, it is a form of legislation peculiarly adapted to the uses of the state.

I wish to say first a word on the question of the legality of such a tax. Resolutions have been introduced into this House suggesting an amendment of the Constitution in order that an income and inheritance tax may be imposed. How far that is required for an income tax it is not for me to say, but certainly a progressive inheritance tax this Congress, if it sees fit, has a right to impose.

The history of this legislation, even in this country, is not without interest. It may not be known to many of the Members that an inheritance tax was passed by this Government so far back as 1797, when the framers of the Constitution were still alive. When Hamilton and Madison and Jefferson formed a part of our Government an inheritance tax was passed and was regarded by them as within the plain powers given Congress by the Constitution.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. PERKINS. Certainly.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I would like to ask the gentleman if he thinks that the levying of an inheritance tax would interfere with an inheritance tax levied by the State?

Mr. PERKINS. Not necessarily. How far it might be necessary to adjust that between the State and the Government is, of course, a question.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. The reason I ask is that we have an inheritance tax levied by our State.

Mr. PERKINS. Yes; there are inheritance taxes in many States, as I shall discuss further. Now, Mr. Chairman, this first inheritance-tax law bore the respectable signature of George Washington. It was collected without opposition, but at the expiration of a few years, it being no further needed, it was repealed.

The next inheritance law was passed in the civil war, and then for the first time the question of the constitutionality of the law was raised, as was also the question of the constitutionality of an income tax. The Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of Schooley against Reu (23 Wallace, 331), held that Congress had the power to impose a tax upon inheritances; that it was not a direct tax, but was an imposition upon the devolution of property, levied upon the inheritance, and was within the powers of the Federal Congress. The tax was enforced for some years and was then repealed because it was no further required.

Then we come to the third inheritance tax, imposed by this Government in the Spanish war. Then, as the House will remember, although laws of this character had been enacted more than a hundred years before, and though the constitutionality of the law had been approved by the Supreme Court of the United States, the question was again raised. The Supreme Court of the United States saw fit to reverse the established law in reference to an income tax, and held that an income tax was unconstitutional. I suppose the hope was entertained that a similar ruling would be made as to an inheritance tax, and that question also was taken to the Supreme Court of the United States. But if the hope was entertained that the court would follow the tendencies of the income-tax decision, that hope was disappointed.

In Knowlton v. Moore (178 U. S., 41) the court unanimously held that a progressive inheritance tax was constitutionally imposed. The court said this was not a duty imposed on property, real or personal; that it was not subject to the reasoning by which an income tax had been declared unconstitutional; that this imposition reached the transfer of property by will or descent and was legally imposed upon the transmission of property from one person to another. Those opposing the tax claimed when the court decided an income tax unconstitutional the same reasoning would affect the principles of an inheritance tax, but this position the court had expressly decided was erroneous. The judges who had voted that an income tax was unconstitutional were of the opinion that an inheritance tax was constitutional. Thus all agreed in sustaining the law, except Mr. Justice Brewer, while regarding an inheritance tax as valid, was of the opinion that a progressive rate of tax could not be imposed. Mr. Justice White refers to the fact that many economic writers contend that a progressive tax is more just and equal than a proportional one, and that in the absence of constitutional limitation the question whether it is or not is legislative and not judicial.

A progressive inheritance tax imposed in the State of Illinois was in like manner assailed in that State as violating the provisions of the Constitution which required uniform taxation. The validity of the law was sustained by the State court, and the United States Supreme Court, on appeal in Magoun v. Illinois Trust and Savings Bank (170 U. S., 283), upheld the validity of the law. Justice McKenna there says:

> The right to take property by devise or descent is a creature of the law and not a natural right—a privilege, and therefore the authority which confers it may impose conditions upon it.

So much, Mr. Chairman, as to the law. Now, let us consider for a moment legislation of this character in other countries. We are the only great nation in the world that does not have upon its statute books an inheritance tax.

It is found practically in every country in Europe, in Australia, in many of the South American states. It is an established and an approved form of revenue. Not only that, Mr. Chairman, but the principle of a progressive inheritance tax has steadily grown in use among the great powers. There are now progressive inheritance taxes in France, Switzerland, Italy, Sweden, and in Australia, and, most interesting of all, perhaps, is the progressive inheritance tax in England. It is certainly curious, Mr. Chairman, to see how much more conservative is the legislation of this country, an absolute democracy with universal suffrage, than has been the legislation of a country where the government is largely under the control of a wealthy aristocracy, such as England. In England there is imposed a tax upon all estates varying with their size, and running from 1 to 8 per cent, the highest tax being levied on estates that exceed in value $5,000,000. In addition to that there is a tax increasing for collateral relatives, so in certain cases there is collected in the conservative and wealthy country of England as much as 15 per cent of an inheritance.

In almost every European country the duty is imposed not only upon collateral relatives or strangers, but also upon children. In Australia, for example, rates vary from 1 to 5 per cent, depending upon relationship; in Belgium, from 1 to 7; in Portugal, from 5 to 15. The tax is found in variable forms in almost all the European governments. So a tax that has been established and enforced in all the great countries of the world certainly does not come before us as an experiment, is not a tax to be branded as a socialistic endeavor, but is a tax the character of which is approved by the experience of mankind and of the great nations.

A word as to the amount that is produced by this tax: In France there is a progressive inheritance tax, moderate in its features, but which yields on an average no less than $40,000,000 a year. It is collected with ease and paid with contentment. A tax established on the same lines as the French law in this country would manifestly produce a much larger revenue.

There is another consideration which, it seems to me, peculiarly commends the inherent justice of such an imposition because it falls chiefly upon personal property. The endeavor to reach personal property in the hands of the living is always and always will be to a large extent unsuccessful. Personal property in the hands of the living is like quicksilver. It is elusive, it flows from one place to another place, and it always flows out of the line of taxation. The difficulty of reaching personal property makes a tax upon it necessarily unfair. The time comes, the one time in the history of every individual, when a man's property must necessarily pass through the courts, when the exact amount of it can be ascertained, when no dollar of it can escape the observation, and, if seen fit, the taxation of the state, because only by the assistance of the state can the property of a man who is dead be transferred at all.

We are apt to say that the right of property is an inherent right upon which civilization rests. The right that a man has to use what he has himself earned in his own lifetime is undoubtedly an inherent right. When one of our remote ancestors went out and killed a deer that deer was his. When he sent out his wife to till the scanty crop, the product of the crop was his. But you can not extend that right and say that the control—the natural right to control a man's estate in his own lifetime—enables him, empowers him, to say what shall be done with his property when he himself is under the sod. The right to transmit property rests, and must rest, solely upon the state. If anyone thinks that is a radical doctrine, I will refer him to the opinion of Lord Chief Justice Coleridge, the chief justice of England, in which he lays down as an undoubted rule of law that the right of inheritance is a purely artificial right, resting solely upon the power and the consent of the state. So, when we consider the question of imposing a tax on inheritances we first meet the undoubted proposition that, except by the agency of the state, there can be no inheritances; that only by the action of the state is a man allowed to say what shall be done with his property after he himself shall have ceased to live.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question, for information.

Mr. PERKINS. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I agree with the gentleman, but I want to ask him whether in this country it is not a fact that the laws of descent are by the States, and the power of Congress over the laws of descent is but very limited, and whether, in view of that fact, the rule he cites is not more especially applicable to State inheritance taxes than to Federal inheritance taxes.

Mr. PERKINS. Oh, no; because the Supreme Court in these decisions to which I have referred has held that although the law of descent was a State law, yet just the same the General Government had jurisdiction over the property that passed from one to another, and could impose a tax upon the transmission.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. So I understand; but when the gentleman refers to these authorities, especially to the authorities in England, as I understand in almost all of continental Europe the governments that impose inheritance taxes are also the governments that have the power to pass laws regulating the descent of property.

Mr. PERKINS. Undoubtedly.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. So that there is that distinction here.

Mr. PERKINS. Yes; but it does not result in any legal distinction, and I do not see that it results in any distinction in principle. I do not see how it affects the force of the argument, and certainly it does not affect the legal principle.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I may have missed a portion of your remarks, but, now, is it your idea that we ought to continue to have varying State inheritance taxes as well as a Federal inheritance tax?

Mr. PERKINS. In my judgment an inheritance tax, which, I believe, is destined to be one of the most important taxes in the future, should be equal from the Atlantic to the Pacific; the burden imposed on inherited wealth, and especially on large inherited wealth, should be equal all over the land, and that is an essential element of this theory of taxation. If that is so, that result can only be accomplished by a Federal inheritance tax.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. And a repeal of State laws on the subject?

Mr. PERKINS. Of course Congress can not dictate to the States what they will do. That is beyond our jurisdiction. The States must take such action as they see just. The laws imposed by them—and there are inheritance laws in some thirty States—are for the most part exceedingly small. There is no State, except the State of New York, where the proceeds of the inheritance-tax law are of substantial importance. Of course, they might be increased, but under the present condition of legislation the inheritance-tax law is not important in the economy of any State except perhaps the State of New York.

Now, to pass on, Mr. Chairman, to a further branch of this subject. There is a question which attracts the attention of the public, and may well attract our attention—and that is the problem of great fortunes. No man can shut his eyes or say that this does not have a large influence upon the thoughts of the community. Whether we think they are right or wrong, no man can deny that this is an actual, living present question. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that the size of the fortune that any man can accumulate honestly will ever be restricted or regulated in this land, and certainly I trust it never may. I do not think it is possible to have legislation to restrict the size of an individual fortune without necessarily restricting individual and corporate enterprise.

And there is another thing we should consider. While there are many more industrial fortunes now, more than there ever were in the history of the world, yet the greatest fortunes to-day are not larger in their purchasing power, are not larger in reference to the aggregate wealth of the community, than have been great fortunes in the remote past. You may go back to Roman history and you will find men there who, in their ability to build great palaces, to give games in the circuses for the entertainment of the populace, to have princely residences all over the known world, were as rich as Mr. Rockefeller is to-day.

When we come further down we can find in the middle ages plenty of men just as rich in purchasing power, just as rich in proportion to the aggregate wealth of the community as our richest men are now, and, Mr. Chairman, in that connection there is a thing worthy of consideration and agreeable to suggest. For the most part the great fortunes of the past were made by men who used their political power either for squeezing money from some district under their control or in obtaining from the central power immense gifts and gratuities. The enormously rich men of a few centuries ago were cardinals who were great statesmen, British peers who enjoyed the favor of the sovereign and who as a result of that became the richest men in the community. It is to be regretted that a man should make millions out of the control of a trust if that trust is not honestly operated, but it is a great deal better that our millionaires should come from trusts, no matter how operated, than they should have built up their fortunes as were great fortunes in the past, by the use and abuse of political power. We may talk about graft, Mr. Chairman. It still exists, but the graft of the present as compared with graft from the misuse of political power in the past is petty larceny compared with grand larceny.

We reach the result, at least I reach the result, that it is unlikely and that it is inexpedient that any attempt should be made to restrict the size of any individual fortune. I see no reason why we should regulate the size of an honestly made fortune.

It is almost impossible that the accumulation of a large fortune should not contribute to the business development of the country, to the employment of laborers, to the establishment of enterprises, in the prosperity of which others may share, though in less degree. Mr. Harriman and Mr. Hill have made great fortunes in the development of railroad systems, but they have built up great systems; they have made them more useful to the public. I doubt if the State will ever attempt to restrict the amount that any man can honestly make from the combination of his own intelligence with the opportunities offered by the growth of wealth and business and population in modern times.

We then come to the question of imposing a tax upon the property that a man leaves when he himself departs from this world. The saying of Mr. Hay is familiar, that the American people ask in reference to a proposition, first, "Is it just?" And, second, "Will it pay?" In like manner I intend to ask whether a progressive inheritance tax is just; can it be defended upon principles of broad justice as between the State and the citizen; and, second, is it expedient? Is it for the interest of the State and the interest of the citizen also that such a tax should be imposed? First, is it just? There are persons who say, "A heavy inheritance tax, a tax of 20 or 30 per cent on a great fortune, is socialism, is robbing a man of the wealth he has acquired."

Let us see a little how wealth is acquired, and upon what rests the right of the state to impose a heavy burden upon the fortunes accumulated within it. How does a man make his money? Let us take Mr. Rockefeller. Let us assume that Mr. Rockefeller, with the same proportion of business ability and business genius that he possesses, was born, for instance, in Patagonia, and there spent his days. Would he have accumulated $300,000,000? He could not have accumulated 3,000,000 cents. No man can make money by himself alone. The wealth that is accumulated is accumulated by the opportunities that the state affords. First, it creates a police to guard a man and his property; second, it passes laws by which his rights can be enforced; and third, and most important in a great nation like this, it furnishes a community of 80,000,000 of people, having money from whom he can accumulate money. Let a man have the same ability, the same industry, the same capacity, and pass his life in a poor and hungry land, the problem of what will be done with his millions will never be a practical one, because his millions will not be accumulated. It requires the brains of the man to create a fortune, but it requires just as much the opportunities of the state.

The great commercial fortunes in this country have been built up because the men had brains and because it was their good fortune to deal with 80,000,000 people who had money. Mr. Carnegie's iron works would never have earned one dollar if there had not been manufacturers and railroads to buy their products. The Standard Oil Company would never have been a wealthy corporation if there had not been a vast population of people who desired to buy its products and had the money to pay for them. The Hill and Harriman railroads would be in the hands of receivers to-day if there were not people—vast numbers of people—who wished to travel over them, to send freight upon them, and had the money to pay for it.

So, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me perfectly apparent that the state has the right to say to any person who has accumulated a fortune, "You shall have the enjoyment of it; you shall have the use of it, but when you come to pass it over to some one else the state has the inherent right to levy upon it such a tax as may fairly represent what the people of the state have contributed toward the fortune."

There can be no tax that rests more solidly upon the principles of inherent justice than an inheritance tax.

We next reach the question of the people who are affected by it. When a tax is levied upon a living man he gets rid of it if he can, and dissatisfaction and sometimes even interference with commercial activity are produced by it. But there is no tax collected so easily, there is no tax yielded to so gracefully, as the tax that does not take from a man what he has himself earned, but takes from an heir some proportion of what he had hoped to receive. It is human nature. A man has earned a certain amount of money and 10 per cent of it is taken from him. It seems to him a heavy imposition. He inherits or receives a certain amount of money. His inheritance is not quite as large as he had hoped, but still he is content. To lose what you have is very different from not gaining quite as much as you had hoped. No form of taxation—and this is an important consideration—will impose so little irritation upon those from whom it comes as an inheritance tax.

I have considered cursorily the rights of the man who has earned the money and the right of the State to ask, as between the State and the originator or earner of the fortune, for its fair proportion.

We now come to the question of the rights of his children or his heirs. Mr. Chairman, I say without any hesitation that they certainly have no rights to be considered. Mr. Rockefeller or any other man who has acquired a large fortune may say that he has the right to the enjoyment of it during his lifetime, and that how far he should have the right to dispose of it after his death is a question to be fairly considered. But a child that is born into the world, and happens to be the child or the grandchild or the grandnephew of Mr. Rockefeller, that has given itself no trouble except the trouble of being born, has no right to demand that a great share of the national wealth shall be set apart for it. It has the same right as every other child born, to have the fair and equal protection of the State, the same opportunities as are given to others—that and nothing more. But to talk about the right to inherit $50,000,000 or $100,000,000, possessed by some child just come into the world, is absurd.

Mr. LACEY. Before the gentleman leaves that point, would the gentleman draw a distinction between the children and the widow, who perhaps has helped to earn or save the estate?

Mr. PERKINS. Why, certainly; I think the widow should have a fair share. But I do not think there is any inherent justice in saying that Mrs. Russell Sage shall have $70,000,000 or $80,000,000. That she should have enough to keep her in comfort and in luxury no one would question, but that she has the right to receive a fortune large beyond any possibility of spending I do not concede.

Mr. PARSONS. Do you deny that the children have the right to some share of the estate?

Mr. PERKINS. It is not necessary to deny that, because a law forbidding it would be absurd. The children of rich men have the right to a sufficient amount to be able to live in comfort, to be able to obtain an education, even, to a certain extent, to be placed beyond the necessities of life. No one questions that. No one would approve of legislation to deprive them of that, or would think for one moment of introducing it. But my friend knows perfectly well that a child when it comes into possession of wealth sufficient for every form of luxury—that a child with $5,000,000 is just as well off as a child with $10,000,000 or $50,000,000. Yes, Mr. Chairman, better off.

Mr. STANLEY. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. PERKINS. Certainly.

Mr. STANLEY. In speaking of the inherent right of a child to inherit, the law does not contemplate any such right and never did, if I understand it. The fact that the father, the possessor of the property, has the absolute right in all States of this Union, and a right not denied by any Federal statute, to dispose of his property, recognizes the old common-law maxim, as old as the law, that the heir has no inherent right to the property of the parent.

Mr. PERKINS. Undoubtedly.

Mr. PARSONS. Is it not true that in the continental countries of the world, where this inheritance tax is in vogue, laws provide that a certain proportion of the inheritance shall go to the children?

Mr. PERKINS. That is so in some of them—in France and some others—but not in all.

But, Mr. Chairman, what I was suggesting was not the strict legal question, but the moral question. The child had the right to complain if instead of being the possessor of $20,000,000 he finds himself the possessor of $15,000,000. What are the advantages of enormous wealth? It does not bring happiness, greater happiness than possessed by others, but it brings what is a dangerous element in the community and leads to civil discord. The envy—you may say the unfounded envy—the ill will in large masses of the community toward persons of very great wealth is strong and unfortunate, even when that wealth has been acquired by the man himself. It is very much stronger when the spectacle is presented of a man possessed of wealth far beyond the capacity of most to acquire, the result of no labor of his own, and when to that is added, as is often added, the spectacle of the misuse of great wealth, the indulgence in vice, and dissipation and dissoluteness, then we have not only a very unsavory social problem, but we have a dangerous political problem.

Let us consider whether it is for the benefit of the child that a vast fortune should be set aside for it. That parents should desire a reasonable competency for their children, property that will secure to them the advantages of education and reasonable freedom of action in life, is natural and is commendable. No one would seek to interfere with this. But the desire that a child should inherit $20,000,000 or $50,000,000 or $100,000,000, a sum vastly in excess of any possible or reasonable need for any profitable mode of life, presents a very different question. Though the parent may entertain such a desire, the state is not bound to regard it. Such accumulations are usually neither for the benefit of the state nor the heir.

We need not go as far as Mr. Carnegie, who thinks any inheritance a curse to those who inherit, but we can surely agree with him when he says of a progressive inheritance tax:

> Every dollar of taxes required might be obtained in this manner without interfering in the least with the forces which tend to the development of the country.

He adds further:

> By taxing the estate heavily at death the state marks its condemnation of the selfish millionaire's unworthy life.

It is not necessary to say this. We need not condemn the millionaire. If his selfishness in the administration of his estate does not excite our admiration, there is no reason that the state should levy a penalty upon it. But, on the other hand, there is no reason that a man having $50,000,000 to dispose of, made out of the advantages which the state affords, should assert the right to give every dollar of it to his children. If the father harbors the desire that his descendants should be enormously rich people in the community, this is a vulgar desire, entitled to no consideration. Certainly it is no advantage to his daughters if they are allowed to inherit a sum so vast that it becomes a temptation to some worthless foreign nobleman to marry them.

I do not say it would be absurd to say that many persons inheriting great wealth do not use their property judiciously, but it is true that in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred it is better that a large estate be divided among a number of people upon whom the stimulus of endeavor still remains than to have it held by one. Almost necessarily the possession by inheritance, not as the result of our own labor, of an enormous fortune, tends first to indolence, and that is bad; and beyond that tends strongly to a feeling that a man so situated is to some extent raised above the laws that control the most of us; that feeling may merely result in idleness, it may result in dissoluteness, it may result in vice, and all those things are most unfortunate in the case of those who, because of their great wealth, are specially prominent before the community.

Mr. Chairman, shall it be said that it is unfair for us to so restrict the amount of property that may be left that a man may be prevented from ruining his own descendants? Is it an advantage to a man who inherits enormous wealth, and lacking the stimulus of endeavor, leads a worthless and sometimes a dissipated life? Is it an advantage for the daughters of families of great wealth that they should become the objects of temptation to fortune hunters? Was it an advantage to Miss Vanderbilt or Miss Gould that her share should pass untouched by the state and attract the attention of some worthless foreign adventurer? I think not.

Let me say, in passing, Mr. Chairman—and it is one of the many things to be said to the credit of this land—they talk about this being the land of dollars. It is about the only land in the world where any romance still remains. [Applause.] In this country the great majority of American men, thank the Lord, marry their wives because they want to and do not consider solely the patrimony of their brides. In foreign lands, among those of a certain social rank, the matter is as purely a financial problem as if one was making an investment in bank stocks. If the result of a progressive inheritance tax shall be so to diminish the share of the daughters of very rich families that they may stay at home and marry Americans instead of going broad and marrying worthless dukes and princes, then happiness will be increased and the welfare of the land would not be lessened.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. PERKINS. Certainly.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Does the gentleman believe that some good might be accomplished by limiting the period for which estates may now be entailed in this country?

Mr. PERKINS. Yes; I think that is desirable. It has been done to some extent and ought to be done to a larger extent.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Is the gentleman familiar with the French law on that subject?

Mr. PERKINS. Well, mildly so.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I believe there is no entailment whatever allowed in France.

Mr. PERKINS. That is my understanding.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Which, of course, would substantially diminish the amount to which an estate might increase before coming into the hands of the heirs.

Mr. PERKINS. Precisely. That, I understand, is the French law. Now, some say, in reference to possible evil from the accumulation of great estates, that they will disintegrate by themselves. Mr. Chairman, that is not entirely correct. The old saying, that it took only three generations from poverty to poverty, is not true in reference to the great fortunes of the present day. Right in our own country, take families like the Vanderbilts, the Astors, and I might name many others, among whom wealth has been found for several generations. Certainly there is no sign in any of those families of any rapid return to a condition of destitution. Estates are often dissipated as a result of the recklessness or the vice of the person having the property. That is, of course, a misfortune. It is a misfortune to the public that any man, worth more or worth less, should dissipate his estate by vice, by waste in any way. But taking out the case of those who are ruined by inheriting too much money and so go to the devil, the tendency of estates to increase will not be seriously checked as a general thing, considering the great size they often reach by the ordinary processes of division through will or inheritance. And so, unless the State levies its reasonable percentage upon the money that has been gained by its citizens, the tendency to the growth of estates will become a more serious problem as the future progresses.

Now, Mr. Chairman, without any further discussion upon the general principles that are involved, I wish to say a word or two in reference to possible legislation on this subject.

The rate of taxation upon these great estates that would be just to the public, that would utilize the proper proportion of them for the advancement of public weal, that would also accomplish a useful purpose in preventing the rapid piling up of fortunes so unwieldly as to be injurious alike to the community and the possessor is a problem to be carefully considered. Mr. Carnegie declared himself in favor of an inheritance tax which would equal 50 per cent in the case of the largest fortunes. It could be strongly argued that even a tax as great as that is not inherently unjust.

As I said in the beginning, I do not expect the bill I have introduced to be reported upon at this Congress. I do believe, however, that we are starting a live and important question, important as a source of revenue to the Government and important for its direct and indirect social effect on the community. The question of how much this tax should be is one that is to be gravely considered. This objection will be made by some, that if you impose a heavy inheritance tax it will be evaded by the man in his lifetime disposing of his own property. In the first place, Mr. Chairman, in any proper bill, in the bill that I introduced, we impose the same tax on a gift that is made either to take effect at the death of the donor or with intent to evade the law. I do not mean a gift made by a man in the vigor of life, but under such circumstances that the court would say that it was made in anticipation of his death and to evade the law. So that can be reached.

Further, if the indirect effect of this legislation was that men to a larger extent disposed of their estate in their own lifetime, certainly that would be an unmixed advantage. If the man who intends to give his money to charity would give it when he is alive and would be his own executor, instead of leaving other people to execute his will, it would be infinitely better for the public.

We can take a case so well known as the Tilden will, where a great charity devised by a great lawyer failed of effect because the great lawyer was unwilling to execute it in his lifetime, and left it to the courts and others to carry into effect, in which they failed.

Furthermore, Mr. Chairman, let no one be disturbed by the idea that there would be any large evasion of the inheritance-tax law. A man will go a great way to avoid a tax he has to pay himself, but the man that strips himself of his own estate in order to save other people paying a tax, I do not care if they be his own heirs, is exceedingly rare.

Nature fights on our side in this matter. A man will resort to many devices in order to avoid taxation which he himself must pay, but few are the men who are willing to strip themselves of the enjoyment of their own wealth in their own lifetime to lessen the burden of taxation that will fall on others. The example of King Lear was not so fortunate that it is apt to excite followers among modern multi-millionaires. The desire of a man to hold during his own lifetime and under his own control and for his own enjoyment that which is his own is one of the strongest principles of human nature, and it will not lose its force no matter what inheritance law Congress may enact.

Now, as to the amount. I think it is inherently right that in any tax imposed, if it is a progressive tax, that the rate should be based upon the share that the person receives. Indeed, I doubt if an inheritance-tax law which said that the rate of taxation should be increased, not by the amount which the beneficiary receives but by the size of the estate, would be constitutional. In the last decision on this question Judge White suggested the question as to whether it would be constitutional to say that a man's tax should be increased, not by what came into his possession but by the aggregate size of the estate, and this question it is certainly wise to avoid.

Apart from that, anyone can see the injustice in many cases. A man, for instance, leaves a million dollars, all to one child. Then our tax is levied upon the million dollars the one child receives. But suppose, on the other hand, it was levied on the size of the estate and the man with a million dollars gave one-half of it to charity and $100,000 each to five different persons. Anyone can see the injustice of fixing the same rate of taxation. Everybody, Mr. Chairman, would see the unfairness of that, and, I think, also the illegality. In the bill I have suggested for consideration the tax increases with a good deal of rapidity as the amount of the share increases.

What is the reasonable proportion of a great estate that should fall to the public, what is the just proportion that should be made subject to the direction of the deceased, is a problem to be considered. I have presented a bill which provides that where the share of any beneficiary is less than a million dollars the rates shall vary, amounting in the case of a direct heir to about 2 per cent. This certainly is reasonable. Where the share shall exceed that amount there shall be levied on the excess duties varying from 12 per cent to something over 25 per cent on all sums in excess of thirty millions. These duties are fixed by the share received by the beneficiary and not by the size of the estate. This principle modifies considerably the severity of the tax and meets the suggestions thrown out by the courts.

Will anyone say that such a rate of imposition is unfair as between the state and the beneficiary, or will be injurious to the person who receives his estate to that extent diminished? No; Mr. Chairman. It is often said that we should legislate for the greatest good of the greatest number. I believe that a reasonably drawn progressive inheritance-tax law is for the greatest good of all. It is for the good of the citizens who will receive their proportion of the benefit. It is for the good of the heir, who will receive an unwieldly fortune to some extent lessened. It will benefit the state, it will assist in the solution of social problems, it will not check the development of enterprise or the desire to acquire wealth on the part of the individual, it will lessen some of the evils of our present condition, it will harm none and help all.

Though I recognize that this law is not to be practically considered, yet I believe that within a very few years a progressive inheritance tax will be as much the established law of this land as it is of England, of France, of every great European nation, and that no tax will be more fair, the justice of no tax will be more thoroughly recognized by the community, and the results of no tax will be more satisfactory to the people of the land. [Applause.]

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, listening to the remarks of the gentleman from New York [Mr. PERKINS] upon the subject of an inheritance tax, my attention is directed also to the matter of an income tax, and to some things that are involved in the consideration of the two questions. All know that as matters now stand, unless through change in the personnel of the Supreme Court, leading to a change in its views and decision upon this subject, an income tax can not be imposed and sustained. There are a great many people of the nation, and I am one of them, who believe that a graduated tax upon incomes is a most righteous and most desirable tax. I quite agree with the gentleman from New York [Mr. PERKINS], and with those taking a similar view, that an inheritance tax also is most desirable, and I hope the time is not far distant when we may have it established in this country.

In view of the fact, however, that an income tax is a mere experiment—not as to the qualities of the tax or its beneficial features, but as to the opinion of the court concerning its constitutionality—and inasmuch also as there are a good many other things that in the estimation of a good many people in this country would be wholesome as matters of legislation, which perhaps are not constitutional at this time, efforts are made from time to time to amend the Constitution, and such efforts will be continued almost indefinitely. When we reflect that no amendments to that great instrument have been made in more than a hundred years, excepting only the three which grew out of the civil war, and that excepting these civil war amendments and the one in relation to the electoral college, growing out of the contest between Jefferson and Burr for the Presidency more than a century ago, all the other amendments may be regarded as practically part of the original Constitution, we may safely conclude that the Constitution will not be amended in our day through the submission of amendments by the Congress.

The Constitution itself, however, provides another way of securing amendments to that instrument—that is, by the action in the first instance of the several States themselves. Article V is as follows:

> The Congress, whenever two-thirds of both Houses shall deem it necessary, shall propose amendments to this Constitution, or, on the application of the legislatures of two-thirds of the several States, shall call a convention for proposing amendments, which, in either case, shall be valid to all intents and purposes, as part of this Constitution, when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States, or by conventions in three-fourths thereof, as the one or the other mode of ratification may be proposed by the Congress: Provided, That no amendment which may be made prior to the year 1808 shall in any manner affect the first and fourth clauses in the ninth section of the first article; and that no State, without its consent, shall be deprived of its equal suffrage in the Senate.

There has been a great deal of agitation in the country from time to time, and there is perhaps a good deal now, over the proposed amendment of the Constitution in a good many important particulars. With some of this agitation and some of these movements I am in sympathy; with others I am not. A great many very good people, entitled to their views and entitled to a hearing upon them, are of the opinion that in a good many important particulars the Constitution ought to be amended. For instance, there are those who believe that it ought to be amended so as to provide for female suffrage. Others would have a marriage and divorce amendment. Some believe it should be amended with reference to the liquor traffic, or by way of prohibition of the liquor traffic. Many believe there ought to be a constitutional provision for the election of United States Senators by direct vote of the people. There are those who are of the opinion that the President and Vice-President should also be chosen by a direct vote. Some believe the Presidential term ought to be six years instead of four years, and that the President ought to be ineligible for reelection as his own successor. Some people, particularly in the latitude of Washington, believe it is vastly important to have the Presidential term begin later in the season, so that inauguration day may fall at a time when the weather is more agreeable and fit for a pageant than it is likely to be about the 4th day of March. A great many people believe that Congress ought to be convened shortly after the election, instead of thirteen months after the Members of the House of Representatives are chosen. There are some who believe that provision ought to be made in the Constitution whereby the Government, under suitable regulations of law, might insure the lives of citizens of this great Republic. I am one of those who entertain that opinion. Life insurance by the Government could be made both safe and profitable; and what a boon to the people to get insurance at what it is worth! There are people who believe that by an amendment to the Constitution greater power, better-defined power, power that may be more easily exercised and more effectively employed, might be supplied for dealing with great trusts and other mighty corporate agencies of the land. I need not take the time of the House in enumerating the various matters concerning which amendments have been and are persistently urged and earnestly desired. I mention some of them merely as preliminary to the consideration of whether or not it might be advisable for the people of this country, by action of their various State legislatures, to call upon Congress to make provision for a constitutional convention, in which all the plans and schemes of amendment might be presented. Such a convention surely would be composed, in part at least, of the ablest men in the land. It would be a very great body of American statesmen and citizens. I believe the very fact of the assembling of such a convention—I believe, indeed, the preliminary discussions leading up to it or designed to bring it about—would be productive of much good in legislation in Congress and in the several State legislatures. The convention, I presume, would submit some amendments for the ratification of the people, and State conventions might follow, for considering and determining the adoption or rejection of the amendments submitted.

Now, I am not one of those who believe that the old Constitution is worn out, or that the ingenuity and statesmanship and patriotism of to-day would be likely to supply something which in its fundamental principles would be any improvement upon, or even as good as, that old instrument; but I am one of those who do believe that a constitution made more than a hundred years ago, when conditions were vastly different, when corporations were in their infancy, when our population was sparse, when wealth was not concentrated, when great agencies in government were not employed as they are employed now, before the day of the telegraph and telephone and the many triumphs of electricity, before many of the mighty inventions of to-day and yesterday were dreamed of; that a constitution made then may lack something now. I believe the makers did not embody in that instrument of matchless worth, our Constitution, all that might be or is now sufficient or desirable for present needs or to equip the people to meet the rapidly growing needs of the future of a great country. I believe a convention of American citizens, assembled for the purpose of considering various propositions to amend that Constitution, would be likely to submit some wholesome and timely amendments, perhaps a good many, but some, at least, which would meet the approval of the American people, and, by their sovereign will, be made part of the Constitution.

I believe there is enough of wisdom and patriotism and justice in the American people, enough pride in their past, interest in the present, and hope of the future, to protect us against any possible danger that the Constitution might be impaired by the adoption of an unwise amendment. It requires three-fourths of the States, either through conventions or through State legislatures, to ratify any amendment to the Constitution. I can not believe that any amendment not deserving ratification, any amendment which really would not be an improvement, an enlargement, a perfecting, of the Constitution would meet with the approval of legislatures or conventions in three-fourths of the States of this Union. Of course, our action here, if any action is to be taken along this line, would be action only after the State legislatures, to the number of two-thirds of those in the Union, shall have called upon us for action. A good deal of time has been taken in committee and some in the House and in the Senate on various propositions to amend the Constitution. Every session these propositions are up. There are hearings before committees and occasional reports, sometimes lengthy and sometimes learned, upon this or that proposition, but no amendments are made, and no opportunity is given the people to consider whether or not any amendment should be made.

I am one of those who believe that there ought to be recurrence as frequently as possible to the judgment of the mass of American citizens. I believe that under our system of government it is wise every now and then, and quite frequently, to get at the sense of our people, affording them full opportunity to make themselves heard. There is a growing feeling, I think, and I think it is one that has foundation in real fact and real need, that very often legislation is too far away from the masses of the people; that their will is expressed in legislation too slowly and too imperfectly; that combined powers that can make known their wishes quickly, that exert their potent influence rapidly, that can concentrate at the very point where things are to be done, are more likely to prevail than the profound sentiments of the scattered citizenship of the country.

There are a great many people who believe that in our Constitution there ought to be provision made for what is popularly known as the Initiative and Referendum, by means of which the people themselves might directly suggest and initiate and directly pass upon legislation. I believe our Constitution would be improved by providing in it for this exercise of power by the people.

The whole problem of modern government, where the people seek to govern themselves, is involved in the one proposition of enabling the great masses of people, the 999, scattered and dispersed in their various vocations over the country, to make their power felt, register their will, and have done that which they desire to have done, in their own interest, for the welfare of the whole community and for the perpetuity of the Government. It is vastly important for the people that they be provided with the means of opposing effectively, and surely and swiftly overcoming those who have usurped authority, and those who by the concentration of wealth and by the powerful modern agencies for its creation and utilization in all sorts of ways, good and bad, are constantly pushing on to further their own interests and are constantly growing more heedless of the rights and interests of the plain American citizen. Now, if the Constitution could be amended so that the people will have more power, so that there may be quicker response to popular demands, so that there may be a correct and more authoritative registering of the popular will, very much will have been done toward insuring the perpetuity of our government and perserving and enforcing the rights of our citizens.

An election was held last month for Members of the House of Representatives of the Sixtieth Congress. Unless there should be an extraordinary session called, the Members then elected will not assemble to discharge the duties of their office until December of next year—1907—thirteen months after they were elected. There really ought to be in the Congress of the United States, as there is in all of the State legislatures, an assembling of the newly elected body quickly after the election, while the Members are fresh from the people, whence they come with the authorization of the people, the command of the people, to do certain things and to refrain from the doing of certain other things; to make new laws; to amend or repeal old laws. A great many things happen in this country in the space of thirteen months, and Representatives who do not serve the people early, often do not actually serve them at all.

It is true that a Congress could be assembled, under the Constitution as it is, very much earlier than we meet. Instead of meeting on the first Monday of December, we could fix our meeting day at any time after the commencement of the Congressional term. Any time after the 4th of next March the Sixtieth Congress, by operation of law, if we saw proper to change the law with reference to the time of meeting, might be assembled. Somehow or other, I know not why, there seems to be opposition to any change, and the result is, Congress after Congress, we meet first in December, thirteen months after our election. We choose Members of the House of Representatives for two years, and thirteen months of that period are suffered to pass before the Representatives enter upon the discharge of their duties. This would appear passing strange if it were not so familiar and common, if it were not the order of things. It is strange that we do not amend the law, do the best that we can. But there could very easily be an amendment to the Constitution, if a convention were assembled to consider such things, by means of which Congress would be assembled soon after the election, speedily, in January or even in December following the election.

Then there is no reason why a Congress, after its successor has been chosen, should sit at all, except in extraordinary session, before the new Congress comes in—when there is, in the judgment of the President, an emergency for Congressional action before the new Congress can act.

There is no reason in the nature of things, there is no reason in the essence of good government, why this Congress instead of the new Sixtieth Congress should now be in session. Those who declined reelection or failed to secure it are supposed not to be so vigilant, so zealous, in the closing months of a term as those newly elected, who have the stimulus of a fresh baptism of popular favor, and something here for ambition to feed upon. I speak of this in generalties, because I know in many instances men whose terms are soon to expire have enough vigilance and are patriotic enough to be useful up to the very last hour of their service in a short session of Congress, when they know they will not be Members of the next Congress.

There can be no good reason why a Congress should be elected in November, for a period of two years, to assemble thirteen months later, and in a few months perhaps be involved in the throes of the on-coming campaign, a very large share of the membership being candidates for renomination and reelection. Now, it may be supposed, and if we were not acquainted with the history of things and did not know how things go here, it would be supposed, that a change in the meeting time of Congress could be easily effected; but it can not be easily effected. We know that for years and generations, even, there have been efforts made without effect for a change, and perhaps other years and other generations may pass without its being accomplished. But I think it is very fair to assume that through a constitutional convention this change at least might be made; and if the Constitution were amended in no other particular, if no other change were made in it, there would be enough of consideration for all the expense and all the labors of the convention if provision were made for assembling Congress speedily after election. To-day a constitutional amendment is necessary, because now the term begins on the 4th day of March, and, by shortening or lengthening one term, it should be made to begin in December or January next after the election.

Now, I believe there would be wisdom in an amendment limiting the incumbency of the Presidential office to a single term. In some of the States the governor is ineligible to reelection as his own successor, as in Missouri, where the treasurer likewise is ineligible.

When you look to the new State constitutions, there will be found many minor provisions which might, with great propriety, be incorporated in the Federal Constitution. For instance, a number of these constitutions enable the governor to veto items in appropriation bills. A bill may contain thousands of items, and the governor has the right to veto any one or any number of them and approve the bill as to the others.

I believe such a provision would be immensely beneficial. There are a number of abuses it would cut off, and the saving would be great. Too often it is only necessary to get an item, no matter how objectionable, into a great appropriation bill, and as the bill must go through and does go through, that item stands with the very best and the most necessary ones in it. The result is that combinations are invited, and sometimes, I fear, combinations are made, by which A assists B and B assists A, and the unholy alliance extends through the alphabet, with the result that probably two or three or a dozen or fifty or a hundred items are incorporated in the bill, not one of which, perhaps, has merit enough to stand alone or to win by itself upon its own merits. Now, if the President, when he comes to pass upon such a bill, could veto any item or items in it, there would be cut off the tendency to the abuse of combinations for the purpose of loading up bills, and in large part the possibility of success, because it might be assumed that most objectionable items would be vetoed.

Then I think the veto power itself ought to be limited, for I do not believe that the President's power in legislation ought to be equal to the voting power and the persuasive power of one-sixth of the membership of the House and one-sixth of the membership of the Senate. It is one thing for the President to veto a bill and it is another thing for that veto to be effective, unless one-sixth of the membership of this House and one-sixth of the membership of the Senate, added to a majority of each body, unite to override the veto. The real purpose of a veto, it seems to me, ought to be to invite the attention of the legislative body to supposed objections in the matter vetoed. It ought to be rather in the way of a holding up, a cautionary sort of proceeding. It ought not to require so large a vote to overcome a veto. It ought to be rather a check upon legislation, a challenging of the special attention of the lawmakers to the matter regarded as objectionable. "I do not believe this matter ought to pass. Please look into it more carefully; please give it reconsideration and see what your deliberate judgment about it is." But of late years there has been no particular abuse of the veto power, and a change in it is perhaps a matter of comparatively small importance.

But, as to the main proposition. Here we have a Constitution, one of the greatest and best ever brought into being by human brains; we have a Constitution framed in the infancy of the Republic, framed in the primitive days, before the great railroad had an existence, before great electric motors and telegraph and telephone were known; before the modern agencies called "trusts" had a being or were dreamed of; before the appearance of the millionaire as a common, every-day citizen; before the near approach of the billionaire; before the aggregation of hundreds and thousands of millions of dollars under single control; and it seems to me that in our progress, in the history of our nation and of the world, we certainly have reached a time when it might be wise to assemble a convention to consider whether or not amendments could with profit be proposed to the great conservator of our liberties; and if they should be proposed, for the people deliberately, after their own manner, in their own fashion, to consider whether or not the Constitution should be amended.

Now, out of the discussion that would necessarily arise in a convention and after a convention certainly would come an awakening that could not be anything else than beneficial to the people of this country. There would be attention centered upon matters that are now overlooked and neglected. The people would have opportunity to assert their power and resume their control over some of the things, control of which has largely slipped from their hands. For instance, there is going on all the time now a conflict in opinion, and sometimes a conflict beyond opinion, between capital and labor, where serious questions as to the writ of injunction are involved. There has been a great deal of discussion and much uncertainty in a great many minds as to how the matter really stands. There is one school of thought that takes the view that the courts have the inherent power to determine what writs they ought to issue, and, if they decide they ought to issue particular ones, to issue them; that it is an inherent, necessary, preservative power and prerogative of the courts; that the court must say what is necessary to maintain its dignity and preserve its authority and execute its mandates, and that there is no power under the Constitution, no agency in the Government, to interfere with that exercise of authority.

Then there is another school of thought claiming that the courts, excepting alone the Supreme Court of the United States, being creatures of the lawmaking power, are within the scope of such laws as are made and such laws as may be made; that the question whether or not particular writs should issue, the circumstances under which they shall issue, if issued at all, are legislative questions and not judicial questions; that the power to make courts is the power also to unmake courts; that the right to confer, through legislative action, power upon courts carries with it also the constitutional right to circumscribe that power, take away part of it, and direct how it shall be exercised.

Now, that is an unsettled question in this country, with a tendency all the time in the courts to magnify themselves and to determine more and more and more that they have this power and that power, never given to them, as was foreseen by the wise men of the early day; a tendency ever toward magnifying the power of the courts and lessening the power of the legislative and executive branches when brought into conflict with them, and what is of far more importance, lessening in a good many instances the inherent and vital privileges and immunities of the people.

I believe a great deal of good might be done by a constitutional convention considering that among other questions. Shall our courts be final and supreme arbiters? Shall the court determine what its powers are? Shall the court, independently of the Congress, determine when it shall issue a particular writ, who violates an injunction or a writ of prohibition or any other extraordinary writ, and what the punishment shall be—all determined by a single lifetime appointee—or shall the people, through those whom they elect to Congress from time to time and who are responsible to them, determine what the power of the courts shall be? Shall the Congress determine within what bounds the powers given shall be exercised, what powers they will give to the courts, and what powers they will withhold from them? I believe a question like this is worthy of the consideration of the ablest minds of the country, and I believe that a great constitutional convention would give to it, as to other great questions that would naturally arise and naturally be suggested, the consideration which they really merit.

Now, I believe one of the troubles of this country at this time in the conflict between labor and capital grows out of the assumption on the part of the courts of the right to issue certain writs when they have no right to issue them unless authorized by the lawmaking power to issue them. A court created by law possesses no power except what the law gives it. [Applause.] Those who can create can destroy, if they see proper to destroy; those who can grant power can withhold power. The question of whether or not a particular writ should issue in a particular instance—barring only the United States Supreme Court, created by the Constitution itself—certainly ought to be, it seems to me, a question to be determined, as all other questions of lawmaking are determined, by the lawmaking body of the country—the Congress of the United States. And there ought to be some way of getting at undesirable judges, whether unfaithful or no longer efficient, and something more expeditious, something less cumbersome, something surer than the one remedy provided by the Constitution—impeachment—ought to be available. There ought to be something equivalent to removal by address. There ought to be some added sense of responsibility imposed upon every man who holds a judicial office in this country by life tenure.

Mr. STANLEY. Is it not true that that was one of the first defects pointed out in the Constitution within a few years after it was adopted? If my memory serves me correctly, Thomas Jefferson pointed out the danger of putting that power into the hands of the court.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Well, of course, Mr. Chairman, Jefferson's writings I think are full of warnings and admonitions and expressions of fear as to what may result from an encroaching judiciary.

Everybody in this country has respect for the courts, and in a body like this, where a large majority are members of the bar and a good many of them ex-judges, of course respect to the highest degree exists, but there is a tendency in the human mind and in human conduct to gather power, and, unconsciously perhaps—sometimes unconsciously and sometimes consciously—to usurp authority. You appoint a man judge for life, removable only by impeachment, a slow, tedious process, which, as the history of the country shows, usually brings no results. All he has to do is to avoid an offending on account of which he can be removed by the process of impeachment. A large number of his actions are not reviewable in higher courts. Either there is no provision for review or those affected injuriously are too poor to go to a higher court. The result is that there is a tendency all the time for the judge—assuming he is trying to do what is right and proper—if he thinks the case is one calling for a strong remedy to bottom his decision and justify his action upon the most extreme action, the most radical assertion of power, of any other court or judge whose ruling falls under his notice. He may go a little grain beyond any other one. Another case arises, and another judge goes further still, following and enlarging upon precedent; and so it goes, a constant, steady, gradual, and sure advance in the claim of power, in the assumption of power, in the exercise of power, with no unquestioned agency to check or correct. Now, take the matter of injunctions, if you please.

Mr. STANLEY. Will the gentleman yield for an interruption at that point? I am very deeply interested, and I would like to ask the gentleman if he does not think it would be wise, in cases of constructive contempts, where heavy fines and long terms of imprisonment may probably be imposed, to have the punishment inflicted by the intervention of a jury?

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, I have heretofore expressed myself in favor of that, but I am trying to talk now about the fundamental principles rather than about the details of legislation.

The writ of injunction of course is an old writ. The courts assume to apply it to new facts, to new cases as they arise. The question comes up, and a most interesting question it is—it is one, in my judgment, that could be dealt with by legislation, but more effectively dealt with by a constitutional convention—when the new facts arise, when the new conditions are brought about, when there is supposed to be occasion for the application of an old principle to a new case—who is to say, who has the right to say, whether the old principle or the old writ shall be applied to the new state of facts, to the new condition of things? The judges assume that they have the right, and for a century in this country and more they have been steadily moving forward on that theory. My judgment is that the legislative body, and that alone, has the right to say whether when a new state of things arises, when new conditions develop, when new agencies are brought into play, this or that writ or this or that process shall be employed.

Now, take, for instance, the great development in railroad building and railroad operation. In the olden days, when the writ of injunction came into being, there were no railroads. No question arose as to whether there ought to be an injunction issued in a dispute between the mighty employer and the humble employee, because none could arise. There were no such conditions and no such situation at that time. In the process of time, by means of inventions, development of the country, growth of population, multiplication of corporations, vast increase in their power, functions, and ramifications, new questions arose, entirely different from the issues of the dead centuries. Yet the contention is that in order to determine what a court of its own power and right—its own inherent, necessary power, as they say, and its own constitutional and prerogative right—may do or shall do, the courts are justified in drifting away back to the pretended fountain of judicial power, the decisions of English judges and English courts, centuries ago, in cases having really no analogy, when you consider them properly, to the cases in which the principles thence deduced are now applied. Now, is it in the power of the courts to go on eternally in that way? Is it the right of the courts to determine when new conditions arise, when new agencies come into play, what they shall do, and how they shall do it, or is the determination within the power of the lawmaking body? My judgment is that the lawmakers have the right to determine about it. Some people talk as if when you interfere with the courts in any particular, when you raise any question as to whether a court possesses power which different judges of the country assume to have and which they exercise, you are seeking to undermine the foundations of our Government and destroy property rights; invading the province wherein the courts stand as the guardians and protectors of everything that the citizen enjoys under the law.

Who make the laws? The representatives of the body of our citizenship itself, men selected for the very purpose of doing that very work, men responsible to their constituents for the way in which they do it or for neglect to do it. What reason is there to suppose that these men will not have as tender a regard for those upon whom they directly depend as will these lifetime judges who are not dependent at all upon the great body politic?

I did not mean to drift off into a discussion of this matter, because it is really foreign to the subject to which I wished to address myself. What I wished was merely to throw out the suggestion that I think the time has arrived when a constitutional convention might by action of Congress, stimulated and brought about under the Constitution by the State legislatures, be assembled to consider whether or not in some important particulars this great Constitution of ours might not be made better. This little discussion with regard to injunctions, by way of illustration, although it went much further than illustration, is an afterthought, and just simply happened.

Now, having disposed of that and being upon the floor I wish to address myself to the provision in the bill upon the subject of the new spelling. It is traveling a long way to go from the question of amendment of the Constitution to an amendment of our orthography, but not caring to take the floor simply for a discussion of the minor amendment matter, I wish to make an observation or two upon it now. I was a little surprised to find that provision in the bill, and I am a little surprised to find how seriously some people seem to take it. It seems to me it is somewhat of a new thing to legislate upon the subject of spelling, to provide by statute how people shall spell; and it is somewhat new, it seems to me, to cut off, in so far as you could cut off by statute, the possibility of improvement in spelling. I suppose there is such a possibility. It certainly seems so to those who support what is called the "new spelling;" they seem to think there is not only possibility, but great promise of reform. This proposed legislation proceeds upon the theory that we had better nail down English where we have it, and let the reformers break through the statute, if they can, or repeal it, if they may, in order to make any changes or any improvement in spelling.

There are all sorts of imaginary difficulties seen down at the Printing Office, and there seems to be danger, in the estimation of some gentlemen, of our surplus vanishing in the increased expenses to come if some people be indulged in their taste for the new spelling. I do not know much about that subject, but I do not exactly understand how changes in spelling are going to be so very costly. Take the word "though." I do not see how it will cost much more to print that word "tho" than "though." I do not see what great racking there is to be of the printing machines; I do not see what great mental disturbance is going to take place among those who set the type or those who correct the proofs. And I am rather of the opinion that an individual, whether he be in public office or out of public office, has some little inherent right to a choice in spelling. I think that a man has a right to depart from what is regarded as the most generally authorized spelling and try to introduce a new way of spelling a particular word or particular words. It seems to me he has, and if he furnishes "copy" for the Printing Office in an official document, and has any pride of opinion or any desire to further his propaganda in reference to spelling, I do not see where there is any objection to allowing him to be indulged in that fancy or that ambition. Nor can I see how demoralization is to come into the Printing Office. I do not see why anybody is going to throw away the old books and get new print; I do not see why all the school books are to be turned out and new books to be bought, merely because somebody chooses to spell some words in a way which he regards as better than the more common spelling. If instead of legislating as the committee proposes we should legislate just the other way and provide that this new spelling should be followed in the printing of public documents, I would not fear a destruction at once of the old dictionaries or old school books or anything else that has gone into print. I do not understand how difficulties will come about in the stereotyping process. Why, if a letter or two be lopped off, or if one letter be substituted for two or three letters, there is going to be any difficulty in stereotyping, I do not know. I do not think there is to be any difficulty about it. I believe seriously that our good Committee on Appropriations has, in a spasm of needless care for the welfare of the Republic in an orthographic way, gone a little further than it is necessary for it to go, and, let me say also, a little further than it is desirable for it to go. Will not the Appropriation Committee indulge us a little longer in the freedom and liberty which we have enjoyed heretofore, under the august authority of Webster, Worcester, and the rest of them, with reference to spelling? Let them give us a little more time, and see whether we can bring something out of it even without their aid. Will they not suspend for a year or two? Let us wait until the new Congress comes in. Let the Appropriations Committee deliberate upon this a little longer.

How are you going to familiarize yourself with the new spelling unless there be some new spelling. Spelling is very much a matter of habit. It is very much a matter of what we are familiar with and what we are not familiar with. Take some of these words; for instance, the word "though," which I instanced before. Suppose in a little while we should get used to the spelling "tho." Would we not get along very well with it? Great changes have taken place in the orthography of the language, great changes have taken place in the language itself, and great changes will take place, but I do not recollect that any of them in this country have taken place by virtue of any statute of the Congress of the United States or of any suggestion of the Committee on Appropriations, ripened and crystallized into law.

There are some things we can get along with, it seems to me, without legislation, and spelling, I believe, is one of them. There is no need for uniformity in it. The truth is that there is no uniformity about it. If we were to make a test here, you could give out 100 or 500 words, perhaps a very much smaller number, and let each Member of the House write them down, and I will venture to say that there would be some variety in the spelling. You can do that anywhere. Some people have the faculty of spelling and some people have it not.

Well, now, the spelling of words has changed greatly in the last half century; very greatly in a century. Why do these gentlemen not go back to the good old Elizabethan era, the palmy and glorious era of English literature, and adopt the spelling of those days? Why not swing us back over the turbulent period of latter-day change? And why not go back to the old forms of letters, as well as of words, or just let us alone a little while longer?

The President, I understand, wishes to spell in a new way, and is doing it. Why not, if you wish, deny to the President the right to spell as he pleases in any document which he sends to the Public Printer? Why not make the issue a little more direct with him? Why bury it in the bowels of a great appropriation bill? Let the matter come up in a simple way. Put your reasons forth in speech and in reports, and let the President put his reasons forth in a veto message if he chooses to veto your bill. I wish to have a chance to look at some words as they spell them in the new way, and by and by, perhaps gradually, I may drop into that way. I would not have this new spelling eternally new. I think it ought to have such a chance as it may have without legislation against it. I think it is one of the subjects that we can let alone. I think that this committee can withdraw its attention from this subject and concentrate on something else, something upon which its attention has already rested, or upon some other new and interesting subject. At all events, I think the committee need not go into the business of coercing everybody or anybody about the manner of spelling. When the Public Printer cries for relief, when the compositors fail to properly execute the work they have to perform, when the proof readers are weary and grow faint in the discharge of their duties, then it will be time for this mighty committee to intervene, then it will be time for these gentlemen to turn aside from the general subject of appropriating away our money and interpose legislative barriers against appropriating away any of the letters in some of our words. I hope the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations and his associates will see whether or not there can be found something else upon which for the time being they can exercise their surplus power and zeal.

Mr. TAWNEY. Do I understand the gentleman from Missouri to say that the committee has made the change?

Mr. DE ARMOND. No.

Mr. TAWNEY. Or that the proposed legislation makes the change?

Mr. DE ARMOND. No; I do not suppose that it does, or at least there is no reason to suppose so. But what I was saying was that the committee proposes to provide by law that certain words shall be spelled in certain ways. Now, I think—of course I suggest this very modestly—I think the committee has gone a little beyond its province as limited under the rules.

Mr. TAWNEY. What has the gentleman from Missouri to say with respect to the province of the Executive, who proposes that certain words shall be spelled and printed in public documents only in a certain way?

Mr. DE ARMOND. Nothing in the world. I am just wishing that the gentleman at the head of that committee and his associates, when they desire to say anything about the Executive in reference to this matter of spelling, would get into a direct discussion with the Executive upon the subject, and not resort to an expedient which is not as bold or open as the Executive order, by hiding a little bit of a provision in a large appropriation bill, which they think the Executive dare not veto on account of the necessity for the appropriations carried. [Laughter.] Just go and meet the President in the open. I hope you gentlemen will go out and meet the Executive in the open—and you will find him there—and the probability is that by the time you are through with him you may desire some change in the spelling of some words that you will feel like using. [Great laughter and applause.]

Mr. LITTAUER. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio such time as he may desire.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, if I understood the gentleman from Missouri correctly, he suggests that a change in the Constitution, or perhaps he said in the legislation, of the country would be beneficial, in his judgment, from the fact, among many other reasons, that it would enable Congressmen, Members of the House of Representatives, to legislate the full extent of the two years of their term prior to the election that would select their successors. The argument, if I caught the purport of it, was that the incentive to correct action and wise and proper legislation would be far greater if a Member of Congress should finish his two years' legislation prior to the election of a successor for his district.

I want to enter my solemn protest against that proposition. Is there any man in the world now that can legislate with the same degree of intelligence, and the same degree of patriotism, and the same degree of independence as can the fellow who is going out? [Laughter.] Rather than have the change made that the gentleman from Missouri suggests, I would suggest that the legislation of this House be turned over to the gentlemen who are going out at the end of this term. [Laughter and applause.] They will act with much greater disinterestedness than can the gentleman from Missouri, in the very nature of things.

Doubtless the gentleman from Missouri believes that in all his votes now, during this short session, and in all his votes during the long session of the Sixtieth Congress, he will be actuated by simple patriotic purpose to do right; but he will be wonderfully mistaken at the end of his career. Who is affected now that he is going out of Congress by the bluster of some walking demagogue in the form of a walking delegate? He who is going out is secure from the danger, and it could have no effect upon him. Mr. Chairman, no man can tell that until he has tried it. [Laughter.] What a wonderful thing it is at the end of a long career of devotion to public duty to be enabled to look in the face of the critic who denounces him for some act of his and invite that gentleman to go to any place, hot or cold. [Laughter.] There is something about it that is refreshing to any man. [Renewed laughter.] And you, Mr. Chairman, who know nothing about it, when you come to experiment upon it remember what I have said, and see if I have overestimated the ecstasy of the moment when you are able to deliver that sort of an answer to somebody who interferes with your judgment. Therefore, I think that this House should pay especial and great attention to the suggestions that I myself and a number of distinguished gentlemen will make to you during the next sixty or seventy days. [Laughter.]

We shall get upon the highest plane of American patriotism, without any question of what some fellow in my district or your district will say about our action, and if you will permit us to take the leadership and go forward to the end of this short session and will follow our action, you will find yourselves in a better condition than you will be if you think you are acting independently, in view of your next election.

I was greatly delighted to hear a discussion yesterday on the subject of the misspelling of words, and I was particularly delighted at the reference made by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] to the subject of mispronunciation of words. When I got home last night I told my wife what he said, and asked her whom she thought the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] had reference to. She said, "I have warned you on that subject many a time. There is no doubt to whom he referred." [Laughter.]

"Well," I said to her, "now, this thing of mispronouncing words comes from lapsing into ancient habits. Sometimes even the best educated men make slips in pronunciation of words and even in the construction of sentences." My wife greatly regretted that I should have been made an example in the House of Representatives, so I said, "A much greater man than I am once perpetrated a much worse thing than that in the House of Representatives," and I told her what it was. I said I knew one of the best educated men in the House, a man of distinguished ability—it would be invidious to name him—who boasted that he had been the youngest president of a college in the United States up to that date, and he grew very warm and earnest and eloquent, as he always does in advocacy of something that he thinks is right. He is a man of fine education. I regret I had not the early opportunities that he had. He is a man with a finely furnished vocabulary, but he got a little bit excited on the question of the pay of the school-teachers of the District of Columbia, and as he was going smoothly along and forming his fine sentences delightfully he suddenly burst forth and said, "Mr. Chairman, I hain't got no use for nobody that is in favor of cutting down the wages of school-teachers." [Laughter.]

Why, Mr. Chairman, this is too big a country for everybody to pronounce words exactly alike. You go to the average best educated man from the section of country where I was born and ask him if he will do a thing, and if he wants to give you a strong statement of it he will say "suttenly." You go to the country where my friend from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] lives and the same honest expression of promise will be "sartin," and if you ask the gentleman from Illinois, Speaker of the House of Representatives, he will say "cert," and there you have got the whole country covered. [Laughter.] But it will not do to undertake to say that the particular sound or pronounciation of a letter is a question of education. It is a question of use—a question of locality. So much for the improved spelling. I am very much interested in it, for I used to be a first-rate speller. I am sorry to see the innovation coming, but it is a great relief at last. When it gets to that period of development which I think will come, when every fellow can spell just as he has a mind to and nobody can criticise him, that will be delightful.

Now, Mr. Chairman, my object in taking the floor on this occasion was none of these things about which I have spoken. [Laughter.] I ask unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD my remarks upon the topic of the merchant-marine bill. [Laughter.] It is a proposition not quite so old as the question of orthography. It is about the same age as initiative and referendum, and getting worn a little bit threadbare, as that proposition is; but it does not involve an amendment to the Constitution. And I warn my friend from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND] that while he may be exercising his great power in an academic discussion of these great questions, neither he nor his grandchildren will live long enough, in my judgment, to see another amendment to the Constitution, unless it shall come in the stress and storm of war. [Applause.]

I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, under the leave granted, I desire to print in the RECORD the following:

ADDRESS BY ELIHU ROOT BEFORE THE TRANS-MISSISSIPPI COMMERCIAL CONGRESS, KANSAS CITY, MO., TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 20,1906.

Mr. President and gentlemen of the Congress:

A little less than three centuries of colonial and national life have brought the people inhabiting the United States, by a process of evolution, natural and with the existing forces inevitable, to a point of distinct and radical change in their economic relations to the rest of mankind.

During the period now past the energy of our people, directed by the formative power created in our early population by heredity, by environment, by the struggle for existence, by individual independence, and by free institutions, has been devoted to the internal development of our own country. The surplus wealth produced by our labors has been applied immediately to reproduction in our own land. We have been cutting down forests and breaking virgin soil and fencing prairies and opening mines of coal and iron and copper and silver and gold, and building roads and canals and railroads and telegraph lines and cars and locomotives and mills and furnaces and schoolhouses and colleges and libraries and hospitals and asylums and public buildings and storehouses and shops and homes. We have been drawing on the resources of the world in capital and in labor to aid us in our work We have gathered strength from every rich and powerful nation and expended it upon these home undertakings; into them we have poured hundreds of millions of money attracted from the investors of Europe. We have been always a debtor nation, borrowing from the rest of the world, drawing all possible energy toward us and concentrating it with our own energy upon our own enterprises. The engrossing pursuit of our own opportunities has excluded from our consideration and interest the enterprises and the possibilities of the outside world. Invention, discovery, the progress of science, capacity for organization, the enormous increase in the productive power of mankind, have accelerated our progress and have brought us to a result of development in every branch of internal industrial activity marvelous and unprecedented in the history of the world.

Since the first election of President McKinley the people of the United States have for the first time accumulated a surplus of capital beyond the requirements of internal development. That surplus is increasing with extraordinary rapidity. We have paid our debts to Europe and have become a creditor instead of a debtor nation; we have faced about; we have left the ranks of the borrowing nations and have entered the ranks of the investing nations. Our surplus energy is beginning to look beyond our own borders, throughout the world, to find opportunity for the profitable use of our surplus capital, foreign markets for our manufactures, foreign mines to be developed, foreign bridges and railroads and public works to be built, foreign rivers to be turned into electric power and light. As in their several ways England and France and Germany have stood, so we in our own way are beginning to stand and must continue to stand toward the industrial enterprise of the world.

That we are not beginning our new rôle feebly is indicated by $1,518,561,666 of exports in the year 1905, as against $1,117,513,071 of imports, and by $1,743,864,500 exports in the year 1906, as against $1,226,563,843 of imports. Our first steps in the new field indeed are somewhat clumsy and unskilled. In our own vast country, with oceans on either side, we have had too little contact with foreign peoples readily to understand their customs or learn their languages; yet no one can doubt that we shall learn and shall understand and shall do our business abroad, as we have done it at home, with force and efficiency.

Coincident with this change in the United States, the progress of political development has been carrying the neighboring continent of South America out of the stage of militarism into the stage of industrialism. Throughout the greater part of that vast continent revolutions have ceased to be looked upon with favor or submitted to with indifference; the revolutionary general and the dictator are no longer the objects of admiration and imitation; civic virtues command the highest respect; the people point with satisfaction and pride to the stability of their governments, to the safety of property and the certainty of justice; nearly everywhere the people are eager for foreign capital to develop their natural resources and for foreign immigration to occupy their vacant land. Immediately before us, at exactly the right time, just as we are ready for it, great opportunities for peaceful commercial and industrial expansion to the south are presented. Other investing nations are already in the field—England, France, Germany, Italy, Spain; but the field is so vast, the new demands are so great, the progress so rapid, that what other nations have done up to this time is but a slight advance in the race for the grand total. The opportunities are so large that figures fail to convey them. The area of this newly awakened continent is 7,502,848 square miles—more than two and one-half times as large as the United States without Alaska and more than double the United States including Alaska. A large part of this area lies within the Temperate Zone, with an equable and invigorating climate, free from extremes of either heat or cold. Farther north, in the Tropics, are enormous expanses of high table-lands, stretching from the Atlantic to the foothills of the Andes, and lifted far above the tropical heats; the fertile valleys of the western cordilleras are cooled by perpetual snows even under the equator; vast forests grow untouched from a soil of incredible richness. The plains of Argentina, the great uplands of Brazil, the mountain valleys of Chile, Peru, Ecuador, Bolivia, and Colombia are suited to the habitation of any race, however far to the north its origin may have been; hundreds of millions of men can find healthful homes and abundant sustenance in this great territory.

The population in 1900 was only 42,461,381, less than six to the square mile. The density of population was less than one-eighth of that in the State of Missouri, less than one-sixtieth of that in the State of Massachusetts, less than one-seventieth of that in England, less than 1 per cent of that in Belgium.

With this sparse population the production of wealth is already enormous. The latest trade statistics show exports from South America to foreign countries of $745,530,000, and imports of $499,858,600. Of the five hundred millions of goods that South America buys we sell them but $63,246,525, or 12.6 per cent. Of the seven hundred and forty-five millions that South America sells we buy $152,092,000, or 20.4 per cent—nearly two and a half times as much as we sell.

Their production is increasing by leaps and bounds. In eleven years the exports of Chile have increased 45 per cent, from $54,030,000 in 1894 to $78,840,000 in 1905. In eight years the exports of Peru have increased 100 per cent, from $13,899,000 in 1897 to $28,758,000 in 1905. In ten years the exports of Brazil have increased 66 per cent, from $134,062,000 in 1894 to $223,101,000 in 1905. In ten years the exports of Argentina have increased 168 per cent, from $115,868,000 in 1895 to $311,544,000 in 1905.

This is only the beginning; the coffee and rubber of Brazil, the wheat and beef and hides of Argentina and Uruguay, the copper and nitrates of Chile, the copper and tin of Bolivia, the silver and gold and cotton and sugar of Peru, are but samples of what the soil and mines of that wonderful continent are capable of yielding. Ninety-seven per cent of the territory of South America is occupied by ten independent Republics living under constitutions substantially copied or adapted from our own. Under the new conditions of tranquillity and security which prevail in most of them their eager invitation to immigrants from the Old World will not long pass unheeded. The pressure of population abroad will inevitably turn its streams of life and labor toward those fertile fields and valleys. The streams have already begun to flow; more than two hundred thousand immigrants entered the Argentine Republic last year; they are coming this year at the rate of over three hundred thousand. Many thousands of Germans have already settled in southern Brazil. They are most welcome in Brazil; they are good and useful citizens there, as they are here; I hope that many more will come to Brazil and every other South American country, and add their vigorous industry and good citizenship to the upbuilding of their adopted home.

With the increase of population in such a field, under free institutions, with the fruits of labor and the rewards of enterprise secure, the production of wealth and the increase of purchasing power will afford a market for the commerce of the world worthy to rank even with the markets of the Orient as the goal of business enterprise. The material resources of South America are in some important respects complementary to our own; that continent is weakest where North America is strongest as a field for manufactures; it has comparatively little coal and iron. In many respects the people of the two continents are complementary to each other; the South American is polite, refined, cultivated, fond of literature and of expression and of the graces and charms of life, while the North American is strenuous, intense, utilitarian. Where we accumulate, they spend. While we have less of the cheerful philosophy which finds sources of happiness in the existing conditions of life, they have less of the inventive faculty which strives continually to increase the productive power of man and lower the cost of manufacture. The chief merits of the peoples of the two continents are different; their chief defects are different. Mutual intercourse and knowledge can not fail to greatly benefit both. Each can learn from the other; each can teach much to the other, and each can contribute greatly to the development and prosperity of the other. A large part of their products find no domestic competition here; a large part of our products will find no domestic competition there. The typical conditions exist for that kind of trade which is profitable, honorable, and beneficial to both parties.

The relations between the United States and South America have been chiefly political rather than commercial or personal. In the early days of the South American struggle for independence the eloquence of Henry Clay awakened in the American people a generous sympathy for the patriots of the South as for brethren struggling in the common cause of liberty. The clear-eyed, judicious diplomacy of Richard Rush, the American minister at the Court of St. James, effected a complete understanding with Great Britain for concurrent action in opposition to the designs of the Holy Alliance, already contemplating the partition of the southern continent among the great powers of continental Europe. The famous declaration of Monroe arrayed the organized and rapidly increasing power of the United States as an obstacle to European interference and made it forever plain that the cost of European aggression would be greater than any advantage which could be won even by successful aggression.

That great declaration was not the chance expression of the opinion or the feeling of the moment; it crystallized the sentiment for human liberty and human rights which has saved American idealism from the demoralization of narrow selfishness, and has given to American democracy its true world power in the virile potency of a great example. It responded to the instinct of self-preservation in an intensely practical people. It was the result of conference with Jefferson and Madison and John Quincy Adams and John C. Calhoun and William Wirt—a combination of political wisdom, experience, and skill not easily surpassed. The particular circumstances which led to the declaration no longer exist; no holy alliance now threatens to partition South America; no European colonization of the west coast threatens to exclude us from the Pacific. But these conditions were merely the occasion for the declaration of a principle of action. Other occasions for the application of the principle have arisen since; it needs no prophetic vision to see that other occasions for its application may arise hereafter. The principle declared by Monroe is as wise an expression of sound political judgment to-day, as truthful a representation of the sentiments and instincts of the American people to-day, as living in its force as an effective rule of conduct whenever occasion shall arise, as it was on the 2d of December, 1823.

These great political services to South American independence, however, did not and could not in the nature of things create any relation between the people of South America and the people of the United States except a relation of political sympathy.

Twenty-five years ago Mr. Blaine, sanguine, resourceful, and gifted with that imagination which enlarges the historian's understanding of the past into the statesman's comprehension of the future, undertook to inaugurate a new era of American relations which should supplement political sympathy by personal acquaintance, by the intercourse of expanding trade, and by mutual helpfulness. As Secretary of State under President Arthur he invited the American nations to a conference to be held on the 24th of November, 1882, for the purpose of considering and discussing the subject of preventing war between the nations of America. That invitation, abandoned by Mr. Frelinghuysen, was renewed under Mr. Cleveland, and on the 2d of October, 1889, Mr. Blaine, again Secretary of State under President Harrison, had the singular good fortune to execute his former design and to open the sessions of the First American Conference at Washington. In an address of wisdom and lofty spirit, which should ever give honor to his memory, he described the assembly as "an honorable, peaceful conference of seventeen independent American powers, in which all shall meet together on terms of absolute equality; a conference in which there can be no attempt to coerce a single delegate against his own conception of the interests of his nation; a conference which will permit no secret understanding on any subject, but will frankly publish to the world all its conclusions; a conference which will tolerate no spirit of conquest, but will aim to cultivate an American sympathy as broad as both continents; a conference which will form no selfish alliance against the older nations from which we are proud to claim inheritance—a conference, in fine, which will seek nothing, propose nothing, endure nothing that is not, in the general sense of all the delegates, timely, wise, and peaceful."

The policy which Blaine inaugurated has been continued; the Congress of the United States has approved it; subsequent Presidents have followed it. The first conference at Washington has been succeeded by a second conference in Mexico, and now by a third conference in Rio de Janeiro, and it is to be followed in years to come by further successive assemblies in which the representatives of all American States shall acquire better knowledge and more perfect understanding and be drawn together by the recognition of common interests and the kindly consideration and discussion of measures for mutual benefit.

Nevertheless, Mr. Blaine was in advance of his time. In 1881 and 1889 neither had the United States reached a point where it could turn its energies away from its own internal development and direct them outward toward the development of foreign enterprises and foreign trade, nor had the South American countries reached the stage of stability in government and security for property necessary to their industrial development.

Now, however, the time has come. Both North and South America have grown up to Blaine's policy. The production, the trade, the capital, the enterprise of the United States have before them the opportunity to follow, and they are free to follow, the pathway marked out by the farsighted statesmanship of Blaine for the growth of America, North and South, in the peaceful prosperity of a mighty commerce.

To utilize this opportunity certain practical things must be done. For the most part these things must be done by a multitude of individual efforts; they can not be done by government. Government may help to furnish facilities for the doing of them, but the facilities will be useless unless used by individuals. They can not be done by resolutions of this or any other commercial body; resolutions are useless unless they stir individual business men to action in their own business affairs. The things needed have been fully and specifically set forth in many reports of efficient consuls and of highly competent agents of the Department of Commerce and Labor, and they have been described in countless newspapers and magazine articles; but all these things are worthless unless they are followed by individual action. I will indicate some of the matters to which every producer and merchant who desires South American trade should pay attention:

1. He should learn what the South Americans want and conform his product to their wants. If they think they need heavy castings, he should give them heavy castings and not expect them to buy light ones because he thinks they are better. If they want coarse cottons, he should give them coarse cottons and not expect them to buy fine cottons. It may not pay to-day, but it will pay to-morrow. The tendency to standardize articles of manufacture may reduce the cost and promote convenience, but if the consumers on the River Plata demand a different standard from the consumers on the Mississippi you must have two standards or lose one market.

2. Both for the purpose of learning what the South American people want and of securing their attention to your goods you must have agents who speak the Spanish or Portuguese language. For this there are two reasons: One is that people can seldom really get at each other's minds through an interpreter, and the other is that nine times out of ten it is only through knowing the Spanish or Portuguese language that a North American comes to appreciate the admirable and attractive personal qualities of the South American, and is thus able to establish that kindly and agreeable personal relation which is so potent in leading to business relations.

3. The American producer should arrange to conform his credit system to that prevailing in the country where he wishes to sell goods. There is no more money lost upon commercial credits in South America than there is in North America; but business men there have their own ways of doing business; they have to adapt the credits they receive to the credits they give. It is often inconvenient and disagreeable—and it is sometimes impossible—for them to conform to our ways, and the requirement that they should do so is a serious obstacle to trade.

To understand credits it is, of course, necessary to know something about the character, trustworthiness, and commercial standing of the purchaser, and the American producer or merchant who would sell goods in South America must have some means of knowledge upon this subject. This leads naturally to the next observation I have to make.

4. The establishment of banks should be brought about. The Americans already engaged in South American trade could well afford to subscribe the capital and establish an American bank in each of the principal cities of South America. This is, first, because nothing but very bad management could prevent such a bank from making money; capital is much needed in those cities, and 6, 8, and 10 per cent can be obtained for money upon just as safe security as can be had in Kansas City, St. Louis, or New York. It is also because the American bank would furnish a source of information as to the standing of the South American purchasers to whom credit may be extended and because American banks would relieve American business in South America from the disadvantage which now exists of making all its financial transactions through Europe instead of directly with the United States. It is unfortunately true that among hundreds of thousands of possible customers the United States now stands in a position of assumed financial and business inferiority to the countries through whose banking houses all its business has to be done.

5. The American merchant should himself acquire, if he has not already done so, and should impress upon all his agents that respect for the South American to which he is justly entitled and which is the essential requisite to respect from the South American. We are different in many ways as to character and methods. In dealing with all foreign people it is important to avoid the narrow and uninstructed prejudice which assumes that difference from ourselves denotes inferiority. There is nothing that we resent so quickly as an assumption of superiority or evidence of condescension in foreigners; there is nothing that the South Americans resent so quickly. The South Americans are our superiors in some respects; we are their superiors in other respects. We should show to them what is best in us and see what is best in them. Every agent of an American producer or merchant should be instructed that courtesy, politeness, kindly consideration, are essential requisites for success in the South American trade.

6. The investment of American capital in South America under the direction of American experts should be promoted, not merely upon simple investment grounds, but as a means of creating and enlarging trade. For simple investment purposes the opportunities are innumerable. Good business judgment and good business management will be necessary there, of course, as they are necessary here; but, given these, I believe that there is a vast number of enterprises awaiting capital in the more advanced countries of South America, capable of yielding great profits, and in which the property and the profits will be as safe as in the United States or Canada. A good many such enterprises are already begun. I have found a graduate of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, a graduate of the Columbia School of Mines, and a graduate of Colonel Roosevelt's Rough Riders smelting copper close under the snow line of the Andes; I have ridden in an American car upon an American electric road, built by a New York engineer, in the heart of the coffee region of Brazil, and I have seen the waters of that river along which Pizarro established his line of communication in the conquest of Peru harnessed to American machinery to make light and power for the city of Lima. Every such point is the nucleus of American trade—the source of orders for American goods.

7. It is absolutely essential that the means of communication between the two countries should be improved and increased.

This underlies all other considerations, and it applies both to the mail, the passenger, and the freight services. Between all the principal South American ports and England, Germany, France, Spain, Italy, lines of swift and commodious steamers ply regularly. There are five subsidized first-class mail and passenger lines between Buenos Ayres and Europe; there is no such line between Buenos Ayres and the United States. Within the past two years the German, the English, and the Italian lines have been replacing their old steamers with new and swifter steamers of modern construction, accommodation, and capacity.

In the year ending June 30, 1905, there entered the port of Rio de Janeiro steamers and sailing vessels flying the flag of Austria-Hungary 120, of Norway 142, of Italy 165, of Argentina 264, of France 349, of Germany 657, of Great Britain 1,785, of the United States no steamers and 7 sailing vessels, 2 of which were in distress!

An English firm runs a small steamer monthly between New York and Rio de Janeiro; the Panama Railroad Company runs steamers between New York and the Isthmus of Panama; the Brazilians are starting for themselves a line between Rio and New York; there are two or three foreign concerns running slow cargo boats, and there are some foreign tramp steamers. That is the sum total of American communications with South America beyond the Caribbean Sea. Not one American steamship runs to any South American port beyond the Caribbean. During the past summer I entered the ports of Para Pernambuco, Bahia, Rio de Janeiro, Santos, Montevideo, Buenos Ayres, Bahia Blanca, Punta Arenas, Lota, Valparaiso, Coquimbo, Tocopilla, Callao, and Cartagena—all of the great ports and a large proportion of the secondary ports of the southern continent. I saw only one ship, besides the cruiser that carried me, flying the American flag. The mails between South America and Europe are swift, regular, and certain; between South America and the United States they are slow, irregular, and uncertain. Six weeks is not an uncommon time for a letter to take between Buenos Ayres or Valparaiso and New York. The merchant who wishes to order American goods can not know when his order will be received or when it will be filled. The freight charges between the South American cities and American cities are generally and substantially higher than between the same cities and Europe; at many points the deliveries of freight are uncertain and its condition upon arrival doubtful. The passenger accommodations are such as to make a journey to the United States a trial to be endured and a journey to Europe a pleasure to be enjoyed. The best way to travel between the United States and both the southwest coast and the east coast of South America is to go by way of Europe, crossing the Atlantic twice. It is impossible that trade should prosper or intercourse increase or mutual knowledge grow to any great degree under such circumstances. The communication is worse now than it was twenty-five years ago. So long as it is left in the hands of our foreign competitors in business we can not reasonably look for any improvement. It is only reasonable to expect that European steamship lines shall be so managed as to promote European trade in South America rather than to promote the trade of the United States in South America.

This woeful deficiency in the means to carry on and enlarge our South American trade is but a part of the general decline and feebleness of the American merchant marine, which has reduced us from carrying over 90 per cent of our export trade in our own ships to the carriage of 9 per cent of that trade in our own ships and dependence upon foreign shipowners for the carriage of 91 per cent. The true remedy and the only remedy is the establishment of American lines of steamships between the United States and the great ports of South America, adequate to render fully as good service as is now afforded by the European lines between those ports and Europe. The substantial underlying fact was well stated in the resolution of this Trans-Mississippi Congress three years ago:

"That every ship is a missionary of trade; that steamship lines work for their own countries just as railroad lines work for their terminal points, and that it is as absurd for the United States to depend upon foreign ships to distribute its products as it would be for a department store to depend upon wagons of a competing house to deliver its goods."

How can this defect be remedied? The answer to this question must be found by ascertaining the cause of the decline of our merchant marine. Why is it that Americans have substantially retired from the foreign transport service? We are a nation of maritime traditions and facility; we are a nation of constructive capacity, competent to build ships; we are eminent, if not preeminent, in the construction of machinery; we have abundant capital seeking investment; we have courage and enterprise shrinking from no competition in any field which we choose to enter. Why, then, have we retired from this field in which we were once conspicuously successful?

I think the answer is twofold.

1. The higher wages and the greater cost of maintenance of American officers and crews make it impossible to compete on equal terms with foreign ships. The scale of living and the scale of pay of American sailors are fixed by the standard of wages and of living in the United States, and those are maintained at a high level by the protective tariff. The moment the American passes beyond the limits of his country and engages in ocean transportation he comes into competition with the lower foreign scale of wages and of living. Mr. Joseph L. Bristow, in his report upon trade conditions affecting the Panama Railroad, dated June 14, 1905, gives in detail the cost of operating an American steamship with a tonnage of approximately thirty-five hundred tons, as compared with the cost of operating a specified German steamship of the same tonnage, and the differences aggregate $15,315 per annum greater cost for the American steamship than for the German; that is, $4.37 per ton. He gives also in detail the cost of maintaining another American steamship with a tonnage of approximately twenty-five hundred tons, as compared with the cost of operating a specified British steamship of the same tonnage, and the differences aggregate $18,289.68 per annum greater cost for the American steamship than for the British; that is, $7.31 per ton. It is manifest that if the German steamship were content with a profit of less than $15,000 per annum, and the British with a profit of less than $18,000 per annum, the American ships would have to go out of business.

2. The principal maritime nations of the world, anxious to develop their trade, to promote their shipbuilding industry, to have at hand transports and auxiliary cruisers in case of war, are fostering their steamship lines by the payment of subsidies. England is paying to her steamship lines between six and seven million dollars a year; it is estimated that since 1840 she has paid to them between two hundred and fifty and three hundred millions. The enormous development of her commerce, her preponderant share of the carrying trade of the world, and her shipyards crowded with construction orders from every part of the earth indicate the success of her policy. France is paying about $8,000,000 a year; Italy and Japan between three and four millions each; Germany, upon the initiative of Bismarck, is building up her trade with wonderful rapidity by heavy subventions to her steamship lines and by giving special differential rates of carriage over her railroads for merchandise shipped by those lines. Spain, Norway, Austria-Hungary, Canada, all subsidize their own lines. It is estimated that about $28,000,000 a year are paid by our commercial competitors to their steamship lines.

Against these advantages to his competitor the American shipowner has to contend, and it is manifest that the subsidized ship can afford to carry freight at cost for a long enough period to drive him out of business.

We are living in a world not of natural competition, but of subsidized competition. State aid to steamship lines is as much a part of the commercial system of our day as state employment of consuls to promote business.

It will be observed that both of these disadvantages under which the American shipowner labors are artificial; they are created by governmental action—one by our own Government in raising the standard of wages and living by the protective tariff; the other by foreign governments in paying subsidies to their ships for the promotion of their own trade. For the American shipowner it is not a contest of intelligence, skill, industry, and thrift against similar qualities in his competitor; it is a contest against his competitors and his competitors' governments and his own Government also.

Plainly, these advantages created by governmental action can be neutralized only by governmental action, and should be neutralized by such action.

What action ought our Government to take for the accomplishment of this just purpose? Three kinds of action have been advocated.

1. A law providing for free ships—that is, permitting Americans to buy ships in other countries and bring them under the American flag. Plainly this would not at all meet the difficulties which I have described. The only thing it would accomplish would be to overcome the excess in cost of building a ship in an American shipyard over the cost of building it in a foreign shipyard; but since all the materials which enter into an American ship are entirely relieved of duty, the difference in cost of construction is so slight as to be practically a negligible quantity and to afford no substantial obstacle to the revival of American shipping. The expedient of free ships, therefore, would be merely to sacrifice our American shipbuilding industry, which ought to be revived and enlarged with American shipping, and to sacrifice it without receiving any substantial benefit. It is to be observed that Germany, France, and Italy all have attempted to build up their own shipping by adopting the policy of free ships, have failed in the experiment, have abandoned it, and have adopted in its place the policy of subsidy.

2. It has been proposed to establish a discriminating tariff duty in favor of goods imported in American ships—that is to say, to impose higher duties upon goods imported in foreign ships than are imposed on goods imported in American ships. We tried that once many years ago and have abandoned it. In its place we have entered into treaties of commerce and navigation with the principal countries of the world expressly agreeing that no such discrimination shall be made between their vessels and ours. To sweep away all those treaties and enter upon a war of commercial retaliation and reprisal for the sake of accomplishing indirectly what can be done directly should not be seriously considered.

3. There remains the third and obvious method—to neutralize the artificial disadvantages imposed upon American shipping, through the action of our own Government and foreign governments, by an equivalent advantage in the form of a subsidy or subvention. In my opinion this is what should be done; it is the sensible and fair thing to do. It is what must be done if we would have a revival of our shipping and the desired development of our foreign trade. We can not repeal the protective tariff; no political party dreams of repealing it; we do not wish to lower the standard of American living or American wages. We should give back to the shipowner what we take away from him for the purpose of maintaining that standard, and unless we do give it back we shall continue to go without ships. How can the expenditure of public money for the improvement of rivers and harbors to promote trade be justified upon any grounds which do not also sustain this proposal? Would anyone reverse the policy that granted aid to the Pacific railroads, the pioneers of our enormous internal commerce, the agencies that built up the great traffic which has enabled half a dozen other roads to be built in later years without assistance? Such subventions would not be gifts. They would be at once compensation for injuries inflicted upon American shipping by American laws and the consideration for benefits received by the whole American people—not the shippers or the shipbuilders or the sailors alone, but by every manufacturer, every miner, every farmer, every merchant whose prosperity depends upon a market for his products.

The provision for such just compensation should be carefully shaped and directed so that it will go to individual advantage only so far as the individual is enabled by it to earn a reasonable profit by building up the business of the country.

A bill is now pending in Congress which contains such provisions; it has passed the Senate and is now before the House Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries. It is known as Senate bill No. 529, Fifty-ninth Congress, first session. It provides specifically that the Postmaster-General may pay to American steamships, of specified rates of speed, carrying mails upon a regular service, compensation not to exceed the following amounts: For a line from an Atlantic port to Brazil, monthly, $150,000 a year; for a line from an Atlantic port to Uruguay and Argentina, monthly, $187,500 a year; for a line from a Gulf port to Brazil, monthly, $137,500 a year; for a line from each of two Gulf ports and from New Orleans to Central America and the Isthmus of Panama, weekly, $75,000 a year; for a line from a Gulf port to Mexico, weekly, $50,000 a year; for a line from a Pacific coast port to Mexico, Central America, and the Isthmus of Panama, fortnightly, $120,000 a year. For these six regular lines a total of $720,000. The payments provided are no more than enough to give the American ships a fair living chance in the competition.

There are other wise and reasonable provisions in the bill relating to trade with the Orient, to tramp steamers, and to a naval reserve, but I am now concerned with the provisions for trade to the south. The hope of such a trade lies chiefly in the passage of that bill.

Postmaster-General Cortelyou, in his report for 1905, said:

"Congress has authorized the Postmaster-General, by the act of 1891, to contract with the owners of American steamships for ocean mail service, and has realized the impracticability of commanding suitable steamships in the interest of the postal service alone by requiring that such steamers shall be of a size, class, and equipment which will promote commerce and become available as auxiliary cruisers of the Navy in case of need. The compensation allowed to such steamers is found to be wholly inadequate to secure the proposals contemplated; hence advertisements from time to time have failed to develop any bids for much-needed service. This is especially true in regard to several of the countries of South America, with which we have cordial relations and which, for manifest reasons, should have direct mail connections with us. I refer to Brazil and countries south of it. Complaints of serious delay to mails for these countries have become frequent and emphatic, leading to the suggestion on the part of certain officials of the Government that for the present and until more satisfactory direct communication can be established important mails should be dispatched to South America by way of European ports and on European steamers, which would not only involve the United States in the payment of double transit rates to a foreign country for the dispatch of its mails to countries of our own hemisphere, but might seriously embarrass the Government in the exchange of important official and diplomatic correspondence.

"The fact that the Government claims exclusive control of the transmission of letter mail throughout its own territory would seem to imply that it should secure and maintain the exclusive jurisdiction, when necessary, of its mails on the high seas. The unprecedented expansion of trade and foreign commerce justifies prompt consideration of an adequate foreign mail service."

It is difficult to believe, but it is true, that out of this faulty ocean mail service the Government of the United States is making a large profit. The actual cost to the Government last year of the ocean mail service to foreign countries other than Canada and Mexico was $2,965,624.21, while the proceeds realized by the Government from postage between the United States and foreign countries other than Canada and Mexico was $6,008,807.53, leaving the profit to the United States of $3,043,183.32; that is to say, under existing law the Government of the United States, having assumed the monopoly of carrying the mails for the people of the country, is making a profit of $3,000,000 per annum by rendering cheap and inefficient service. Every dollar of that three millions is made at the expense of the commerce of the United States. What can be plainer than that the Government ought to expend at least the profits that it gets from the ocean mail service in making the ocean mail service efficient. One-quarter of those profits would establish all these lines which I have described between the United States and South and Central America and give us, besides a good mail service, enlarged markets for the producers and merchants of the United States who pay the postage from which the profits come.[a]

In his last message to Congress President Roosevelt said:

"To the spread of our trade in peace and the defense of our flag in war a great and prosperous merchant marine is indispensable. We should have ships of our own and seamen of our own to convey our goods to neutral markets, and in case of need to reenforce our battle line. It can not but be a source of regret and uneasiness to us that the lines of communication with our sister republics of South America should be chiefly under foreign control. It is not a good thing that American merchants and manufacturers should have to send their goods and letters to South America via Europe if they wish security and dispatch. Even on the Pacific, where our ships have held their own better than on the Atlantic, our merchant flag is now threatened through the liberal aid bestowed by other governments on their own steam lines. I ask your earnest consideration of the report with which the Merchant Marine Commission has followed its long and careful inquiry."

The bill now pending in the House is a bill framed upon the report of that Merchant Marine Commission. The question whether it shall become a law depends upon your Representatives in the House. You have the judgment of the Postmaster-General, you have the judgment of the Senate, you have the judgment of the President. If you agree with these judgments and wish the bill which embodies them to become a law, say so to your Representatives. Say it to them individually and directly, for it is your right to advise them and it will be their pleasure to hear from you what legislation the interests of their constituents demand.

The great body of Congressmen are always sincerely desirous to meet the just wishes of their constituents and to do what is for the public interest; but in this great country they are continually assailed by innumerable expressions of private opinion and by innumerable demands for the expenditure of public money; they come to discriminate very clearly between private opinion and public opinion and between real public opinion and the manufactured appearance of public opinion; they know that when there is a real demand for any kind of legislation it will make itself known to them through a multitude of individual voices. Resolutions of commercial bodies frequently indicate nothing except that the proposer of the resolution has a positive opinion and that no one else has interest enough in the subject to oppose it. Such resolutions by themselves, therefore, have comparatively little effect; they are effective only when the support of individual expressions shows that they really represent a genuine and general opinion.

It is for you and the business men all over the country whom you represent to show to the Representatives in Congress that the producing and commercial interests of the country really desire a practical measure to enlarge the markets and increase the foreign trade of the United States, by enabling American shipping to overcome the disadvantages imposed upon it by foreign governments for the benefit of their trade and by our Government for the benefit of our home industry.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BOUTELL] such time as he may desire.

Mr. BOUTELL. Mr. Chairman, yesterday our President was awarded one of the five great prizes that are annually distributed under the munificent provisions of the will of that illustrious Swedish scientist and philanthropist, Alfred Nobel. Although these prizes have been distributed for five years, this is the first occasion on which one of them has been given to an American citizen. It is, therefore, quite fitting that we, while congratulating the President of the United States as the recipient of this great international honor, should pay a tribute of respect to the memory of the eminent man whose wisdom and generosity established the now famous Nobel prizes.

Yesterday was the tenth anniversary of Nobel's death, which occurred at San Remo on the 10th of December, 1896. He left a voluminous will, said to have been drawn without the aid of lawyers, and in his own handwriting. The provision of this remarkable document that relates to the establishment of the prizes that bear the name of their founder is as follows:

With the residue of my convertible estate I hereby direct my executors to proceed as follows: They shall convert my said residue of property into money, which they shall then invest in safe securities; the capital thus secured shall constitute a fund, the interest accruing from which shall be annually awarded in prizes to those persons who shall have contributed most materially to benefit mankind during the year immediately preceding. The said interest shall be divided into five equal amounts, to be apportioned as follows: One share to the person who shall have made the most important discovery or invention in the domain of physics; one share to the person who shall have made the most important chemical discovery or improvement; one share to the person who shall have made the most important discovery in the domain of physiology or medicine; one share to the person who shall have produced in the field of literature the most distinguished work of an idealistic tendency, and, finally, one share to the person who shall have most or best promoted the fraternity of nations and the abolishment or diminution of standing armies and the formation and increase of peace congresses. The prizes for physics and chemistry shall be awarded by the Swedish Academy of Science (Svenska Vetenskapsakademien) in Stockholm; the one for physiology or medicine by the Caroline Medical Institute (Karolinska Institutet) in Stockholm; the prizes for literature by the Academy in Stockholm (i. e. Svenska Akademien), and that for peace by a committee of five persons to be elected by the Norwegian Storthing. I declare it to be my express desire that, in awarding the prizes, no consideration whatever be paid to the nationality of the candidates—that is to say, that the most deserving be awarded the prize, whether of Scandinavian origin or not.

All Americans are to-day justly proud that the first of these prizes to come to the United States has been awarded to the illustrious citizen who holds the most exalted office in the gift of this Republic and the highest place in the esteem of his fellow-citizens. It is interesting, therefore, and intensely gratifying for us to know that he occupies a place on the roll of honor with such men as Dr. Wilhelm Konrad Röntgen, the discoverer of the wonderful Röntgen rays; Dr. Jacobus Henricus Van't Hoff, the distinguished Dutch scientist; Emil von Behring; René François Armand Tully Prudhomme; Jean Henry Dunant, the founder of the Red Cross Society; Frederick Passy; Lord Rayleigh, and Sir William Ramsey.

One of the peace prizes, such as has been given to President Roosevelt, was awarded to the Institut de Droit International. Another of the peace prizes was given to that distinguished Austrian noblewoman, the Baroness von Suttner, whose work "Die Waffen nieder" (Ground Arms) is so well known through its vivid portrayal of the horrors of war.

What manner of man was it who left this unique testament, reflecting glory alike on his own memory and upon the country of his birth? The estate at the time of his death amounted to something like $10,000,000, and the five annual prizes now average about $40,000 each.

Alfred Nobel, who left this testament, doing a grand thing in such a grand way, was born in Stockholm October 21, 1833, and died, as I have said, on the 10th of December, 1896. His father was a scientist and inventor of some reputation, both in Sweden and in Russia, where he had factories for the manufacture of explosives. Young Alfred Nobel was associated first with his father and afterwards with his brothers in various manufacturing enterprises. It is interesting for us to recall that from the age of 17 to 21 years, or from 1850 to 1854, Alfred Nobel lived in the United States, where he was sent by his father to study and work with that great Swedish-American, John Ericsson, the inventor of the modern ironclad, and, we may say, the founder of the present navies of the world and the inventor of the screw propeller. On his return to Europe young Nobel engaged with his father and brothers in their enterprises and very early became interested in perfecting high explosives. In 1862, at Stockholm, he first manufactured nitroglycerin on a commercial scale.

His experiments with nitroglycerin soon led to his discovery of dynamite, a discovery which some one has said marks a new epoch in the civilization of the world. It was through this discovery and the practical uses to which Nobel put his dynamite that we owe some of the greatest engineering feats of the last generation and the vast mining operations that have been prosecuted on such an unprecedented scale. Nobel, singularly enough, is described by his friends as an extremely modest, shrinking, and sensitive man, who frequently in carrying on his experiments was compelled from sheer weakness to do his work while lying in a recumbent position. But he had an unconquerable will and undaunted courage, and no losses, no dangers, incident to his calling ever deterred him from carrying on his work. After the Franco-Prussian war had demonstrated the use in warfare of high explosives Alfred Nobel perfected gun cotton and smokeless powder, and by the time he was 40 years of age, or in the early seventies, his fame and his fortune were assured. Later he became associated with his brothers in the rectifying and transportation of oil in Russia, which further increased his fortune. He never married, and his entire property, with the exception of a few bequests, was placed in the hands of trustees for the establishment of these prizes.

Shortly after Nobel's death a sympathetic biographer thus wrote of the intentions of this singular man in the disposition of his property:

A good deal has been said in explanation of this extraordinary will. The intimate friends of Mr. Nobel have been invited to give information which might throw light on his intentions, and two gentlemen, who witnessed the will, have declared that he had told them that he was a socialist, but one with moderate views; that in his opinion it was not good for people to inherit large amounts, because it does not stimulate them to work.

He wanted his fortune to benefit those who were working in the interest of humanity, and therefore he wanted those in the first instance to profit by it who were occupied with scientific research, because they could not, as a rule, reap much material benefit from their labor. The fifth prize is to be explained by the fact that toward the latter part of his life Nobel became deeply interested in all that was done to promote peace by congresses and societies. He always considered that by improving war material, and thus increasing the dangers of war, he was contributing his share toward the pacification of the world.

One of the prizes provided by him throws a very interesting side light upon his character, namely, the prize which was to be given for the best literary work of idealistic character. It seems strange that this man, who was occupied in the manufacture of high explosives and those materials which have made warfare so terrible and devastating, should in his leisure moments have devoted himself to the study of languages, in many of which he was proficient, and found delight in idealistic literature.

Our representative in Christiania, Mr. Peirce, in accepting on behalf of the President the prize which was awarded yesterday, delivered this message from the President to the committee of the Storthing:

I am profoundly moved and touched by the signal honor shown me through your body in conferring upon me the Nobel peace prize. There is no gift I could appreciate more; and I wish it were in my power fully to express my gratitude. I thank you for myself, and I thank you on behalf of the United States, for what I did I was able to accomplish only as the representative of the nation of which for the time being I am President. After much thought I have concluded that the best and most fitting way to apply the amount of the prize is by using it as a foundation to establish at Washington a permanent industrial peace committee. The object will be to strive for better and more equitable relations among my countrymen who are engaged, whether as capitalists or wageworkers, in industrial and agricultural pursuits. This will carry out the purpose of the founder of the prize, for in modern life it is as important to work for the cause of just and righteous peace in the industrial world as in the world of nations. I again express to you the assurance of my deep and lasting gratitude and appreciation.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

[Great applause.]

In his disposition of this prize money the President has enhanced the luster of the honor conferred upon him in this award.

And so I think it is quite fitting for this House to take notice not only of the gratification and pride which the citizens of this country feel that one of these prizes has come to our most illustrious citizen, but also to express our appreciation of the modesty and the splendid and noble humanitarianism with which the President has disposed of this fund—in a method that I am sure would meet the approval of the great founder, himself a life-long employer of labor, could he look down and make known to us his opinion of the disposition which has been made by President Roosevelt of the prize awarded to him.

I have said that one of these peace prizes was awarded to the Baroness von Suttner, whose remarkable book, Ground Arms, has attracted the attention of all the civilized world. In that book one of her characters, Rudolph, the advocate of peace, says:

The prince or statesman is perhaps already alive who is to bring to perfection the exploit which will live in all future history as the most glorious and most enlightened of all exploits—that which will carry universal disarmament.

And he proposes this toast:

Hail to the future! To fulfill its tasks, shall we clothe ourselves in steel? No! Shall we endeavor to show ourselves worthy of our fathers' fathers, as the old phrase goes? No! But of our grandsons' grandsons!

That, of course, is a noble sentiment, Mr. Chairman. No sane man desires war. No man who loves his country wishes to see her drawn into war. The language of the greatest poet of the Victorian era expresses the earnest wish of every patriot:

Ah! When shall all men's good
Be each man's rule, and universal peace
Lie like a shaft of light across the land
And like a lane of beams athwart the sea,
Thro' all the circle of the golden year?

But, Mr. Chairman, no man can foretell the day that will usher in the golden year. Our President has received this prize, known as the "peace prize," for the services which he rendered in bringing to a close the terrible conflict between Russia and Japan. It is well for us to remember also at this time the wise policy which he has always advocated for keeping this great Republic at peace with the nations of the world. While a practical statesman often may use this prayer of the poet, he will at the same time, though working with all the energy of his being to bring about universal peace, see to it that, so far as his own nation is concerned, her credit and her armament will be always in such a condition as to insure her safety from attack. We often speak of great armies and navies as the surest guaranty of peace. Armies and navies, however, are but symbols of a greater power, the power that creates and maintains them. The reality back of the symbol is national credit.

No man who has had to do with wars ever said a wiser thing than the greatest captain of all time when he was asked the three chief requisites for carrying on war and replied: "First, money; second, money; and third, more money." National credit is the surest guaranty of peace, and the United States, with her interest-bearing debt, less available cash, a bare $600,000,000, with her great natural resources and her 2 per cent bonds commanding a premium, has to-day a financial strength equal to the combined strength of any three of the greatest powers on earth. It is for us to see to it that in the future this national credit is preserved; that our small nucleus of an Army is composed of men of the highest training and proficiency, and that our Navy is kept always in the highest state of efficiency, both in ships and men. Thus, while doing our best to bring about the reign of universal peace, we shall see to it that our Republic at least is impregnable from outside attacks. [Great applause.]

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, last session of this Congress I said on the floor of this House that I would vote for a measure to raise the salaries of our successors. Both before and since this, on the stump in Tennessee, I have insisted that the salaries of Members of Congress, Senators and Representatives, were insufficient and should be raised, and that I would support a measure to do so. Nothing was done on this subject last session. Since then, last November, the Members of the Sixtieth Congress have been elected. Their term of office begins March 4 next.

I have introduced this session a bill to raise the salaries of the Members of the Sixty-first Congress to $7,500 per year, also paying them their necessary and proper traveling expenses in going to and from the regular and extra sessions of Congress, but only such amounts as are actually paid. My bill further provides that proper writing supplies shall be furnished to each Member on demand, including a typewriting machine, to be used in official business. We are now allowed $5,000 salary, our railroad fare, and $125, to be used in whole or in part, in purchasing stationery, etc.

I know this reform is needed. So does every Member of Congress, including the ex-Members, while the people believe it should be made.

The present salary of $5,000 was first fixed in 1866, forty years ago. The cost of living was then less than now. The work of Members in 1866 was much less than in 1906. You know the work we must do to-day is many fold greater than ever before, and necessarily so.

I shall not take up, just now, at least, the time of the committee showing the necessity for this reform; you are familiar with the facts. My purpose now is to show the history of and cite the precedents made from the First Congress, which passed the first act fixing these salaries, down to the Forty-third Congress, which, in 1874, passed the last act—the present law, the same law in dollars and cents passed in 1866—forty years ago.

I believe these salaries would have been raised long before this had not the Forty-second Congress, March 3, 1873, about twelve hours before that Congress died, passed a retroactive statute, giving Members of that Congress, on the very last day of its service, a back salary at the rate of $7,500 per year. Just the day before—that is, March 3, 1873—that Congress died, it passed that law, giving, with possibly some deductions, the Members of that Congress that salary for the whole time, I believe, that they had been Members of the Forty-second Congress, and the people very rightfully rebelled.

That Congress had already, from time to time, been paid for its year work. It was strictly a "back salary grab," a Congress paying itself for work for which it had already been paid, or had the right to be paid under the old law, of $5,000 per annum and mileage at the rate of 20 cents per mile, under the act of July 28, 1866, passed during President Johnson's Administration.

The next, or Forty-third Congress, in 1874, reduced the $7,500 salary back to the old amount of $5,000 and 20 cents mileage, the law to-day.

The increase in salaries which I insist should be made is not for past services, but for future services, and more than that for the members of the Sixty-first Congress, to be elected two years hence. Persons of unfair minds can not criticise those who vote for it as being selfish.

I am on record in and out of this House as favoring the enactment of a law by this the Fifty-ninth Congress to increase the salaries of our successors, which then meant the successors to the Fifty-ninth Congress, to wit, the Sixtieth, the Sixty-first, or any other Congress to which this Congress may in its wisdom may make the law applicable.

The public service requires this increase. In justice to the Member it is required. But I desire to get to the question of precedents. I read the Constitution on the power of Congress to fix compensation of Members of Congress before I introduced this bill. I had not read any other authority or precedent on the subject before then, but, desiring to go to the bottom of the question, I have, since Saturday last, looked up the statutes on the subject, which I shall insert in the RECORD, if permitted.

The Constitution ordains that—

The Senators and Representatives shall receive a compensation for their services, to be ascertained by law, and paid out of the Treasury of the United States.

This provision was fixed by the framers of the Constitution by a vote of 9 to 2 after considerable debate as to whether Members should be paid at all and whether by the State or Federal Government. You see the vote was overwhelming.

THE FIRST CONGRESS.

The First Congress at its first session, September, 1789, fixed the salaries and mileage of the Members of the First Congress, the Second and Third also, and President Washington approved the act. This precedent, as I will show, has been repeatedly followed.

The First Congress submitted twelve proposed amendments to the Constitution, ten of which were adopted. Two were defeated, one of which reads as follows:

PROPOSED AMENDMENT DEFEATED.

ARTICLE II. No law varying the compensation for the services of the Senators and Representatives shall take effect until an election of Representatives shall have intervened.

This amendment was defeated.

It is very similar, you observe, in its purpose to the bill I have introduced proposing to fix the salaries of Members yet to be elected for the Sixty-first Congress. If that bill, or one similar, is passed, the Sixtieth Congress, just elected, can repeal it at either the long or short session. The Members of the Sixty-first can repeal it.

PRESIDENT WASHINGTON'S SALARY.

The First Congress also fixed the salary of the President, then Mr. Washington, and the Vice-President, then Mr. Adams, at $25,000 for the President and $5,000 for the Vice-President. Mr. Washington, as President, approved this act, although in his inaugural address he at least intimated to Congress that he did not desire any compensation, but asked for certain furniture, etc. Here is what he said:

WHAT WASHINGTON ASKED FOR.

To the preceding observations I have one to add, which will be most properly addressed to the House of Representatives. It concerns myself, and will, therefore, be as brief as possible. When I was first honored with a call into the service of my country, then on the eve of an arduous struggle for its liberties, the light in which I contemplated my duty required that I should renounce every pecuniary compensation. From this resolution I have in no instance departed; and being still under the impressions which produced it, I must decline, as inapplicable to myself, any share in the personal emoluments which may be indispensably included in a permanent provision for the executive department; and must accordingly pray that the pecuniary estimates for the station in which I am placed may, during my continuance in it, be limited to such actual expenditures as the public good may be thought to require.

On February 18, 1793, near the close of the first term of President Washington, he again approved a bill refixing his salary and the Vice-President's at the same figures, "to be paid quarter-yearly," and "from and after the 3d of March, 1793," his second term beginning March 4, 1793.

FOURTH CONGRESS FIXED ITS SALARY.

The Fourth Congress, in 1796, at its first session, fixed its salary. The date of the act is March 10, 1796, and provides:

That every session of Congress and at every meeting of the Senate in the recess of Congress, from and after the 3d day of March, in the present year (1796), each Senator shall receive $6 per day, etc., and $6 for every 20 miles to and from sessions of Congress, etc.

President Washington approved this act.

There were many Members of the First, Second, Third, and Fourth Congresses, at least the First, who were members of the Constitutional Convention, over which Mr. Washington presided, and thus they construed the powers of Congress to act, legally and morally, in fixing salaries. The people had before 1791 defeated the proposed amendment prohibiting the changing of the compensation of Members by any law taking effect "until an election of Representatives shall have intervened."

FIFTH CONGRESS—1797.

The Fifth Congress at its first session, July 6, 1797, paid its Members mileage who attended an extraordinary session of Congress. John Adams was then President.

FOURTEENTH CONGRESS—1816.

The Fourteenth Congress, at its first session, fixed the compensation of its Members, and those of future Congresses, changing the law from a per diem to a fixed salary of $1,500. President Madison approved this act. He was a member of the Constitutional Convention and is called the "Father of the Constitution."

Another act was passed by the same Congress at its second session repealing the act of the previous session of March 19, 1816, which Mr. Madison also approved.

FIFTEENTH CONGRESS—1818.

During Mr. Monroe's Administration the Fifteenth Congress, first session, January 22, 1818, fixed the salaries of that Congress by raising the per diem to $8 and the mileage to $8 for every 20 miles.

THIRTY-FOURTH CONGRESS—1856.

This remained the law, I believe, down to the Thirty-fourth Congress, which, at its first session, August 16, 1856, refixed the salaries or compensation and raised it to $6,000 "for each Congress," allowing the old mileage, $8 for each 20 miles.

Section 3 of that act provided:

That this law shall apply to the present Congress, and each Senator, Representative, and Delegate shall be entitled to receive the difference only between their per diem compensation already received under the law now in force and the compensation provided by this act.

This act was passed during the Administration of President Pierce.

THIRTY-FIFTH CONGRESS—1857.

The next, or Thirty-fifth Congress, first session, December, 1857, during President Buchanan's Administration, the act of 1856 was changed so as to make the mileage payable on the first day of each session and the compensation at $250 per month.

THE WIDOWS OF MEMBERS.

This Thirty-fifth Congress also passed, March 3, 1859, second session, an act giving the widows of deceased Members of Congress the benefit of certain portions of the salary of the deceased Member if he should die "after the commencement of Congress," etc. The third section made the law applicable "to the widows and heirs at law of Members elected to the present Congress who have died since its commencement." This act was approved March 3, 1859, just the day before the Thirty-fifth Congress died. It was approved by President Buchanan.

THIRTY-NINTH CONGRESS—1866.

During President Johnson's Administration, the sundry civil bill of the Thirty-ninth Congress, first session, July 28, 1866, fixed the compensation of Members and Delegates at $5,000 per annum, "to be computed from the first day of the present Congress, and in addition thereto mileage at the rate of 20 cents per mile."

Members of Congress and Delegates are now paid $5,000 per annum and 20 cents mileage.

BACK-SALARY ACT—1873.

In 1873, March 3, the "back-salary grab act" was passed, with which you are familiar. It was retroactive, as stated, and was extra pay for work the Members had already done, and for which they had already been paid in part or totally. President Grant signed this act, which you see was passed a few hours before his second term begun, the Forty-second Congress died, and the Forty-third Congress begun.

FORTY-THIRD CONGRESS—1874.

The Forty-third Congress refixed the salary of the Members of Congress at $5,000, but allowed the salary of the President to remain at $50,000 and the salaries of the Federal judges to stand unchanged.

I have thus briefly and rapidly as possible explained to you the precedents on this subject, from the First Congress down to the Forty-third Congress, covering a period when Members who had framed the Constitution, as Members of Congress framed the first laws, which fixed compensation of Members and of the Presidents from Washington on down. I have covered the period when salaries have been refixed and the example set by Washington and the First Congress clear on down and shown to you that there is no constitutional prohibition against an existing Congress fixing its own salary, if it chooses, or in fixing those of succeeding Congresses. It is a question of justice and wise public policy which should guide us looking to the end, to wit, the public service and a fair and reasonable compensation for the Members of Congress of the present period, taking into consideration the amount and kind of work they must do, and have to do, and their inability to engage in outside business, which they must do in many cases "to make buckle and tongue meet." Members are entitled to a compensation, which, if used with reasonable care and propriety, will not only defray their proper expenses while Members of Congress, but they are due a compensation from which they can save something for a "rainy day" when they leave Congress to fight again the battles of life that are more real then than ever before.

But I shall argue in a general way the necessity for increased salaries as I proceed in discussing other propositions with which the Members may be less familiar.

I shall now make some comparisons. There are limitations on Congress in unfixing and fixing the salaries of the President and our Federal judges.

The Constitution declares:

The President shall, at stated times, receive for his services a compensation which shall be neither increased nor diminished during the period for which he shall have been elected, and he shall not receive during that period any emolument from the United States or any of them.

The judges, both of the Supreme and inferior courts, shall hold their offices during good behavior, and shall, at stated times, receive for their services a compensation which shall not be diminished during their continuance in office.

PRESIDENT'S SALARY.

The First Congress, we see, fixed the salary of President Washington during his first term. The First Congress did that.

Just before the end of his first term the Second Congress refixed the terms for paying the President's salary during his second term. Washington approved both acts. We have seen that just before the end of President Grant's first term Congress passed a law refixing the President's salary and fixing it at $50,000, to take effect during his second term. The next Congress reaffirmed, and all succeeding Congresses, this act by not repealing it.

Here are two Congressional constructions placed upon the power of Congress to unfix and refix the President's salary.

In addition to this Presidential salary, Congress allows a certain amount of money for maintaining the White House and the premises. Congress recently appropriated a sum of money to be spent by President Roosevelt and his successors in taking certain trips, instead of, as heretofore, accepting free transportation, private or special trains, etc., as the President and his predecessors have done, we are officially and publicly informed by Senator LODGE in his speech in the Senate. We have thus lifted the President above the suspicion and criticism of accepting free transportation. We have made him independent. If the President takes no trips, this money will not be spent and will remain for his successors to use. It is not his. It is money held in trust. I thought the act appropriating this money constitutional, a proper expenditure, and voted for it. I wanted our President and his successors independent and above suspicion or criticism.

PAY TO FEDERAL JUDGES.

Take the judges of the Federal court. Our first Chief Justice was paid $5,000 annually. The present Chief Justice receives $13,500, his associates $12,500, while the salaries of all the inferior Federal judges have been recently raised. To a certain extent the law fixes the amount of work each of these courts must do by saying what they can do, by restricting appeals, by creating the court of appeals, and increasing the number of circuit or district judges. In other words, the courts do not have to work at most everything. The law allows them to work at certain things and not at all things.

DUTIES OF MEMBERS BOUNDLESS.

But how about Members of Congress? Their work is practically boundless. They are called on to make laws and do most everything else that the law provides shall be done for the people of the United States, our Territories, and colonies; yet we are paid much less than any Federal judge, whose duties are limited. The judges are paid these increased salaries, their mileage, and more; their hotel bills are paid while they are holding court, if away from home. Are the board bills of Members of Congress paid by Congress? [Laughter.] Yes; they are paid, but out of our own pockets from the salary we receive. What else? Why, every one of these judges is given, free of charge, an office in which to work. They are furnished with libraries, I think. Who pays for the Member's office in Washington, or at home, as to that? The Member himself out of his salary. Who pays for our books, so necessary for Members in investigating great constitutional questions and the study of historical matter pertinent to official work? The Members have to go and buy them, if they are bought, or go to the Library, or, if you are at home, go ahead and make out you know it anyhow. [Laughter.] But you can not do that in my district. [Laughter.] My friend from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] knows that is true. [Laughter.]

These, gentlemen, are a few of the adverse conditions which confront Members of Congress. A great many people criticise Members, or Congress, rather, and wonder how it is, with the present salary, that we live, move, and have our being while Members of Congress "without holding out our hands behind us."

People have met me on the street and seriously said: "How do you Members manage to get along on your small salary, fixed forty years ago, when the expenses of living were about half as great as they are now? I don't see how you do it. You can not do any other work and do your full duty to the public; why doesn't Congress raise your salaries?"

[The time of Mr. GAINES having expired Mr. LIVINGSTON yielded him ten minutes more.]

Mr. BRUMM. What about election expenses?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Members are elected every two years. There are certain, proper expenses, though they should be limited—legitimate election expenses. We all know what they are. The candidates must pay for these expenses out of their own pockets, which is proper, being purely personal or private, but it must be, and is, done every two years; the Senators every six years. I have never had any election expenses of any importance, save once or twice. I have been here nearly ten years, and I do not think that I have spent over a thousand dollars, except once or twice, when I had to furnish about $600 in each of two elections—primary elections—once when I had no opponent for the nomination and once when I did. This money was used to pay for printing the official primary ticket and pay the clerks and judges holding the election in five counties. During the election last fall I paid for my tickets and those of other candidates, all told $2.75, and as I could not go to an outer county for want of time to see about my tickets there and their distribution to the several precincts, I sent my check for $25, the usual amount for that county. I do not know whether that check has been cashed or not. I presume it has, to cover my legitimate expenses in that county.

Railroad expenses, going here and there at the call of the people to help them, is a heavy outlay.

Gentlemen, when I read in the public press about the election expenses of candidates in Pennsylvania—with all due respect to my good friend [Mr. BRUMM]—and in New York, I think they are absolutely disgraceful to the American people. [Applause.] I do not refer to my friend from Pennsylvania. I know nothing of his district. I am glad my friend is back in Congress, as long as some Republican had to come from his district. He is a good, square man. He fights for what he thinks is right. I like that kind only. Think of a man in any State—and there are other States like the two named—having to pay $50,000 to be elected to any office on American soil! How can it be used, unless it is to bend the public will, choke freedom, poison the public mind, corrupt the public conscience, buy newspapers, and thus stain the fair name of the American people at home and abroad?

But, gentlemen, I have been diverted from what I was about to say.

I will not consume your time or burden your patience by reading you from Judge Story's work on the Constitution the reasons he sets forth for allowing Members compensation for their services. I will try and give you the substance of a few of the reasons he sets out that were in the mind of the framers of the Constitution which directs that compensation be allowed. Substantially they were: That the poor man or the man in ordinary circumstances as well as the rich, I may add, should come to Congress, and be put upon a reasonable parity when they get here; to get the best talent possible from every class of good society, whether from laborers or professional men or the commercial class; to have as many candidates as possible from which to select; to have the Member independent in fact and above the suspicion of "selling out;" to be plain and brief, to pay for the services rendered and to be rendered.

I may add, the same reasons caused the framers of the Constitution to write into that instrument that the President and judges shall be paid fixed compensation, to be changed only at certain times, and never diminished, at least during the incumbency.

Now, gentlemen, let us get down to a moral proposition. When a man marries, it is his duty to remain with his family, properly protect his wife, and carefully rear his children. [Applause and laughter.] I am astonished that some of you gentlemen laugh when I tell you what a husband and father's moral and legal duty is to his wife and children. When a man comes to Congress, we all have observed, that too often he has been compelled to leave his family at home, or bring his wife only and leave his children, or bring a part of them along. And why? Because of the great expense coming and going and of living in Washington with such heavy incumbrances. Thus the husband is separated over half of the term from his wife and children, or the husband and wife are separated from a part, or all, of the children for months and months. At all events, a father and husband for months is practically divorced from his family—the father from his son and the mother from the daughter.

Neither God Almighty nor the laws of this country ever intended that the father should be separated from his son at least, who is just budding into boyhood, or into his teens, or into young manhood. We all know that the presence of the father is needed, especially at these periods. We all know that his counsel and his very presence is needed, not only for the son, but for all his children, his wife not excluded, and it is his duty to be with them, and we should not make it practically impossible for him to fill these high and sacred offices, and particularly inasmuch as some one must make a sacrifice for our country, homes, and civilization, otherwise we would have no Congress, or a Congress of rich men only.

But where are the mothers and the children, as a rule, when Congress meets, and why is it so? They are at home, as a rule, and you know that January next your free passes will be cut off—a thing I helped to do, and I am glad of it. But suppose you bring your family here and put your children in school, as some do. The father or mother, or both, must stay here after Congress adjourns to look after the little folks until after the school term is ended. This can be done during the long session, which ends in the summer, but not so easily in the short session, which ends in March.

Thus you see a Member with a family—and nearly every Member has a family—is inevitably hampered, whether he brings his family here or leaves them at home.

Now, suppose a Member of this House is a lawyer—and about 80 per cent are, I should say. Members living near here I know practice law regularly at home when they ought to be here attending to the public business, and I dare say if all the lawyers lived near enough that they would all more or less practice law at home while Congress is in session. And why? Simply because the man has to run the mill at home in order to have something left when the people, justly or unjustly, turn him out of Congress at the end of two or more terms.

His salary is inadequate, and he must make buckle and tongue meet. He must do work "on the side" to keep up. And the lawyer is not alone in thus increasing the long list of absentees.

The banker goes home to see whether his coupons are regularly clipped or not. The few farmers in Congress, though usually present, so far as I know, feel that they must return to see if the cows have broken into their patches, their corn or wheat fields; and the coal king and the cattle king, no matter how rich they are, must go back home to look after their business. The call of the sick at home and here keeps us away sometimes, while others must and should go back to see their families at home.

Ah, gentlemen, some of you, I see, smile over these statements, but each of you know I am stating the facts, and it is a serious matter, both to the Member and to the public service. The undoing of both these official and moral obligations should be limited as much as justice and right and the public service will permit, since they are obligations we must all meet.

You may work year in and year out, devoting your best thought, as you should, to the public service; that is the standard. With the present salary you know at the end of the year it is useless to strike any salary balance, for you know there is nothing in the bottom of your pockets but your Barlow knife. [Laughter.] Gentlemen, "buckle and tongue must meet," whether you are in or out of office.

During the time when the salary was so small the work of the Members was comparatively small. During this period Congress found it necessary to buy a Congressional burying ground down here. [Laughter.] That is so, gentlemen, while now when a Member dies he is buried at the public expense. Buying this graveyard—sad commentary on Congress, or Congressional salaries, rather—was a charitable act, of course, pure and simple.

Members of Congress come here poor, but honorable, intelligent, and patriotic. The love of country brings them here, and without that love we would have no country. That is something every nation covets and should foster. It should be taught in every school. The greatest class of men who have ever been in Congress or ever will be have not been the men who were the richest. Our great men, as a class, have been poor. When any man enters this hall to make laws for his country, to protect your home and my home and the home of the humblest man in the land, he pledges the people, directly or indirectly, and they expect of him, that he will devote proper time to the public service and give at all times that service his best thought, not only for the betterment of his constituents, but the public at large.

Gentlemen, do you give, under the circumstances can you give, your best thoughts to the public service? No. You are broken up in your purposes in trying to make buckle and tongue meet. You are looking after what little you left at home, that seed may be left when you return voluntarily or are kicked out of Congress, whether rightfully or wrongfully.

There are some Members who make Congress a mere playground; but the people soon find them out. Where is the Member who day in and day out works here or at home at the public business? Where is the Member, however, who month in and month out fails to draw his salary from the Federal Treasury?

Where is the Member who does not feel he is forced to work at something on the outside, thus dividing his time between the public and his business?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has again expired.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I yield the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Gentlemen, as a rule you can not stay here on $5,000 and do justice both to yourself and to your country. You can not, and you know it. Some of you do; you are able to do it. It is a sad commentary that many of our Presidents have been buried in almost paupers' graves and are almost unmarked. Is it right? Do the American people expect this? No; they do not. Do they expect that we shall come here, whether a President or not, whether judges or Members, with an overflowing Treasury, and work year in and year out on a salary from which we can not save a little, at least, for a "rainy day?" The salary of $5,000 was first fixed in 1866, and refixed at that figure in 1874 by repealing the act of 1873, which raised it.

Compare the work then and now of the Government, the scope of the laws we make and the increased burdens of Members in making these laws and the limitless demands made on us at all times by our constituents, who want things that are supplied by the Government or want private legislation they may or may not be entitled to have. There is a great difference. The civil war pension list has increased since 1866 and 1874. We have now the Spanish war pension list. We did not have the latter in 1874, 1873, or 1866. We must now legislate for the veterans of the Mexican, civil, and Spanish wars.

Under Cleveland's Administration we created the Department of Agriculture, that the farmers rightfully look to for advice and assistance. The Bureau of Commerce and Labor has been recently created. Our trust laws and their execution, the starting of "proceedings" under these laws, are new burdens daily increasing. We must legislate for our colonial possessions, an unfortunate incubus. We must look after our people over there, both the living and the dead. A day or two ago a young soldier wrote me for a book that he could not get there, which I got here and sent him. A few months back a widowed mother, whose son died in the Philippines, came and asked me to see about having his remains brought back to his native heath, that she might have them buried close by the old log home. It was done.

Oh, gentlemen, need I allude to the thousand and one things you well know in our Congressional life that we must do, brought about by the ordinary and extraordinary growth of the country, internal and external, making the labors of the Members greater and more continuous than the fathers ever dreamed of.

These duties we can not avoid and should not. They are vital to the interested parties, however humble they are, albeit they consume much of our valuable time and prevent us from considering real legislation and its study.

I believe the people, certainly with all the facts before them, would cheerfully agree to an increase in Congressional salaries. If not, refix them. They object, and rightfully, to reaching back and grabbing extra pay, as was done in 1873. But no one proposes such a law. But it is proposed to increase the salary of your successors. The Presidents, from Washington down, and the construction given by the fathers who wrote the Constitution, have thus defined your legal and moral rights. I prefer myself to vote for my bill because it fixes the salary of the Sixty-first Congress. No criticism by a fair-minded man should be made of that proposition, so far as I can see. But, rather than there shall be no legislation on the subject, I shall vote to fix the salary for the Sixtieth Congress. We have worked, many of us, for ten years with the present salary by making personal sacrifices. We can stand it two years longer; and as there can not be any just criticism, charging this Congress with selfishness in fixing the salary to apply to the Sixty-first Congress, and as the next Congress, the Sixtieth, can, before or after the election for the Sixty-first Congress, repeal or modify the law if desirable, it seems to me that a bill along the lines of mine enacted, fixing a salary for the Sixty-first Congress, is the least objectionable. Certain it is that the public service demands and justice calls for such a reform. [Great applause.]

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HEPBURN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 21574, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The matter above referred to is as follows:

APPENDIX.

[H. R. 21201. Fifty-ninth Congress, second session.]

In the House of Representatives, December 5, 1906. Mr. GAINES of Tennessee introduced the following bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A bill fixing the salary of Members of Congress and Delegates, and their necessary expenses, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That each Senator, Representative, and Delegate in Congress shall be paid an annual salary, to wit, $7,500, and, when duly authenticated and filed, all reasonable and proper expenses incurred and actually paid in coming to and going from each session, whether regular or extra, of Congress.

SEC. 2. That there shall be furnished on demand, free of charge, each Member of Congress and Delegate all proper and necessary writing material and supplies, including typewriting machines, to be used in executing their official duties.

SEC. 3. That this act shall take effect on and after March 4, 1909, applying first to the Sixty-first Congress.

LEGISLATION HERETOFORE HAD FIXING THE COMPENSATION OF MEMBERS OF CONGRESS, THE PRESIDENT, AND VICE-PRESIDENT.

The First Congress, first session, September 22, 1789 (obsolete), passed an act entitled:

An act for allowing compensation to the members of the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States, and to the officers of both Houses.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That at every session of Congress PRIOR to the fourth day of March, in the year one thousand seven hundred and ninety-five, each Senator shall be entitled to receive SIX dollars for every DAY he shall attend the Senate, and shall also be allowed, at the commencement and end of every such session and meeting, six dollars for EVERY TWENTY MILES OF THE ESTIMATED DISTANCE, by the most usual road, from his place of residence to the seat of Congress; and in case any member of the Senate shall be detained by sickness on his journey to or from any such session or meeting, or after his arrival shall be unable to attend the Senate, he shall be entitled to the same daily allowance:

Provided always, That no Senator shall be allowed a sum exceeding the rate of six dollars a day from the end of one such session or meeting to the time of his taking his seat in another.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That at every session of Congress, and at every meeting of the Senate in the recess of Congress, AFTER the aforesaid fourth day of March, in the year ONE THOUSAND SEVEN HUNDRED AND NINETY-FIVE, each Senator shall be entitled to receive SEVEN dollars for every DAY he shall attend the Senate; and shall also be allowed at the commencement and end of every such session and meeting, SEVEN DOLLARS FOR EVERY TWENTY MILES OF THE ESTIMATED DISTANCE, by the most usual road, from his place of residence to the seat of Congress; and in case any member of the Senate shall be detained by sickness, on his journey to or from any such session or meeting, or after his arrival shall be unable to attend the Senate, he shall be entitled to the same allowance of seven dollars a day: Provided always, That no Senator shall be allowed a sum exceeding the rate of seven dollars per day from the end of one such session or meeting to the time of his taking a seat in another.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That at EVERY SESSION OF CONGRESS each Representative shall be entitled to receive six dollars for every day he shall attend the House of Representatives, and shall also be allowed at the commencement and end of EVERY SESSION SIX DOLLARS FOR EVERY TWENTY MILES OF THE ESTIMATED DISTANCE, by the most usual road, from his place of residence to the seat of Congress; and in case any Representative shall be detained by sickness or after his arrival shall be detained by sickness, on his journey to or from the session of Congress or after his arrival shall be unable to attend the House of Representatives, he shall be entitled to the allowance aforesaid; and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, to defray the incidental expenses of his office, shall be entitled to receive in addition to his compensation as a Representatives six dollars for every day he shall attend the House: Provided always, That no Representative shall be allowed a sum exceeding the rate of six dollars a day from the end of one such session or meeting to the time of his taking a seat in another. (See pages 70, 71, vol. 1, Stat. Approved by President Washington.)

The First Congress, first session, September 24, 1789, passed an act entitled:

An act for allowing a compensation to the President and Vice-President of the United States.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That there shall be allowed to the President of the United States, at the rate of twenty-five thousand dollars, with the use of the furniture and other effects now in his possession belonging to the United States; and to the Vice-President, at the rate of five thousand dollars per annum, in full compensation for their respective services, to commence with the time of their entering on the duties of their offices, respectively, and to continue so long as they shall remain in office and to be paid quarterly out of the Treasury of the United States.

Approved September 24, 1789. (See page 72, vol. 1, Stat. Signed by President Washington.)

The Second Congress, session two, on February 18, 1793, passed an act entitled:

An act providing compensation to the President and Vice-President of the United States.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That from and after the third day of March in the present year (1793) the compensation of the President of the United States shall be at the rate of twenty-five thousand dollars per annum, with the use of the furniture and other effects belonging to the United States and now in possession of the President; and that of the Vice-President at the rate of five thousand dollars per annum in full for their respective services, to be paid quarter-yearly at the Treasury.

Approved February 18, 1793 (see p/ 318, vol. 1).
Signed President Washington.

The Fourth Congress, 1st session, on March 10, 1796, passed an act entitled:

An act for allowing compensation to the members of the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States, and to certain officers of both Houses.

TREATY WITH JAPAN.

Mr. GEARIN. I submit a resolution and ask that it may lie on the table.

The resolution was read, and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

Whereas a controversy has arisen as to the rights of Japanese residents in the United States under the existing treaty with Japan, and it is desirable that all cause of misunderstanding as to the scope and meaning of the terms used in that treaty should be removed to the end that the present friendly relations between the two Governments should continue; and

Whereas the Senate considers that the further unrestricted immigration of Japanese laborers into this country is not desirable: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that it is advisable that negotiations should be entered into with the Japanese Government by the proper executive officers of the United States with a view of securing such modification of the existing treaty with Japan as will clearly define and enumerate the rights guaranteed Japanese under said treaty, and will provide that the further coming of Japanese cooly laborers into the United States be prohibited altogether.

EXPERIMENTS WITH CHOLERA VIRUS IN THE PHILIPPINES.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War is hereby directed to communicate to the Senate the facts pertaining to experiments with cholera virus, alleged to have been made at Manila upon prisoners by Surg. Richard P. Strong, of the United States Army; to state whether, as a result of such experimentation, ten or more persons lost their lives; whether any of the persons so experimented upon were previously informed of the dangerous and possibly fatal character of the experiments; whether any of them were natives of the United States, and by whose authority and upon whose responsibility these experiments were made.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. M. C. LATTA, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 11th instant approved and signed the act (S. 1804) providing for the use of certified checks to secure compliance with proposals and contracts for naval supplies.

STATE PUBLIC SCHOOL SYSTEM.

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. President, I call up Senate resolution No. 183.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution indicated by the Senator from Maryland will be read.

The Secretary read the resolutions submitted by Mr. RAYNER on the 4th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That in the opinion of the Senate this Government has no right to enter into any treaty with foreign governments relating to any of the public school systems of the States of the Union; and

Resolved further, That in the opinion of the Senate there is no provision in the treaty between the United States and the Government of Japan that relates in any manner to this subject or in any way interferes with the right of the State of California to conduct and administer its system of public schools in accordance with its own legislation; and

Resolved further, That it is the duty of the President of the United States to notify the Government of Japan and notify any foreign government with whom the question may arise that the public educational institutions of the States are not within the jurisdiction of the United States, and that the United States has no power to regulate or supervise their administration.

Mr. CULLOM. Before the Senator from Maryland proceeds to a discussion of the resolutions I desire to state that immediately after the conclusion of the Senator's speech I will ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of executive business for the purpose especially of disposing of what is called the "Algeciras treaty."

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. President, the proposition covered by this resolution is to my mind a most important one. The President has stated in his message that the Federal Government possesses some power in connection with the subject-matter set forth in the resolution, and that everything within his power shall be done and all of the forces, military and civil, of the United States, which he may lawfully employ will be employed for that purpose. It is very important therefore that we should know and the country should know, and the President should understand, whether he has any power in the premises at all, because it is quite a serious matter in view of the great calamity that has lately befallen the city of San Francisco for the President to contemplate the bombarding of the city at this time, and to declare war against the boards of county school trustees of California, if there is no justification or pretext upon which such ferocious proceedings can be undertaken.

With great respect and deference to the President, he is exercising a great many functions—executive, legislative, and judicial, lawful and unlawful, constitutional and unconstitutional. If he is possessed of the idea that he is the supervisor of all of the public schools of the various States of the Union, and he seems to be impressed with this idea, because in the very last paragraph of his message he recommends to Congress the establishment of shooting galleries in all of the large public schools of the country, we must either disabuse his mind of this fancy or we must let him know that we agree with him as to the omnipotence of his jurisdiction. If he can take possession of the public schools of California and compel the State to admit to them Japanese students contrary to the laws of California, he could with equal propriety send us an amendment to the Santo Domingo treaty and demand the admission of the negro children of Santo Domingo into the white schools of South Carolina or of any other State of the Union. Of course, if the people have come to the conclusion that everything that the President recommends is right, then there is hardly any use in contesting any of his propositions or recommendations, and instead of conferring upon him the power to give Congress information of the state of the Union, we might confer upon him the function of furnishing his own peculiar views upon the entire state of the universe and recommending any improvements or changes in the general plan of creation that he may deem expedient, from the cradle to the grave. In fact, the President, upon page 29 of his message, anticipates the cradle and makes a recommendation upon the state of the Union that tends to place in his hands the establishment of the birth rate of the country. Now, if we can only supplement this function by giving him complete jurisdiction over the death rate we will then have a ruler whose ubiquity is uncircumscribed and whose unlimited possibilities are beyond the reach of human contemplation.

I believe that there is a sufficient residuum of common sense and independent thought in the American people to keep the Executive within the prerogatives of his office and to let him quietly and respectfully understand that the Executive chair is not exactly the place from which to deliver exhortations or a course of didactics upon either the natural rights or the infirmities of the human race, and that in his messages and recommendations he ought to confine himself to the functions prescribed by the Constitution.

I desire to say, in passing, that I coincide with everything that the President says in praise of the people of Japan. In the war between Japan and Russia my sympathies were entirely with the Government of Japan, and whatever he says in honor of its marvelous race meets with my own hearty commendation. I always thought it was a great shame that through the kindly and well-intentioned offices of the President, Japan should have been overpowered in the conference room when she had been victorious in every battle upon the land and on the sea, and I think that the dauntless courage and the almost superhuman heroism, against overwhelming odds, of her military and naval forces is without a parallel upon the pages of ancient or modern history. I propose to discuss the question under consideration entirely outside of the particular circumstances that environ it, upon general grounds of constitutional law, and certainly with no feeling of hostility upon my part toward this wonderful people with whom this controversy has arisen.

THE TREATY WITH JAPAN—COMPARISON WITH CHINESE TREATY.

In my brief argument that I shall address to this body I shall plant myself upon two propositions:

First, that there is no provision whatever in the treaty with Japan that confers the right that the President speaks of, or gives to the Government of Japan the privileges that it claims in connection with the public school system of California or of any other State.

Secondly, the more important question, if there was such a provision in this treaty, or any other treaty conferring this right, the treaty would be void and without any authority upon the part of the United States to make it, and in violation of the Constitution and the treaty-making power of the Government.

The first step that it is necessary for me to take in this discussion is to quote the provisions of the treaty with Japan that have been held to be applicable to the subject in hand, the ratifications of which treaty were exchanged by the respective Governments on the 21st of March, 1895. I will ask the Secretary kindly to read those provisions. It will take but a moment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

ARTICLE I. The citizens or subjects of each of the two high contracting parties shall have full liberty to enter, travel, or reside in any part of the territories of the other contracting party, and shall enjoy full and perfect protection for their persons and property.

They shall have free access to the courts of justice in pursuit and defence of their rights; they shall be at liberty equally with native citizens or subjects to choose and employ lawyers, advocates, and representatives to pursue and defend their rights before such courts, and in all other matters connected with the administration of justice they shall enjoy all the rights and privileges enjoyed by native citizens or subjects.

In whatever relates to rights of residence and travel; to the possession of goods and effects of any kind; to the succession to personal estate, by will or otherwise, and the disposal of property of any sort and in any manner whatsoever which they may lawfully acquire, the citizens or subjects of each contracting party shall enjoy in the territories of the other the same privileges, liberties, and rights, and shall be subject to no higher imposts or charges in these respects than native citizens or subjects or citizens or subjects of the most favored nation. The citizens or subjects of each of the contracting parties shall enjoy in the territories of the other entire liberty of conscience, and, subject to the laws, ordinances, and regulations, shall enjoy the right of private or public exercise of their worship, and also the right of burying their respective countrymen, according to their religious customs, in such suitable and convenient places as may be established and maintained for that purpose.

They shall not be compelled, under any pretext whatsoever, to pay any charges or taxes other or higher than those that are, or may be paid by native citizens or subjects or citizens or subjects of the most favored nation.

The citizens or subjects of either of the contracting parties residing in the territories of the other shall be exempt from all compulsory military service whatsoever, whether in the Army, Navy, National Guard, or Militia; from all contributions imposed in lieu of personal service; and from all forced loans or military exactions or contributions.

ARTICLE XIV. The high contracting parties agree that, in all that concerns commerce and navigation, any privilege, favor, or immunity which either high contracting party has actually granted, or may hereinafter grant, to the Government, ships, citizens, or subjects of any other State, shall be extended to the Government, ships, citizens, or subjects of the other high contracting party, gratuitously, if the concession in favor of that other State shall have been gratuitous, and on the same or equivalent conditions if the concession shall have been conditional; it being their intention that the trade and navigation of each country shall be placed, in all respects, by the other upon the footing of the most favored nation.

Mr. RAYNER. There is not a clause or a line of this treaty that contains by expression or intendment the slightest reference to the public school systems of any of the States of the Union, or confers any rights whatever upon the citizens of Japan to enjoy the privileges of their public educational institutions. There is not a clause or a line, although I understand that the President has been advised to the contrary, that, to the professional mind, would admit of such a construction. The most liberal interpretation of any of its terms does not allow such an interpolation or insertion to be made. The treaty does not even contain the most-favored-nation clause, except in reference to the particular objects that are therein specifically enumerated.

If I have made a mistake upon this point let some Senator upon the floor or some of the President's legal advisers upon the treaty refer me to the clause that carries with it such a construction. Let the President elucidate his message upon this point and give us the language in the treaty that authorized him to state that he had any power or jurisdiction over this subject whatever. It can not be done, because here is the treaty, and no one arises here to justify his construction of it. If there is any decision in the United States that holds that any of the rights granted by the treaty carry with them the privilege to the subjects of Japan of even partaking of the advantages of the educational system of our States, let us have that decision. I have examined them all very carefully that relate to treaties and I find no authority to sustain such a proposition.

Now, let me call your attention to a very peculiar circumstance, and that is the Burlingame treaty, which was made with China, because that does contain such a provision. It is only a few lines. The Burlingame treaty with China, which was proclaimed on February 5, 1870, has the following provision in it:

ARTICLE VII. Citizens of the United States shall enjoy all the privileges of the public educational institutions under the control of the Government of China, and, reciprocally, Chinese subjects shall enjoy all the privileges of the public educational institutions under the control of the Government of the United States which are enjoyed in the respective countries by citizens or subjects of the most-favored nation. The citizens of the United States may freely establish and maintain schools within the Empire of China at those places where foreigners are by treaty permitted to reside, and, reciprocally, Chinese subjects may enjoy the same privileges and immunities in the United States.

"Of the United States." It does not say "of the States," but of the United States.

Mr. BLACKBURN. That is a distinction.

Mr. RAYNER. I say that is a distinction. I am coming to that. Nevertheless it contains a provision that the Japanese treaty does not contain. The Japanese treaty does not give any rights to any public educational institution controlled by the United States.

Now, as I was going to say, the Japanese treaty contains no such provision as this, and the favored clause does not cover it.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. RAYNER. I do.

Mr. FORAKER. If it would not interrupt the Senator, I would ask him if he can state the respective dates of those two treaties?

Mr. RAYNER. The Burlingame treaty, February 5, 1870. The ratifications of the Japanese treaty were exchanged by the respective Governments on the 21st of March, 1895, twenty-five years afterwards, and there is not a word of it in this Japanese treaty. The favored-nation clause does not cover it, because this clause is restricted to the objects that are specified in the treaty and no one of these objects relates to educational privileges; and even if there had been a provision in the Japanese treaty similar to the one in the Chinese treaty, it would not apply to this case, because the treaty with China confers educational privileges in educational institutions under the control of the Government of the United States, and neither the educational institutions of California nor of any other State of the Union are under the control of the United States.

The educational institutions of the States are not under the control of the Government of the United States, and therefore, by virtue of this provision in this treaty, the Chinese enjoy no privileges at all. Therefore, if this clause had been incorporated in the Japanese treaty, as I shall show a little farther on, it would not cover the proposition we are now discussing.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland yield further to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. RAYNER. I do.

Mr. FORAKER. I wish to call the Senator's attention to the fact that the United States Government has no educational institutions as such, and that immediately following the ratification of the treaty with China, and ever since that, under the clauses granting certain exceptions, Chinese students have been entitled, except as it has been modified by treaty since, to come to this country and seek education in the institutions that are situated within the States and are not at all under the control of the United States Government.

Mr. RAYNER. There is no doubt about that proposition. Any of the States may admit any Chinese or Japanese student or any other sort if they choose who are in the United States. That in entirely within the province of the State, but the question here is a question of alleged discrimination in the public school system of California. Massachusetts or any other State of the Union has a perfect right to admit any Chinese or Japanese who are here. That does not affect the question, I respectfully submit, that I am discussing. I absolutely deny that the admission of these students into the educational institutions of the State is in compliance with and in furtherance of the treaty.

I might rest this entire subject right here, because this is an end of the claim of Japan if the treaty does not, either by expression or intendment, contain the controverted matter, but I have arisen for a larger purpose and a deeper inquiry; and inasmuch as what has taken place here may occur over and over again under the treaty-making power of the United States, I shall now proceed to the more important proposition, and that is that this Government has no power under the Constitution of the United States to make any treaty with any foreign government covering the subject in question, or overriding the legislation of any State of the Union in connection therewith.

THE ISSUES INVOLVED IN THE CONTROVERSY.

Now, let me quote—because I must say that to me it has been the most interesting subject in constitutional law, at least that I have ever examined or been interested in—the sixth article of the Constitution. It is not an academic discussion; it is likely to occur over and over again with all our oriental possessions, because if the President persists in his purpose, the day will come when he will demand that he has the right, either under the treaty-making power or under the amendments to the Constitution, to exercise this privilege in connection with the admission of foreign students into the public educational institutions of the States.

Now, one may read this article of the Constitution without understanding it. Just read it. Let a layman read it. It leaves an impression upon the mind of every man who has not studied the Constitution that the treaty overrides the reserved rights of the States whenever it comes in contact with them. No matter how brilliant the lawyer may be, no matter what his talents or resources may consist of, I do not care for the opinion of anyone who has not thoroughly mastered and analyzed the authorities upon this subject and made the proper discriminations between them:

This Constitution and the laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof, and all treaties made or which shall be made under the authority of the United States—

Now, that is the distinction that the extreme school plants itself on between these two propositions. When it speaks of laws, it says laws which shall be made in pursuance of the Constitution. When the Constitution speaks of treaties, it says that all treaties which shall be made under the authority not of the Constitution, but of the United States. I shall, I think, demonstrate within a few moments that there is no possible distinction in the authorities between these two clauses.

This sixth article, which lies at the bottom of this controversy, reads partly as follows:

ARTICLE VI. This Constitution and the laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof, and all treaties made or which shall be made under the authority of the United States, shall be the supreme law of the land, and the judges in every State shall be bound thereby, anything in the constitution or laws of any State to the contrary notwithstanding.

I plant myself firmly and unalterably upon the proposition that we can make no treaty that violates any of the provisions of the Constitution of the United States, that the treaty-making power in the sixth article must be construed in pari materia with all the other provisions contained in the Constitution, and if the treaty comes in conflict with any of the limitations of the instrument the treaty must yield and the Constitution prevail.

As a corollary of this proposition I plant myself upon the doctrine that any treaty that violates Article X of the Constitution and infringes upon the reserved rights of the States which have not been delegated to the General Government, and embraces subjects that belong to the States, and that are not necessary to carry out the purposes of the Government as defined in the Constitution, is ultra vires and not within the capacity of the Government to make.

It is my opinion that this subject involves one of the most interesting problems that has ever been before this body, and that the suggestion in the message of the President, with great respect to him, is not of the slightest value here, because in order to arrive at a proper conclusion upon this important inquiry it is necessary to assiduously examine the great mass of precedents, and authorities, and decisions that have been rendered upon the subject, and I am quite sure that I am entirely within bounds when I say that the President has not undertaken this task.

THE SEVERAL SCHOOLS OF CONSTRUCTION.

There are two separate schools of construction upon the subject at issue. These schools are professional schools and schools of commentators and text writers upon the Constitution, and it is not entirely accurate to designate them as the respective advocates of national and States' rights systems.

One of these schools claims that the treaty-making power is an inherent element of sovereignty, and though it is a conferred power in the Constitution it would exist as an essential attribute of this Government without delegation, and that when it is once delegated it need not derive its authority from the Constitution, and that whenever it comes in conflict with the provisions of a State law or a State constitution, by the terms of Article VI of the Constitution the treaty prevails. Some of the adherents of this school have proceeded to the most unfortunate limits in their construction of the treaty-making power, and have held that this power is superior to the Constitution and is not in any manner governed by its inhibitions or limitations.

The second school stands upon the doctrine that the treaty-making power exists for the purpose of carrying out the purposes and objects of this Government as prescribed and defined by the Constitution, and that no treaty is valid that violates the Constitution or that under its provisions surrenders the rights reserved and belonging to the States.

I am a disciple of the second school, not alone as a party man, but as a student of Constitutional history, and I proceed now to give the reasons for the faith that is in me.

The most instructive step that I can take in this discussion is to give, in the language of their advocates, the two standards that separate these two political creeds, so that the distinguishing features between them can be clearly and fully comprehended and understood.

Mr. Charles Henry Butler, the present reporter of the Supreme Court, and a man of great learning and industry, in a valuable text-book that he has written upon the treaty-making power of the United States, which I think is mainly wrong in the conclusions that it reaches, but which is full of the most interesting information upon the subject, thus states his own views and the views of those who belong to the first school of treaty-making power interpretation that I have referred to:

First. That the treaty-making power of the United States, as vested in the central Government, is derived not only from the powers expressly conferred by the Constitution, but that it is also possessed by that Government as an attribute of sovereignty, and that it extends to every subject which can be the basis of negotiation and contract between any of the sovereign powers of the world, or in regard to which the several States of the Union themselves could have negotiated and contracted if the Constitution had not expressly prohibited the States from exercising the treaty-making power in any manner whatever and vested that power exclusively in and expressly delegated it to the Federal Government.

Second. That the power to legislate in regard to all matters affected by treaty stipulations and relations is coextensive with the treaty-making power, and that acts of Congress enforcing such stipulations which, in the absence of treaty stipulations, would be unconstitutional as infringing upon the powers reserved to the States, are constitutional, and can be enforced, even though they may conflict with State laws or provisions of State constitutions.

Third. That all provisions in State statutes or constitutions which in any way conflict with any treaty stipulations, whether they have been made prior or subsequent thereto, must give way to the provisions of the treaty, or act of Congress based on and enforcing the same, even if such provisions relate to matters wholly within State jurisdiction.

The tenets of the school in which I have been trained are succinctly stated in a masterly way by that eminent constitutional lawyer, the Hon. John Randolph Tucker, in a report that he rendered to the Forty-eighth Congress, and which reads, in part, as follows:

The language of the Constitution of the United States which gives the character of "supreme law" to a treaty, confines it to "treaties made under the authority of the United States." That authority is limited and defined by the Constitution itself. The United States have no unlimited, but only delegated authority. The power to make treaties is bounded by the same limits, which are prescribed for the authority delegated to the United States by the Constitution. To suppose that a power to make treaties with foreign nations is unlimited by the restraints imposed on the power delegated to the United States would be to assume that by such treaty the Constitution itself might be abrogated and the liberty of the people secured thereby destroyed. The power to contract must be commensurate with and not transcend the powers by virtue of which the United States and their Government exist and act. It can not contract with a foreign nation to do what is unauthorized or forbidden by the Constitution to be done. The power to contract is limited by the power to do. (3 Story, Com. on Const., sec. 1501.)

It is on this principle that a treaty can not take away essential liberties secured by the Constitution to the people. The treaty power must be subordinate to these. A treaty can not alien a State or dismember the Union, because the Constitution forbids both.

In all such cases the legitimate effect of a treaty is to bind the United States to do what they are competent to do and no more. The United States by treaty can only agree with another nation to perform what they have authority to perform under the constitutional charter creating them. The treaty makes the nexus which binds the faith of the Union to do what their Constitution gives authority to do. A treaty made under that authority may do this; all it attempts to do beyond it is ultra vires—is null, and can not bind them.

In this admirable report and careful review of the treaty-making power Mr. Tucker remarks that—

If the treaty-making power extends to the limits that are claimed for it by the advocates of an inherent right, then a treaty may borrow money, regulate commerce, coin money, establish post-offices, and provide for raising armies and navies of the United States, and may thus annul or paralyze all the powers of Congress, and admit a foreign nation to exact, with the alternative of war, a compliance with these sweeping stipulations in the internal government of the people of the United States.

I am aware of the fact that some of the conclusions reached by this eminent statesman in this report have been assailed at times, but I am also aware of the fact that the main proposition upon which he stands, and from which I have quoted in the first instance, has never been impeached nor impugned by any Federal or State authority that I know of.

A TREATY CAN NOT VIOLATE THE CONSTITUTION.

I want to proceed one step further in the particular point that I am now discussing, and I desire to address these remarks to the extreme advocates of the doctrine of an "unlimited treaty-making power."

Let me take subsection 8 of section 9 of Article I of the Constitution of the United States, which provides "that no title of nobility shall be granted by the United States." Is there anyone here that believes we would have the right in a treaty to grant a title of nobility to the subject of a foreign government?

Subsection 4 of section 1 of Article II of the Constitution provides "that no person except a natural-born citizen * * * shall be eligible to the office of President." Does anyone here believe that we could make a treaty with a foreign power abrogating this section in its interests?

Article I of the amendments provides: "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof." Is there anyone of the opinion that we could make a treaty with a foreign nation admitting their subjects to our shores, and then, in the same treaty, provide that they should not have the privilege of exercising their religious belief?

Mr. President, I am talking to the extreme advocates of this doctrine. I am coming to the middle class presently. I am taking now the doctrine of the men who claim that the treaty-making power is an inherent power, and is not circumscribed either by the delegated powers or by the limitations or inhibitions of the Constitution. I will come to the men of more moderate views of the first school in a few moments. I am planting this argument now upon the doctrine that the treaty-making power is an inherent power that is not governed or controlled at all by the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. RAYNER. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Might not the power be inherent in sovereignty and at the same time be limited by the Constitution?

Mr. RAYNER. Never. It can not lie in grant and lie in sovereignty. It must either lie in sovereignty or lie in grant. There is no such thing as a granted power under the Constitution carrying within its terms an inherent and sovereign power. I utterly deny the suggestion of the Senator from Indiana. Whatever inherent powers exist have been merged forever in the granted powers of the Constitution. It must be either one or the other.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That was not my question, although I am happy to hear the Senator upon that.

Mr. RAYNER. Then I misunderstood the Senator.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The question was, Might not the power be inherent in sovereignty and at the same time be limited by the prohibitions of the Constitution?

Mr. RAYNER. There is not an inherent power in the Government of the United States, because the Government of the United States is not a government of inherent powers. I deny that the Government of the United States has any inherent powers save the power to exist and to perpetuate itself, and while it might be inherent and still limited, the fact is it is not inherent. That answers the question.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. RAYNER. I do.

Mr. CARMACK. I wish to suggest to the Senator from Maryland that each of the States prior to the formation of the Constitution of the United States possessed this treaty-making power, and that the General Government possesses it now only by reason of its delegation by the States.

Mr. CULBERSON. The States possessed it inherently.

Mr. CARMACK. They possessed it inherently; and the General Government gets it by delegation from the States.

Mr. RAYNER. I was coming to that proposition in a moment. I think the Senator from Tennessee states that proposition a little too broadly—that is, that the States granted to the United States all the powers they possessed.

Mr. CARMACK. I did not say that.

Mr. RAYNER. I beg pardon. I understood the Senator to say that the States had granted to the United States all the treaty-making power.

Mr. CARMACK. No; I did not mean that; but all the powers the General Government possesses in that respect are derived from the grant by the States——

Mr. RAYNER. Undoubtedly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. We can not hear a word over here of what is being said on the other side of the Chamber.

Mr. CARMACK. That all the treaty-making power was in the States prior to the formation of the Constitution. Each State possessed the treaty-making power. When the Constitution was formed the States delegated to the General Government the treaty-making power, and the treaty-making power possessed by the General Government is measured by the extent of that delegation.

Mr. FULTON. May I ask the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK] a question?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. RAYNER. I wish the Senator would ask me the question.

Mr. FULTON. Then I will ask the Senator if that delegation of power to the General Government, when exercisable, is nevertheless not restricted by the prohibition on the General Government contained in the Federal Constitution?

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. President, I am coming to the argument of that question in a moment.

I want, first, to say something in reference to the suggestion of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK]. Of course, the Senator from Tennessee recollects that in the Articles of Confederation it was provided that no treaty should be made unless nine of the States consented; but the suggestion made by the Senator is absolutely correct as to the proposition upon which I stand, that all powers of the Constitution—the treaty-making power and every other power—are derived from the powers given by the States. Of course, I can not admit that they have given all their treaty-making power, because they have only given the treaty-making power in connection with the delegated power, although the State itself has no right to make a treaty under the Constitution. While I can not admit that the States gave all the treaty-making power, I will undoubtedly admit that the States gave every treaty-making power that was necessary for the purpose of carrying out the delegated powers of the Constitution, and there are no other powers necessary.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. RAYNER. In a moment. I have examined, I think, every treaty in existence between this Government and every other government, and I can—though I do not propose to do it now, because it would take too much time—but I can now show, and I am willing to trace every subject-matter in those treaties ever made with any foreign government to some delegated power contained in the Constitution of the United States. I challenge the Senator from Indiana to point me to a single case that will show this Government has ever made a treaty passed upon by the courts, and held to be valid by the courts, that was not for the purpose of carrying out the delegated powers of the Constitution conferred upon the United States.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President——

Mr. RAYNER. Let me give one more quotation, and then I will yield. Section 1 of Article XIII of the amendments to the Constitution provides that—

> Neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, shall exist within the United States or any place subject to their jurisdiction.

Is this an inherent power? Is there any power under the treaty-making power, except the power to carry out the delegated powers of the United States? According to Mr. Butler and the various lecturers upon the revised edition of the United States Constitution, who agree with him, it is claimed that the power is not bound by the limitations of the Consitution. I ask, is there anyone here who believes that we could have put a provision into the treaty of Paris providing for a system of slavery in the Philippine Islands? If it is an inherent power, if it does not depend upon the delegated powers, if it is a sovereign power beyond and above the Constitution, then we can violate every article in the Constitution, and there would be no inhibition upon us at all from violating this particular provision and instituting or continuing, as I believe we have done anyway in a portion of the Philippine Islands—the Senator from Indiana will know more about that question than I do—the system of slavery that exists in a certain portion of those islands.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I want to ask the Senator a question before he leaves that subject.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. RAYNER. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It was rather an interesting statement the Senator made, that he did not concede that the States had delegated away all of their treaty-making power. Under section 10 of Article I of the Constitution, what part of the treaty-making power does the Senator think any State has?

Mr. RAYNER. No State has any treaty-making power, except as provided in the Constitution. The States have delegated to the Federal authorities all the treaty-making power that it is necessary for the Government to have in order to carry out the delegated powers of the Constitution.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I understood the Senator to say a moment ago, in answer to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK], that he did not concede that the States had parted with all of their treaty-making powers. I merely call his attention to section 10 of Article I of the Constitution.

Mr. RAYNER. I said the Constitution prohibits the States from making a treaty.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. RAYNER. The Federal Government can make every treaty, and the States have given the Government the right to make every treaty that is necessary to carry out its delegated powers, and you must take the treaty-making power in pari materia with the delegated powers that are given to the Government. I can not make it any plainer than that. I will give you what Mr. Adams says on that presently, and a number of your friends and some of my friends—Mr. Jefferson and others—and, I think, you will agree with me. I have stated the proposition almost in their identical language. I say that the States have given to the Federal Government the right to make treaties, but they have only given it the right to make such treaties as carry out the delegated powers of the Constitution, and they have never given it the right to make any treaty that interferes with the reserved rights of sovereign States acting within their own borders.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Then I understand the Senator does not contend that the States have reserved to themselves at all any portion of the treaty-making power. That is made clear.

Mr. RAYNER. Look at the Constitution; that settles the rights of the States. The Government can make any treaty that carries out the purpose of the Government. My argument is that you must take the treaty-making powers together with the delegated powers, and you can not construe one independently of the other.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. RAYNER. I do.

Mr. FORAKER. I only want to remark, if I may be permitted to do so, that the result of the Senator's contention, as I understand, is that that part of the old treaty-making power which the States originally possessed has become dormant or has been, by the provisions of the Constitution, placed in abeyance, does not belong to anybody, and can not be exercised by any governmental authority anywhere.

Mr. RAYNER. The Senator from Ohio evidently has misunderstood me. I will state the proposition over again.

Mr. FORAKER. I hope the Senator will not——

Mr. RAYNER. I want to answer the Senator's observation. There is no dormant power anywhere, because the Government of the United States contains the full treaty-making power for the purpose of carrying out all of its delegated powers, and there is no dormant power any place under the Constitution. Every power under treaties necessary to perfect the delegated powers has been parted with by the States, and the States have parted with their treaty-making power, but I repeat again that the treaty-making power must be construed in pari materia with the delegated powers.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator permit me a moment?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. RAYNER. Yes.

Mr. BACON. In connection with his suggestion as to whether or not the powers are dormant, I wish to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that the Constitution does contemplate that there may be questions in which a State may be interested and which may require a compact or a treaty which are not Federal questions; but its exercise of any power in connection with that is restricted and made dependent upon the consent of Congress. I will read the section to which I allude as illustrative of the question propounded by the Senator from Ohio in connection with the contention of the Senator from Maryland. Article 1, section 10, paragraph 3, of the Constitution, to be found on page 201 of the present edition of the Constitution and Manual, reads as follows:

> No State shall, without the consent of Congress, lay any duty of tonnage, keep troops, or ships of war in time of peace, enter into any agreement or compact with another State, or with a foreign power, or engage in war, unless actually invaded, or in such imminent danger as will not admit of delay.

If the Senator will pardon me just a moment, the point in connection, I think, with the subject under discussion is illustrative of the fact that it was in the contemplation of the Constitution that there were subjects-matter possible of compacts or treaties in which the States might be direcly interested and which did not relate to the General Government in its Federal capacity, but which subjects were in their treatment by the States or in dealing with by the States so restricted that there could be no action with reference thereto unless Congress should consent; in other words, that there were questions which could be and properly would be the subjects-matter of treaties interesting the States directly, but which were subsidiary entirely to the general power of the Government and required to be subject to its supervision.

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. President, I was coming to that in a moment. While I am quite willing to submit to any interruptions, I think there will be plenty of questions to ask me when I get into the cases.

Mr. CULBERSON. Will the Senator allow me just to read another section of the Constitution which will clear up this particular matter?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. RAYNER. I was going to read all of those sections, I will say to the Senator. I have the clause in mind to which he refers.

Mr. CULBERSON. What clause is it?

Mr. RAYNER. There are three clauses I was going to read ffom the Constitution. The first clause is in relation to the right of the President and the Senate to make a treaty; the second clause the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] has read, and the third clause is the clause prohibiting a State from making a treaty.

Mr. CULBERSON. That is the one I desired to read.

Mr. RAYNER. Do not misunderstand my purpose. I am willing that the Senator should interrupt me.

Mr. CULBERSON. It is very pertinent, Mr. President, I think, in this connection, and it would be well to read it. It is section 10, Article I, of the Constitution, which declares:

> No State shall enter into any treaty, alliance, or confederation.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is the section to which I specifically called the Senator's attention a moment ago when the Senator ventured the remark that the States had not parted with all their treaty-making power.

Mr. RAYNER. Do not let the Senator from Indiana misunderstand that proposition. Do not let us get him wrong——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No.

Mr. RAYNER. Because I understand the Senator delivered a lecture on that subject, and while I am against the lecture, I do not want the Senator from Indiana to misconstrue what I have said on this subject. I say, again and again, the States have granted to the Federal Government all their treaty-making powers that are necessary to carry out the purpose of the Government as constituted by the Constitution. That is the exact language of Mr. Jefferson, and I can not improve on it. It has never been improved on, except by Mr. Butler, who says Jefferson has been reversed. Jefferson has never been reversed by anybody except Mr. Butler, and I will take Jefferson against my friend and the distinguished reporter of the Supreme Court on that subject.

This brings me right down to the precise point involved in this discussion, and that is to the tenth article of the amendments, which reads as follows:

> ARTICLE 10. The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States, respectively, or to the people.

Have we a right to violate the Constitution of the United States and incorporate in a treaty powers not delegated to the United States, powers that are not necessary and proper for carrying into execution the powers that are delegated, and barter away the privileges and rights reserved to the States respectively by virtue of the instrument and of the tenth amendment thereto that I have just referred to? The power of a State to regulate its public school system is clearly among its reserved powers. Have we, therefore, a right to provide in a treaty that the citizens of foreign lands shall possess privileges in the public schools of the States that are prohibited either by the Constitution or by the laws of the State in which they are claimed? If we can, in defiance of the laws and constitution of a State incorporate any such provision in a treaty so as to bind the State, then we can undoubtedly deprive the State of every reserved right that it possesses, and rescind and annul its laws and its constitution whenever they come in conflict with the treaty-making power. I trample upon this appalling doctrine. If ever such a deformity as this should creep into our judicial decisions it would disfigure the Constitution to such an extent that its features would no longer be capable of recognition. It would annul the charter; it would frustrate the intention of the men who framed it; it would undermine the entire framework of the instrument, and it would convert us from a constitutional government into a dictatorship, with the States in abject servitude to Federal power, and with the Executive in practical control of the destinies of the Republic.

THE LEADING AUTHORITIES UPON THE SUBJECT.

I want now to go over the cases. I know it is monotonous in the Senate to read cases, and I will not read them, because I think I can recollect them. There are two lines of cases. The first line is made up of the three cases of Ware v. Hylton (3 Dallas), the case of Chirac v. Chirac, from my own State (2 Wheaton, 259), and a case in Virginia, Fairfax v. Hunter (7 Cranch, 603).

Ware v. Hylton is the great case that is quoted against the proposition that I am arguing here now. That case was argued by Marshall. It was the only case that Marshall ever argued in the Supreme Court of the United States. It was decided by Justices Chase, Patterson, Cushing, Wilson, and Iredell, and the case covers 100 pages. Let me see if I can give it in a few words.

Virginia had confiscated the debts of all British creditors. After the Revolution Congress made a treaty with Great Britain providing that British subjects should have the right to prosecute their claims in the courts of the United States without impediments. There was a conflict between the act of Virginia confiscating the debts of British subjects and the treaty of the United States giving British subjects without impediment the right to sue. The United States courts held that the treaty prevailed and that the laws of the State of Virginia were in conflict with it and were void. I give you that case in a very short compass. I want to take the cases of Fairfax v. Hunter and Chirac v. Chirac.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. RAYNER. Certainly.

Mr. MALLORY. In the case of Hylton v. Ware the Supreme Court expressly declined to give an opinion as to whether a treaty could override the Constitution.

Mr. RAYNER. I am coming to that in a minute. I have not finished with Ware v. Hylton. I have had Ware against Hylton in my mind for pretty nearly forty years now, and I am going to finish with it in forty seconds, if I can. It occupies a hundred pages in the reports; so I do not intend to read it.

I am coming now to the other cases in the first line. Maryland passed a law, and so did Virginia, that aliens could not hold property. The Government made a treaty with France that aliens could hold property in the United States. The laws of Virginia and Maryland came into conflict with the treaty, and the Supreme Court of the United States held that the treaty prevailed. Those are the two cases that are cited to sustain the proposition that Mr. Butler is contending for and against the proposition that I am advocating. I want to say one word about those cases. The treaty referred to in Chirac v. Chirac and in Ware v. Hylton was made under the Articles of Confederation. It was not made under the Constitution at all. If you will look at the sixth article of the Constitution, you will see that it ratifies all treaties that have been made. This was one of the treaties that it ratified, because it was a treaty under the Articles of Confederation, and, furthermore, Justice Cushing, in uniting in the opinion of the court, says that Virginia was a party to the treaty, and being a party to the treaty she could not abrogate her own act, and she was estopped by having participated in it and having been a party to it. We all recollect that under the Articles of Confederation it was necessary that nine States should assent to a treaty before it became effective.

Let me get to the second line of cases, which the Senators from the Pacific coast will recollect without my going into details. Both California and Oregon passed laws in reference to this question. California passed a law that no Chinese laborers should be employed by any corporation, and Oregon passed a law that Chinese laborers should not be employed upon the public works of that State. The question came up under the Chinese treaty—and the cases are reported in 5 and 6 Sawyer; they are circuit court cases—the question came up under the Chinese treaty, Does the treaty prevail or do the law of California and the law of Oregon prevail? Is the law of California a valid law which provides that no Chinese laborer shall be employed by any corporation in the State of California? Is the Oregon law a valid law which provides that no Chinese laborer shall be employed upon any public works in Oregon? The Supreme Court said no. Why? Because, they held, the treaty having provided that Chinese at that time should have the right to live here, that the right to live here carried with it the right to labor here; that a man can not live without earning a living; that if we had the right by treaty to give them the privilege of coming here, the treaty by intendment and construction carried with it their right to earn a living; but the court never touched upon the reserved rights of the States.

Now, I want to take up the last case I am going to quote on the other side of this subject, because I want to argue it fairly. I come now to the decision in 92 United States, that most unfortunate decision of the Supreme Court of the United States. It does not trench at all upon the argument I am now making. California provided that no woman of ill repute should come into the ports of California. That is the Freeman case (92 U. S). What did the Supreme Court decide there? As the Senator from Wisconsin knows, they did what they had never done before. They went back of that statute. They never construed the statute according to the language of the statute, but they held that California intended, by that provision of her law, to exclude Chinese women, although there was not a word said about Chinese women or women of any other race. It was one of those peculiar cases in which the Supreme Court of the United States has gone into the motives of a State legislature in order to determine the validity of her statutes. But, Mr. President, when they come to decide that case they never touched upon the reserved rights of the State. If you will examine the Freeman case you will see that the Supreme Court held in that case that it was a regulation of commerce, and that California had passed a statute violating that article of the Constitution which gives the Congress of the United States the right to regulate commerce with foreign nations.

Now I want to give my cases. I could give numbers of other cases, but before I give my cases, I wish to read one or two extracts from this author whom I have quoted here upon several occasions, to show how he contradicts himself upon this point, and how, when he is arguing against himself, he is finally forced to the conclusion that he has made a mistake, and that you can not make a treaty which interferes with the reserved rights of the State; and the only question to his mind is whether it is a reserved right of the State. If it is once settled that it is, when you once admit it is a reserved right of the State, then it can not come within the treaty-making power, because you can no more violate article 10 of the Constitution than you can violate any other article of the Constitution in connection with its inhibitions and limitations.

Let me read a very peculiar passage from this author against himself. I am quoting now from a hostile authority to substantiate the propositions for which I am contending, because I have the most eminent authorities in the country to sustain the propositions upon which I stand.

I read from page 31 of Butler on the Treaty-Making Power, a most interesting book. If it were not all wrong on this point it would be the most valuable book upon the subject that we have in the United States. Upon page 31, section 344, of this work we find the statement which I shall read, made by my friend, Mr. Butler, whom I know personally very well, and of whom I think very highly, and I do not intend that any criticism of mine upon his work shall in the slightest degree reflect upon his great industry and talent as a lawyer and as an author. He represents the same school that my friend the Senator from Indiana represents—the school that believes that we are a government of inherent sovereignty.

> SEC. 344. State statutes upheld; Chinese laundry cases.—It must not be presumed, however, that the Federal courts have always interfered to prevent State action in regard to matters which are wholly under their control, and that they have used the treaty-making power as an excuse for interfering in their internal affairs. In 1885 the same learned justice of the Supreme Court who had declared the San Francisco queue ordinance invalid sustained a municipal ordinance of San Francisco imposing certain regulations and restrictions upon laundries, and which was as undoubtedly aimed directly at the Chinese as the queue ordinance had been. The Supreme Court held, however, that the regulation of laundries was a matter which came within the right of the municipality, and that treaty stipulations as to rights to live and labor should not be used to prevent the proper enforcement of municipal regulations.

Upon page 56 we find the following statement:

> The Supreme Court has, in regard to treaties, as it has in regard to Federal statutes, ever kept in view the exclusive right of States to regulate their internal affairs.

Upon page 350, section 455, we find this remarkable statement from the same author, which seems to be in direct conflict with almost every other statement that he has made in this valuable work upon this subject:

> SEC. 455. Power must be limited, as no unlimited powers exist.—

He has been arguing in 454 sections that unlimited powers exist, and when he comes to the four hundred and fifty-fifth section he says the powers must be limited, as no unlimited powers exist; and in order to apologize for the remarks he has made in the antecedent sections he goes on to say:

> After perusing the foregoing chapters the reader may think he is justified in presuming that the author does not consider that there are any limitations whatever on the treaty-making power of the United States, either as to the extent to or subject-matter over which it may be exercised.

I should think we were justified in presuming so when he has argued that question in the sections which have preceded this section.

Then says the author:

> Such, however, is not the case; the fact that the United States is a constitutional government precludes the idea of any absolutely unlimited power existing.

He has never said that before. He continues:

> The Supreme Court has declared that it must be admitted as to every power of society over its members that it is not absolute and unlimited; and this rule applies to the exercise of the treaty-making power, as it does to every other power vested in the Central Government. The question is not whether the power is limited or unlimited, but at what point do the limitations begin.

If the author had said that in the first section, it would have saved him the trouble of writing the greater part of his book.

Now, Mr. President, let me come to the citation of my cases, and I will finish them very briefly, although it is a subject very difficult to cover in the space I am devoting to it. I have the cases where this identical question has arisen—where the Supreme Court itself, and in approval of State authorities, has held not only that a reserved right of the State does not come within the treaty-making power, but has held that this right of a State to admit a particular class of people into its educational institutions is a reserved right of the State, and the Government has no control over it whatever, either in the treaty-making power or in statutes.

Let me read an extract from the case of Geoffroy v. Riggs (133 U. S., 267), as follows:

> The treaty power, as expressed in the Constitution, is in terms unlimited except by those restraints which are found in that instrument against the action of the Government or of its departments, and those arising from the nature of the Government itself and of that of the States.

In 5 California, in the case of The People v. Gerke, the court, in its opinion, said:

The language which grants the power to make treaties contains no words of limitation; it does not follow that the power is unlimited. It must be subject to the general rule, that an instrument is to be construed so as to reconcile and give meaning and effect to all its parts. If it were otherwise, the most important limitation upon the powers of the Federal Government would be ineffectual, and the reserved rights of the States would be subverted. This principle of construction, as applied, not only in reference to the Constitution of the United States, but particularly in the relation of all the rest of it to the treaty-making grant, was recognized both by Mr. Jefferson and John Adams, the two leaders of opposite schools of construction.

I now refer to the case of The People v. Gallagher, in 93 New York Reports, page 438, and to the case of Roberts v. The City of Boston, 5 Cushing, 198, both of which cases have been cited with approval by the Supreme Court of the United States, and in which the question whether a separation of the races in the public schools was a violation of the "privileges and immunities" guaranteed by the Constitution came before the courts. I quote from the first case:

The school authorities have power, when, in their opinion, the interests of education will be promoted thereby, to establish schools for the exclusive use of colored children; and when such schools are established and provided with equal facilities for education, they may exclude colored children from the schools provided for the whites.

The establishment of such separate schools for the exclusive use of the different races is not an abridgement of the "privileges or immunities" preserved by the fourteenth amendment of the Federal Constitution, nor is such a separation a denial of the equal protection of the laws given to every citizen by said amendment.

It seems that the "privileges and immunities" which are protected by said amendment are those only which belong to the citizen as a citizen of the United States—

I beg my friends to draw the distinction here between a citizen of the United States and a citizen of a State, because a man may be a citizen of the United States without being a citizen of any State—

those which are granted by a State to its citizens and which depend solely upon State laws for their origin and support are not within the constitutional inhibition and may lawfully be denied to any class or race by the State at its will and discretion.

It seems also that as the privilege of receiving an education at the expense of the State is created and conferred only by State laws, it may be granted or refused to any individual or class at the pleasure of the State.

Mr. FULTON. May I ask the Senator from Maryland a question?

Mr. RAYNER. Certainly.

Mr. FULTON. I wish to say first that I am in accord with the Senator's views—that the Federal Government can not by treaty invade the right of a State to regulate its own school system. But a question has occurred to my mind, and I wish to ask the Senator from Maryland if it has occurred to his; and if so, whether he has reached a conclusion on it. It is this: Can the Congress and the President, in the exercise of the treaty-making power, invade the rights of a State—what we will term the "reserved" rights of a State—to any greater extent than it can by direct legislation? We will concede, I think, for instance, that Congress may not by direct legislation change the laws of a State providing who may hold property within the State—who may own real estate. That is a matter concerning which a State ordinarily would have the right to legislate, and concerning which the Congress could not interfere by direct legislation. Yet the Supreme Court has held that by a treaty a law of a State in that regard may be annulled.

Now, then, the question which has arisen in my mind is to what extent may the treaty-making power invade the rights of a State beyond what Congress may invade them by legislation, or can it?

Mr. RAYNER. And that, Mr. President, is not only a very pertinent question, but it is a question that would present a great deal of difficulty in its solution if certain cases in the Supreme Court, which I am going to quote, did not fully cover it. That is the point I am coming to, Can the United States by treaty go beyond the delegated powers of the Constitution? Admitting it can not violate the Constitution, is the treaty-making function circumscribed by the Constitution? The first case that arose was a California case, which was quoted by the Supreme Court with approval. It was The People, ex rel. the Attorney-General, v. Nagle. I read from 1 California, 232.

The State of California, as the Senator from California will remember, had imposed a license upon foreigners engaged in working gold mines in that State, and the question arose whether California, under the treaty, had the right to pass such a law. The court said:

OPINION OF COURT.

But even if the provisions of the statute did clash with the stipulations of that, or of any other treaty, the conclusion is not deducible that the treaty must therefore stand and the State law give way. The question in such case would not be solely what is provided for by the treaty, but whether the State retained the power to enact the contested law or had given up that power to the General Government. If the State retains the power, then the President and Senate can not take it away by a treaty. A treaty is supreme only when it is made in pursuance of that authority which has been conferred upon the treaty-making department and in relation to those subjects the jurisdiction over which has been exclusively intrusted to Congress. When it transcends these limits, like an act of Congress which transcends the constitutional authority of that body, it can not supersede a State law which enforces or exercises any power of the State not granted away by the Constitution. To hold any other doctrine than this would, if carried out into its ultimate and possible consequences, sanction the supremacy of a treaty which should entirely exempt foreigners from taxation by the respective States or which should even undertake to cede away a part or the whole of the acknowledged territory of one of the States to a foreign nation.

In addition to this case, I want to refer to the important cases in 119 Federal Reporter, page 381, and in 5 Howard, page 613, to the opinion of Justice Daniel, which is concurrent upon the proposition from which I quote, and which reads as follows:

This provision of the Constitution, it is to be feared, is sometimes applied or expounded without those qualifications which the character of the parties to that instrument, and its adaptation to the purposes for which it was created, necessarily imply. Every power delegated to the Federal Government must be expounded in coincidence with a perfect right in the States to all that they have not delegated; in coincidence, too, with the possession of every power and right necessary for their existence and preservation; for it is impossible to believe that these ever were, in intention or in fact, ceded to the General Government. Laws of the United States, in order to be binding, must be within the legitimate powers vested by the Constitution. Treaties, to be valid, must be made within the scope of the same powers, for there can be no "authority of the United States," save what is derived mediately or immediately, and regularly and legitimately, from the Constitution. A treaty, no more than an ordinary statute, can arbitrarily cede away any one right of a State or of any citizen of a State.

I wish to refer now to a case in 118 Federal Reporter. This was a case where a Chinese girl filed a petition for a mandamus against the public school trustees of San Francisco, I think, asking admission into the white school. It was denied. The case went to the United States court, and the court said that she had no right to be admitted into the white public schools of California; that there were schools set apart for her, and she could go into those schools. Is it not a strange thing that California can pass a law providing that the Chinese children who live there shall be separated in the schools, and can not pass a law that the Chinese children who do not live there, those who shall come there hereafter shall be not separated, but that they must be put in the white schools?

Mr. FLINT. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. RAYNER. Certainly.

Mr. FLINT. The language of the statute is "Mongolian," not "Chinese."

Mr. RAYNER. Yes, "Mongolian."

Mr. FLINT. It includes Japanese.

Mr. RAYNER. The Japanese hold that they are not Mongolians; but outside of that, I am on a proposition of law now. The Senate will sustain me in the proposition, without quoting the cases that the court has absolutely decided that children of Chinese parents have no right to go into the same schools with white children in California; and that has been approved of by the Supreme Court of the United States. How is it possible to hold that the Chinese children who live there can be separated and segregated, but that children living in China or Japan who may come here can not be separated and segregated, but must go into the white schools?

Let me get back again now to what Jefferson said—it is just three lines. He said it long ago, but not too long ago to be forgotten, and this is the proposition on which Mr. Butler says Mr. Jefferson has been reversed:

By the general power to make treaties, the Constitution must have intended to comprehend only those objects which are usually regulated by treaty and can not be otherwise regulated. It must have meant to except out of these the rights reserved to the States, for surely the President and Senate can not do by treaty what the whole Government is interdicted from doing in any way.

That is a concise but a stately statement of the proposition upon which I have planted myself to-day.

The last case I shall cite is the case known as the "Dispensary case," decided by Judge Simonton in the South Carolina circuit (54 Fed. Rep., 969). It is so pertinent to the subject-matter of this discussion that I shall quote an extract from the opinion of Judge Simonton thereon:

It is urged on behalf of these complainants that they are Italian subjects, and are protected by the treaty stipulations between Italy and the United States. The language of the treaty on this point is as follows:

"ART. 2. The citizens of each of the high contracting parties shall have liberty to travel in the States and Territories of the other; to carry on trade, wholesale and retail; to hire and occupy houses and warehouses; to employ agents of their choice, and generally to do anything incident to or necessary for trade upon the same terms as the natives of the country, submitting themselves to the laws there established.

"ART. 3. The citizens of each of the high contracting parties shall receive in the States and Territories of the other the most constant protection and security for their persons and property, and shall enjoy in this respect the same rights and privileges as are or shall be granted to the natives, on their submitting themselves to the conditions imposed upon the natives."

Under these articles the complainants have the same rights as citizens of the United States. It would be absurd to say that they had greater rights. We have seen that the right to sell intoxicating liquors is not a right inherent in a citizen, and is not one of the privileges of American citizenship; that it is not within the protection of the fourteenth amendment; that it is within the police power. The police power is a right reserved by the States, and has not been delegated to the General Government. In its lawful exercise the States are absolutely sovereign. Such exercise can not be affected by any treaty stipulations.

In addition to the cases that I have cited, and in closing the entire reference, I desire to now advert to several diplomatic precedents of great value upon this subject. The first incident took place during the administration of Mr. Marcy over the Department of State, and I quote his opinion in the matter:

[Mr. Marcy, Secretary of State, to Mr. Mason, minister to France, September 11, 1854.]

It is not, as you will preceive by examining Mr. Drouyn de L'Huys's dispatch to the Count de Sartiges, the application of the "principle" to the particular case of M. Dillon which is to be disavowed, but the broad and general proposition that the Constitution is paramount in authority to any treaty or convention made by this Government. This principle, the President directs me to say, he can not disavow, nor would it be candid in him to withhold an expression of his belief that if a case should arise presenting a direct conflict between the Constitution of the United States and a treaty made by authority thereof, and be brought before our highest tribunal for adjudication, the court would act upon the principle that the Constitution was the paramount law.

The second incident also took place during the administration of Mr. Marcy:

[Mr. Marcy, Secretary of State, to Mr. de Figaniere, Portuguese chargé d'affaires, March 27, 1855.]

Although the language of Article II of the consular convention between the United States and France of February 23, 1853, exempting consuls from compulsory process, is general and unrestricted in terms, "yet it is here held that it does not take away the right which the defendant in a criminal prosecution has to resort to such process to procure the witnesses in his favor, for this right is secured to him by the express language of the United States Constitution." That instrument is paramount in authority to the laws of Congress or of any of the States, and to all treaty stipulations.

At a very late date the question arose with the Department of State, presided over by Secretary Hay, and I read the conclusion that the Secretary reached upon this subject, quoting from Mr. Moore's valuable treatise upon international law:

July 19, 1899, the Department of State declined a proposal of the British Government to negotiate a treaty to prevent discriminatory legislation by the several States of the United States, subjecting foreign fire-insurance companies to higher taxes than domestic companies. The reason given for the declination was that the negotiation of such a treaty would probably be futile on account of the indisposition of the people to permit any encroachment upon the exercise of powers of the local legislation.

ARE THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS OF CALIFORNIA THE PROPERTY OF CALIFORNIA OR OF THE UNITED STATES?

Is it necessary for me to say anything further? Are the public schools of California the property of California or the property of the United States? Does the public school system of California or of any other State belong to the State that creates and supports it, or to the Government that has neither created nor sustained it? Does this subject come within the treaty-making power? Does it come within the delegated powers of the Constitution? Have the United States the right to incorporate into a treaty a provision that the States shall, out of their own treasury, educate the citizens of foreign governments? Is there any power in any treaty to deprive any of the States of their reserved right to regulate and manage their local affairs according to their own usages and statutes? Are not foreign governments that deal with us presumed to know the nature and the character of our institutions, and is not this principle fully established by an unbroken line of precedents passed upon by the State Department from time immemorial? There can be but one response to all these inquiries, in my opinion, and as the result of the investigation that I have given to this subject I now assert, in the language of the resolutions, that the public school systems of the States belong to the States along with all of their reserved rights; that the Government has no power whatever to meddle with them or control them, and it was the duty of the President to have informed the Government of Japan as soon as the question arose, no matter what his feelings or sentiments may have been, that the subject was entirely without the domain of his jurisdiction.

THE CONCLUSIONS I HAVE REACHED.

I shall now, in conclusion, summarize the results that I have reached. I am not here for the purpose of denying to the Government the power to cover by treaty every right, privilege, and concession that comes within the treaty-making power in order to carry out the objects and purposes of this Government as defined in the Constitution. I do not for a moment set up the reserved rights of the States against the exercise of any constitutional power that may be incorporated in a treaty. I admit that the United States can enter into any treaty with any foreign power in reference to any subject embraced in the Constitution. I deny, however, that it possesses any inherent right to make a treaty, and I claim that the treaty-making power lies in grant and not in sovereignty and must be construed in pari materia with all the other clauses of the instrument that creates it, and that in interpreting the treaty-making power we must be governed by the principles of international law, its usages and its practices, as those principles, usages, and practices appertain to our form of constitutional government. I utterly deny that we have any right to make a treaty that violates the Constitution, or deprives the States of their reserved rights to conduct their local affairs over which the Federal Government has no jurisdiction, and which they alone have the right to administer according to their own constitutions and statutes.

THE RESERVED RIGHTS OF THE STATES.

As I said at the commencement, this is a grave and profound question that we have encountered. The local problem sinks into insignificance beside the great principle that is here involved. It affords a timely warning and admonition that at any time, through the treaty-making power, a deadly blow may be aimed at the entire fabric of our institutions, and they can be leveled to the ground. If the President can practically make a treaty, and that is what he is doing in other directions, and dispose of the reserved rights of the States, then the treaty-making power is above and beyond the Constitution, and the supremacy of the States within their own borders departs and vanishes forever. If the Democratic party accepts such a doctrine as this, then it has also parted with its birthright and abandoned the historic ground upon which it has stood for over a century. I believe in the complete exercise by the Federal Government of every Federal power contained in the Constitution, but beyond the delegated powers and the right to pass all laws necessary to execute the delegated powers, I would never justify the slightest encroachment upon the reserved rights of sovereign States within their own borders. In the night of our despair, this reserved right of the States is the only constellation that for our party has no "fellow in the firmament." We were born under its horoscope, and if there is any life left in us we must forsake the worship of grotesque and meaningless idols and follow it like a pillar of fire to the land of our nativity.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

On motion of Mr. BINGHAM, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 21574, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, Mr. HEPBURN in the chair.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, I want to suggest to my colleague——

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I would ask the gentleman on the other side if he has any desire to go on with general debate?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. No, sir; I desire that the committee go on under the five-minute rule immediately.

Mr. BINGHAM. Then, Mr. Chairman, I would ask for a reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

For twenty-one clerks to committees, at $1,800 each, $37,800.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of making an inquiry of the gentleman in charge of the bill. I notice on page 5, among the clerks allowed in the Senate, provision is made for a clerk to the Committee on Additional Accommodations for the Library of Congress, at $2,220. Now, I have no desire whatever to interfere with the method of arriving at why these clerks are provided, which, I suppose, is a matter, in the opinion of the gentleman to be left to the Senate, and of course I appreciate the arduous work of the Committee on Additional Accommodations for the Library of Congress. But it does seem to me that if we appropriate for a clerk to a Senate committee which in the nature of things can do nothing it is time the House took care of its own Members and its own clerks. The only time, I suppose, we can refer to the Senate is when we are considering appropriations relating to the Senate. Here is the clerk of a committee which can not meet, which can do nothing, originally created when it was proposed to have additional accommodations in the Library of Congress. Those accommodations have all been provided. This clerk is for the benefit of the chairman of the committee. I do not know who the chairman is, and I do not object to his being given the clerk. I have no doubt he makes good use of the clerk which he gets. But is it not proper if the Senate shall provide sufficient salaries for the employees under them and sufficient employees to permit the members of the Senate to attend to the public business which comes before them that the House shall do the same thing? In other words, we sit here and permit the members of the Senate to provide as many employees as they please, and for fear of criticism of ourselves we decline to do that for ourselves which we allow to the Senate; and we have to do as much work for our constituents as the Senators do, and in addition to that fact, we have to keep in closer touch with our constituents, because every two years we must present ourselves for approval or disapproval or else retire from public life.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman well understands the history of legislation in this bill, which has for many years been followed without controversy in matters of detail with the Senate. I shall not enlighten him with any opinion on that line of procedure, but will say that this committee clerk has been allowed the Senate for years. There is now pending, and has been pending for a year past, before your Committee on Appropriations, as well, doubtless, as the Library Committee of this House, an appropriation of $100 for the building of additional stacks in connection with the library. There are other proceedings that come, I believe, to the same committee. I will say to the gentleman only that I shall not pass judgment as to the usefulness of what the Senate recommends to us. My position heretofore has been well taken, has been generally followed by the House, and we do not desire to enter into controversy with the Senate as to what may be the Senate's judgment, a conclusion strengthened by preceding legislation as to their committees or the details of their work—whether it is greater or less than ours. I will state that this is consistent with current law.

For twenty-five annual clerks to Senators who are not chairmen of committees, at $1,800 each, $45,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. This is the item fixing salaries of clerks for Senators who have not committee clerks at $1,800 a year. Now, I understand the theory upon which the Committee on Appropriations has proceeded for years—that the Senate shall fix the salaries of its officials and the House shall fix the salaries of its officials. By the same token the War Department ought to fix the salaries of its clerks and the Agricultural Department ought to fix the salaries of its clerks. We can not escape from our responsibility. We are just as much responsible for the salaries of the clerks in the Senate as are the Senators. It is not a possibility, at least theoretically, for the gentlemen to avoid the responsibility for the salaries of the clerks in the Senate.

Now, if the salaries of the clerks in the Senate in this bill are correct, then the salaries for the clerks to the Members of the House are too low. It requires just as much experience to properly and efficiently serve a Member in the House as it does a member of the Senate. I do not undertake to say at this time whether in my judgment the salary of eighteen hundred dollars a year is too little or too much or the right amount, but I can not understand what explanation the gentleman in charge of the bill can give in justification of the action of the committee of the House in providing a different salary for a clerk to a Senator and a clerk to a Member of the House. It does not do to say that we take the old law. The committee is responsible for just legislation. It is the duty of the committee to ascertain whether these salaries are the proper salaries to be paid, and I think that the Members of the House at least generally feel that the salaries of their clerks ought to be on a par with the salaries of the Senators' clerks.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. MANN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Do I understand that this appropriation increases the salaries paid to Senators' clerks over what they were?

Mr. LITTAUER. They were increased last year.

Mr. MANN. It does not increase their salaries, but I want to emphasize the fact that a Senator's clerk is not worth one and a half times a Member's clerk.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Has there been any provision in the bill to require Senators to certify that they had agreed to pay this amount to their clerks?

Mr. MANN. I do not know; I do not think they are required to certify.

Mr. BURLESON. I can answer that question. No such provision has ever been made.

Mr. BINGHAM. Does the gentleman from Illinois desire any reply to his remarks?

Mr. MANN. I certainly would like to hear the gentleman. I would much rather have him agree with the remarks than otherwise.

Mr. BINGHAM. I will state to the gentleman and to the committee that I fairly agree with him, and when we reach that part of the bill in reference to clerks for Members I shall be perfectly willing to express myself about the matter. I have no doubt, as a general proposition, doing work along the same line, the clerks should have the same compensation; but that proposition will not come before us. We have conformed to the current law, which gives Senators' clerks, as the gentleman has stated, $1,800 a year. There was no proposition before your committee in reference to a change in that compensation. There has certainly not come from Senators any suggestion as to increase or decrease of their salaries, nor from any official of the Senate. The proposition in the bill with reference to the payment of $1,500 to clerks to Members of the House came from, I may say, a large body of the membership of the House. The conclusion reached was that $1,200 was not a fair compensation for the character of man required, the confidential character of work, and the first-class ability of the intrusted clerk. I feel convinced that $1,500 would be a fair compensation to our clerks, and only fair, not generous. I have no disposition to disturb the thorough equilibrium and, as I trust, good feeling existing, as it has existed, between the Senate and the House, and whether it is on the part of the House or the Senate is another proposition. I can only say to the gentleman we have taken the current law, as there has been no question before us of any proposed change. The gentleman would ask me if we could change it, and I would say that I would like the clerks of the House to have the same compensation as the clerks of the Senate; but as to whether, from the work and responsibilities of the clerks to Senators, the compensation is fair or unfair, I do not know.

Mr. MANN. Pardon me. If the Senators should propose to fix the salaries of their clerks at $10,000 per annum, would the gentleman be willing to agree to that?

Mr. BINGHAM. I should say not, simply. Why does the gentleman fix $10,000? Why not increase it to a reasonable fortune?

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman does presume to say now, by bringing in a bill, that the sum appropriated is a fair and reasonable sum.

Mr. BINGHAM. I think it is a fair and resonable sum—$1,800.

Mr. MANN. I agree with him about that; but why should it be different from that of a Member's clerk?

Mr. BINGHAM. I do not know, not being a Senator and never hoping to be one.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman would adorn the Senate, I may say.

Mr. BINGHAM. Thank you.

Mr. LITTAUER. I would state to the gentleman from Illinois that we were confronted last year not only with a theory, but with an exact condition in considering this very rate of compensation of clerks to Senators. These clerks prior to the current year received $1,500. The Senate last year made a raise in the salary of their clerks from $1,500 to $1,800. We had a serious discussion in conference over the matter, at first refusing to agree to this manifest inequality. We felt that the compensation was altogether out of proportion to the compensation paid at this end of the Capitol, not only in reference to these clerks, but to all other services in connection with the two bodies. The condition which confronted us compelled us to give in to the proposition of the Senate, who will ever demand that they shall control the compensation of their employees, and to that demand we must necessarily bow.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. LITTAUER. Certainly.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Is it not a fact that the Senators' clerks get a month's extra pay in addition to their salary?

Mr. LITTAUER. That is true.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. And they are carried, I believe, on the rolls of the Senate?

Mr. LITTAUER. They are carried by name on the rolls of the Senate.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I would like to ask the gentleman if the Committee on Appropriations have ever considered the question of putting the clerks to Members on a roll in the House?

Mr. LITTAUER. We have considered it this very year in connection with the subject of clerk hire to Members of the House. The objection to placing clerks to Members on a roll is simply this: That if a roll should be made, but one clerk can be placed upon that roll. The custom has grown up here for Members to have two or more clerks. Some have one in Washington and one at home, each receiving part of the allowance for clerk hire. With such practice it became impracticable to have clerks on a specified roll.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Then the difference between the salaries paid to a clerk of a Senator and a clerk of a Member is the difference between $1,200 and $1,950?

Mr. LITTAUER. That is the very least sum paid clerks to Senators. Remember these $1,800 clerks are clerks to Senators who are not chairmen of committees, but sixty-five out of ninety Senators are chairmen of committees, whose clerks receive $2,220.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I should like to ask the gentleman from New York a question. As I understand, you propose in this bill to change the law, which has always required us to certify that we have agreed to pay so much to a clerk. Now, was one reason for that in order to make the practice of the House uniform with that of the Senate?

Mr. LITTAUER. No; we did not care for uniformity in this instance.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Will the gentleman be willing to state the reasons which actuated the committee in recommending that change?

Mr. LITTAUER. The committee felt that a proper allowance for clerk hire was necessary to every Member of the House. The duties of a Congressman, representing, as each of us does, to-day so large a body of people, in round numbers 200,000, have become so varied and onerous that to perform his work properly each Member should be given the services of a competent clerk, worthy of at least a recompense of $1,500 per year. We believed that the certification necessary under current law was uncalled for and in actual practice perfunctory. I personally have always expended more than my allowance for clerk hire and felt that every Member is entitled to and can well expend $1,500 for clerk hire. The requirement of the law as to certification has proved to be only a form, which really did not actually amount to anything and which is in a certain sense a reflection upon our honesty of purpose.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Then the intention of the committee was that this fifteen hundred dollars should go entirely to the clerk?

Mr. LITTAUER. Positively. It was the belief of the committee that every Member, in order to obtain proper service, ought to pay at the rate of at least fifteen hundred dollars a year for clerk hire.

Mr. LAWRENCE. And it was not an attempt, indirectly, to increase the salaries of Members?

Mr. LITTAUER. No. We hope to reach that question in a positive way rather than in an indirect way. It is to do away with all sorts of indirection that this recommendation was made.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on this paragraph is exhausted.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I dislike very much to disagree with the gentlemen on the committee and many other Members of the House with reference to this question of clerk hire. I recognize that the precedents allow the Senate practically the right to fix the amount of compensation for its secretaries, and this House to fix the compensation for its clerks. So far as the clerk hire of the Senate is concerned, it would probably be unwise for this House to attempt to interfere with the salaries paid. The Senators are responsible to their constituents for the salaries they pay, and if we should try to interfere with the salaries of Senators or their clerks it might produce friction between the two Houses that would be detrimental to good legislation on other important questions. Therefore I do not propose to oppose the item inserted here for Senators' clerks, as I understand from the members of the committee that it is done by request of the Senate committee.

But when it comes to the question of additional compensation for clerks of Members, I do not agree with the committee that it is necessary to raise the salaries of the present clerks of Members of the House from $1,200 a year to $1,500 a year. There are a number of Members who have a great deal of work to do, but practically all of those Members are chairmen of committees——

Mr. MANN. I did not know that the gentleman had become chairman of a committee.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have not.

Mr. MANN. Well, I know the gentleman always has a great deal of work to do, and does it well.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes; and I will say that so far as my work is concerned, I have tried to give it good attention.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has done so.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. And I have been able to get along very comfortably and very successfully with one clerk at $1,200 a year. I believe my clerk is a satisfactory one. He is a good stenographic clerk, and a good typewriter. He understands the business of the Departments and attends to my business there. In addition to receiving his salary, he takes advantage of his opportunity here to study law at the night school, and he is acquiring a profession. He is very glad to work at the compensation he receives, and, if he desired to quit the job, I have no doubt in the world that I could find fifteen or twenty young men—good stenographic clerks, and competent men—who would gladly accept the position at $100 a month, in order that they might be able to come to Washington to study law or some other profession.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman from Alabama think that we ought to inflict upon the country the idea that a Member of Congress can have no clerks except one that wants to study law?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not think so; but I know that you can go into any of the Departments and find a number of men working in Washington for less than $100 a month to-day who are doing more work than the average clerk to a Member of Congress.

Mr. MANN. I do not know what the average is, but I know that the clerk of this Member of Congress does more than twice the work of any clerk in any of the Departments.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes; I know the Member of Congress from Illinois wants his work done like a steam engine.

Mr. MANN. I am like the other Members of the House.

Mr. LITTAUER. I want to state to the Member from Alabama that I pay $50 a month to have my pension work looked after. Does the gentleman have any burden of that kind?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No; I do not.

Mr. LITTAUER. Then there is an item that the gentleman does not have to bear.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. There are very few pension claims from my district.

Mr. SIMS. I would like to ask the gentleman from Alabama a question.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. SIMS. The gentleman from Alabama is comparing the clerks for Members with the Department clerks, who have fixed hours, who are only required to work during those hours, and do not work at night. Members' clerks do work at night and have no fixed hours. The Department clerks have an extra month's pay, or thirty days' leave of absence; the Member's clerk does not have that. In addition to that, the Member's clerk has to travel back and forth from home, either at his own expense or at the expense of the Member, which the Department clerk does not have to bear.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the gentleman from Tennessee that, so far as I am concerned, I would gladly vote for a bill that made the Members' clerks employees of the House and also gave them mileage or actual expenses for their travel from home to the capital. But I think that is as far as we ought to go in the matter. I think it would be very proper to pay his actual expenses going to and from the capital, but I do not see any reason why we should make an increase in the salary when the average man does not need it. And if we should make an increase in salary, I think a question of that kind should come before the House in a proper way and not be legislated on in an appropriation bill.

Mr. SIMS. If we continue the pay at $100 a month, does it not make it impossible for a Member to employ a married man?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I did not say anything about a married man; I said he could get young men. I know this: You take the average post-office, and the Government only allows $50 a month to the new clerks in the post-office. I know a number of young men in the post-office in my town who are just as competent to fill the position of private secretary or clerk to a Congressman as is the average clerk who is now filling that place.

Mr. SIMS. Does my friend from Alabama take into consideration the personal qualifications of the clerk? Let me give him my experience: I had one of the best clerks of any Member of this House, who was fortunate enough to be married to a good wife. He stayed here four years and lost money every day. I had to give him up in order that he might make a living at something else.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Oh, I do not think that argument applies at all. There are lots of positions my friend from Tennessee could not accept because he could not support his family on the pay. There are lots of married men who could accept the position of clerk to a Member and live comfortably on the pay.

Mr. SIMS. Does the gentleman from Alabama think that a Member should look around to find somebody who can live on the salary, without reference to his personal qualities?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think I could get men with personal qualities that the clerk ought to possess to take the position. I have had no trouble in the past, and I do not think I will have any trouble in the future.

But I think if the House wants to pass on this question it ought not to be brought in here on an appropriation bill. I think it is a matter that ought to go before the proper legislative committee, be properly considered by that committee, and reported to this House as a change of existing law, and let the House discuss it fully and consider it as a separate proposition.

Mr. SIMS. Why can not they discuss it just as fully in this way. Does this House need a committee's report to them to know what their clerks need; who do their own work?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No, they do not; but this is not the place to consider it, on an appropriation bill.

Mr. SIMS. This technical idea that we must not legislate upon appropriation bills, and yet accept every amendment put on them in the Senate in violation of our own rules, does not have much weight with me.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I agree with the gentleman. I think we have legislated entirely too much on appropriation bills, and so has the Senate, but I have said in the beginning that I do not think we can interfere with the Senate fixing the compensation of its employees any more than the Senate can interfere with our fixing the compensation of our employees. I think it would be a mistake to adopt the amendment that the committee offers to this bill, so far as clerk hire is concerned.

Mr. SIMS. Why not let the committee vote upon it?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the gentleman that, so far as I am concerned, although I do not think the committee ought to have brought it in here, that this being a matter that goes to the individual membership, to the rights of every Member of this House, a personal matter between us, I would not interject a point of order in the way of my colleagues on the floor of this House. I say that I do not think the committee ought to put it on the bill, but as it is a matter which is personal to us and that we must act upon at our own responsibility in voting to increase the salary of our clerks, I would not myself interject a point of order that would prevent this House from acting. I do say, however, that I do not think the House should vote in favor of the increase of the salaries of our clerks, and I shall certainly vote against any such proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, personally I favored and am in favor of placing the names of the clerks to Members upon the rolls, but for the reasons so forcibly stated a moment ago by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LITTAUER] the Committee on Appropriations abandoned the idea of attempting to place the names of these clerks upon the rolls. Personally I believe that the salaries of these clerks ought to be increased. I believe they render a service that entitles them to an increase. They now receive $1,200 a year and are compelled to make two trips home and two trips to Washington, making four trips, without mileage, during each term of the Representative he serves. When the amount of the expense incurred by one of these clerks on these trips is deducted from the salary he receives, considering the increased cost of living, it is a mystery to me how he manages to live. The salary now paid a Senator's clerk is $1,800 a year, and in addition they each receive $150, an extra month's compensation—which is always granted, as we all know—every year, making $1,950 which a Senator's clerk receives as compared with $1,200 which we now pay our clerks. Mr. Chairman, I insist there is no reason which can be here stated which will appeal to the common sense of any man why there should be this difference between the compensation we allow our clerks and the compensation that we allow a Senator's clerk. A Member's clerk performs exactly the same duties or just as arduous as those performed by the Senator's clerk. For these reasons, and because I know that 99 per cent of my fellow-Members believe it should be done, I favor this increase.

In response to the query of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LAWRENCE] as to why the Appropriation Committee in this bill abandoned the requirement of certification by the Member of the amount he has promised to pay, etc., I desire to say this. We did it because we believed the certification is a mere blind, a pretense, a humbug. Every man here knows that these certificates are passed to us here on this floor in blank, and that each Member signs them in blank, taking no time to fill in the amount that is to be paid by him for his clerk's compensation. These blanks are afterwards filled by House employees, and I never heard of one being filled for less than the maximum amount. Furthermore, as a matter of fact, it involves a degree of humiliation that a Member of this body must certify that he has promised to pay, or agreed to pay, a given sum for his clerk's service, when a Senator is required to make no such certification. Now, I never see the warrant for my clerk's salary. I authorize him to sign my name on the back of it, to indorse, and collect it. It comes in a red envelope; my pay comes in a white envelope, and when it comes my clerk takes it and indorses my name on the back of it, collects it, and I never see it. But, Mr. Chairman, I do not hesitate to say that every time I sign one of those blank certificates I feel that I am making a certification that in a measure reflects upon me as a Member of this body. I do not know how it strikes other Members; I speak only for myself. Some may have constituents who will believe that if they vote to increase the compensation allowed to their clerks it will go into their own pockets. It is a source of satisfaction to me to believe that I do not have one constituent who will believe that I will steal my secretary's or clerk's salary. I think that we ought to grant this increase to our clerks—they deserve it. I believe that, as self-respecting men, we ought to abandon this hypercritical certification, and the Committee took that view of it, and for that reason embodied this item in this bill. [Applause.]

Mr. DAWSON. Would it not be going one step farther in the same direction—the gentleman's views and mine being along the same line—to place these secretaries of ours on the rolls and give them the same status that the secretaries of the Senators have?

Mr. BURLESON. Personally, as I stated in the beginning of my remarks, I very much favor that suggestion. I believe that it ought to be done, but for the reasons given by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LITTAUER] the Committee on Appropriations concluded it was not best to attempt it. As a matter of fact, I will state to the gentleman from Iowa that information reached us which satisfied us that if we attempted what is suggested by the gentleman from Iowa that a point of order would be made against it and the whole item would go out.

Mr. LITTAUER. Will the gentleman from Texas permit me one moment?

Mr. BURLESON. Certainly.

Mr. LITTAUER. As I stated, Members frequently have to employ one clerk in Washington and another clerk in their districts. How is it in the case of a Senator? All Senators have an eighteen-hundred dollar or twenty-two hundred and fifty dollar clerk here, and nearly all have messengers in addition whose compensation is fourteen hundred and forty dollars, so that the messenger can perform the necessary clerical work in Washington between sessions if the clerk happens to be at home with the Senator. With two clerical assistants it is quite feasible to have a permanent roll in the Senate.

Mr. SIMS. And the messenger is often a stenographer, too.

Mr. LITTAUER. Well, he does actual clerical work.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, to my mind this is not a question as to whether or not we can not get clerks for $1,200, as the gentleman from Alabama intimates, no more than whether men could not be gotten to serve as Members of Congress for less than $5,000 a year. I have no doubt we could flood this Capitol with young men if an advertisement was made for clerks to Members at $1,000 per annum. There was no dearth of candidates when the Government paid $8 a day to Members of Congress, whether of the House or Senate, and I doubt whether there would be now. In my district, I think, we could find quite a number of men who would be willing to move into the district of the gentleman from Alabama, bright, capable, competent men, and who would make good Congressmen, if it was known that by doing so they could come here for $2,500 a year and serve the country through membership in this House. That is not the question, gentlemen. It is this. What is a reasonable compensation to the men who come here and serve the Government, whether as clerks to Members to aid them in the discharge of their duties or as Members of the House in their official capacity. Why should, for instance, a Senator's clerk have $1,950, or $750 more than a clerk to a Member of the House? It costs the clerk of a Member of the House just as much to come here from Michigan as it does the clerk of either of the Senators from Michigan. It costs the wife of a clerk to a Member of the House just as much to travel here as the wife of a Senator's clerk. It costs just as much to keep his wife and child or children in his home in his State as it does the clerk to a Senator.

Now, is the amount named an unreasonable compensation for the services rendered and for the expense necessarily incurred? Not that you can not get men for less. Why, I was secretary of the State of Michigan once for $800 a year. I was making an argument for an amendment to the constitution before a large assemblage of people at a great farmers' gathering, showing how it was unfair and unreasonable to ask men to serve the Commonwealth for that pitiable sum. I asked, "Who could afford it?" Many hands went up, and voices replied, "I can; I can." You could have gotten a thousand men in that audience to serve the State of Michigan as its secretary for $800 a year. We pay our attorney-general a like insignificant sum, and yet there is never a lack of trained and capable lawyers to seek the office regardless of the salary. But do these answer the argument? Are the services rendered not worth more than that paltry sum? The fathers, in the days of the Commonwealth's infancy and poverty, put these and other like limitations as to salaries in the constitution fifty-six years ago, and we have not been able to vote it out. Is it a fair compensation for the services rendered? It seems to me that is the question before the House in this matter now pending. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of the Clerk: For Clerk of the House of Representatives, including compensation as disbursing officer of the contingent fund, $5,000; hire of horses and wagons and cartage for use of the Clerk's office, $900, or so much thereof as may be necessary; Chief Clerk, $4,000; Journal Clerk, and two reading clerks, at $3,600 each; tally clerk, $3,000; file clerk, $2,750; printing and bill clerk, disbursing clerk, and enrolling clerk, at $2,500 each; distributing clerk, $2,250; docket clerk, assistant disbursing clerk, assistant enrolling clerk, resolution and petition clerk, printing and document clerk, index clerk, assistant journal clerk, stationery clerk, and assistant to Chief Clerk, at $2,000 each; librarian, and superintendent Clerk's document room, at $1,800 each; bookkeeper, document and bill clerk, two assistant librarians, and seven clerks, at $1,600 each; assistant index clerk, assistant file clerk, and special employees in Clerk's document room, at $1,500 each; document clerk, $1,440; locksmith, who shall be skilled in his trade, $1,200; one assistant in Clerk's office, and one assistant in disbursing office, at $1,400 each; telegraph operator, and stenographer to the Clerk, at $1,200 each; assistant telegraph operator, authorized and named in resolution adopted January 15, 1902, $1,200; one assistant in library, one assistant in document room, one assistant in stationery room, and one messenger in file room, at $900 each; one page, $720; attendant in charge of bathroom, $1,000; three laborers in the bathroom, at $720 each; three laborers, page in enrolling room, and janitor in the library, at $720 each; messenger in Chief Clerk's office and disbursing office, $900; allowance to Chief Clerk for stenographic and typewriter services, $500; in all, $101,420.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to find from the gentleman in charge of the bill what has become of the work of preparing the index to the claims. I see it is not in this item.

Mr. LITTAUER. It has been dropped out, sir.

Mr. JOHNSON. The work has not been completed.

Mr. LITTAUER. They have until next July to complete it. The law requires that it shall be completed on the 1st of July, 1907.

Mr. JOHNSON. I know that, but they came up asking another appropriation, I notice.

Mr. LITTAUER. Well, the committee took the mandate of last year's law and followed it.

Mr. JOHNSON. I withdraw the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the following minority employees authorized and named in the resolution adopted by the House of Representatives November 9, 1903, namely: One special employee, $1,500; two special messengers, at $1,200 each, and one special chief page, $900, and $700 additional for services as pair clerk, and said special chief page shall be designated a deputy sergeant-at-arms; in all, $5,500.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the amendment which I have sent to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 18, line 23, strike out the word "two" where it occurs the second time and insert the word "four;" so as to read:
Two special messengers at $1,400 each.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I will state to the Chair that there is no disposition on this side of the House to make any suggestion as to restriction of the convenience of the Members on the other side. I accept the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the special messenger authorized and named in the resolution adopted by the House of Representatives January 15, 1900, $1,200.

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. As the question of salaries for the employees of the Government in its various Departments will likely be considered at this session of Congress, I desire to say something on this all-important subject.

The bill under consideration, as agreed on by the Committee on Appropriations, is good as far as it goes. However, to do justice to a most deserving class of men and women it must include all those in the Government service.

For four years, with others, I have advocated the proper recognition of the letter carriers and postal clerks. Our cry for relief has up to the present fallen on deaf ears. Now comes the good news that the President is expected to send a special message to Congress, recommending an increase of 20 per cent in the salaries of all persons in the United States service.

This is a commendable act worthy of our great Chief Executive. He fully realizes that the cost of living in the last five years has increased fully 25 per cent. In the larger cities, particularly in New York, the average rent paid by post-office clerks and carriers is $25 per month, and this for a small apartment or a two-family house unheated. All the necessaries of life are high, so that these faithful public servants can barely, by the strictest economy, make both ends meet.

In the trades wages have nearly doubled in the same period of time. Mechanics are getting from $4 to $6 per day. The policemen and firemen of that city receive $1,400 annually after five years, with a pension of one-half of that sum when they are incapacitated on account of age.

The insufficiency of the wages paid by the Government is keeping many of the best of our young men out of the service. Not only this, but the bright, energetic youth leaves it at the first opportunity. It is in the interest of efficiency to secure the very best men and women for the various Departments of the Government. To do this, and thus maintain a service equal to that of any commercial enterprise, good living salaries must be paid.

In our public school system in New York we pay good salaries and an age pension. Even with these advantages we are at times short of teachers.

It is rumored that the Post-Office Department will recommend a reclassification of salaries, with the view of increasing the same. It is to be hoped that with all these proposed movements that justice may be meted out to those who honestly and faithfully serve the people. Merit and length of faithful service alone should be the test.

I withdraw my amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

To continue the employment of the special messenger authorized and named in the resolution of the House adopted February 7, 1900, $1,200.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the amendment which I have sent to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 20, in line 7, strike out the word "two" and insert the word "four;" so as to read:
"One thousand four hundred dollars."

Mr. BINGHAM. That is perfectly acceptable. There is no objection on this side to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT].

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For clerk hire, Members and Delegates: To pay each Member and Delegate for clerk hire, necessarily employed by him in the discharge of his official and representative duties, $1,500 per annum, in monthly installments, $594,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary; and Representatives and Delegates elect to Congress whose credentials in due form of law have been duly filed with the Clerk of the House of Representatives, in accordance with the provisions of section 31 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, shall be entitled to payment under this appropriation.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 15 strike out all after the word "Delegates" down to the word "necessary," in line 20, and insert: "To pay to the clerks employed by each Member and Delegate, and who may be necessarily employed by him in the discharge of his official and representative duties, $1,500 per annum, in monthly installments, $594,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, the same to be paid by the Clerk of the House to the clerk so employed by the Member or Delegate."

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against that amendment.

Mr. HAY. Now, if the gentleman wants to make points of order——

Mr. OLMSTED. It is against the amendment, that it changes existing law in violation of the second clause of Rule XXI of the Rules of the House.

Mr. HAY. Very well, sir.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to move to amend the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to speak on the point of order?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I thought the point of order had been disposed of.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment:

Strike out the word "five" where it occurs in line 18, on page 21, after the word "thousand," and insert "two;" so that the paragraph will read:

"One thousand two hundred dollars per annum."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 18, after the word "thousand," insert the word "two;" so that it will read:

"One thousand two hundred dollars per annum."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Chairman, I do not exactly understand the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, my amendment is as follows: Strike out the word "five" where it occurs after the word "thousand," in line 18, page 21, and insert "two" in place thereof; so that the paragraph will read: "One thousand two hundred dollars per annum" instead of "$1,500 per annum."

Mr. TAWNEY. The effect of the amendment, as I understand the gentleman, is to leave the clerk hire exactly as it is now—$1,200 a year—without certification.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It is. Mr. Chairman, I overlooked the question of certification; so I ask leave to withdraw the amendment and move to strike out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Now, Mr. Chairman, on that motion I wish to say that my object in making the motion is that I think Members should certify the amount they expend in payment of their clerks; and, in the next place, I think that $1,200 a year is sufficient to obtain a competent clerk. If it could be offered, I would prefer to see the law amended as the gentleman from Virginia has proposed, so that clerks to Members might be carried on the rolls of the House as employees of the House. I believe I can employ a good and competent clerk to fill the position and answer the requirements for a Member of Congress at the present compensation. I do not believe there is any large corporation in this country or any business house in this country that employs a clerk that has similar duties to perform and no more labor to do than is required of a clerk to a Member of Congress where the man employed receives more compensation than $100 a month for this class of clerical service. It is not a service that requires independent judgment; it is not a service where a man has to be informed on matters in general. It is a service where the employee merely carries out the instructions and the orders of his Member of Congress; and it is not necessary for him to know more than that, except the details of the work in the Departments here. The average clerk in the Departments who is appointed to do the detail work does not receive more than $1,200 a year.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will.

Mr. ALEXANDER. If your motion carries, how does that leave the appropriation for clerk hire?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It will leave it in order to insert the appropriation as it was carried in the last appropriation bill, which I propose to move to insert. It does not propose to knock out all of it.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I had hoped the present arrangement would not be disturbed. As I understood him, I agree with the gentleman from Alabama as to the present salary. This motion, however, if supported, must be with the understanding, of course, that it will be followed by a further motion. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I would not say a word if it had not been for the description the gentleman from Alabama has given of the service of his clerk. [Laughter.] If the gentleman from Alabama can get along as a Member of Congress with a clerk who does not require peculiar tact and who does not require independent judgment, it is a reflection upon both the gentleman from Alabama and his constituents, which I regret to hear him announce. I can not understand the character of work done by a Member of Congress, both upon the floor of the House and for the people here, who receives the help of a clerk, unless the clerk is required to use independent judgment and is required to have peculiar knowledge and peculiar tact and peculiar information. I do not know how the gentleman from Alabama has acquired the valuable information which he has frequently presented to the House, but if he has done it without the assistance of his clerk or some other clerk or employee of the House, he is a more remarkable man even than I have given him credit for, and I have always given him credit for being one of the ablest Members of this body.

To render efficient service, it does require the clerks to have tact and independent judgment. It may be that in Birmingham and in Buffalo, two busy B's, they can secure the services of able clerks at $100 a month and expect those clerks to pay their fare to Washington and return. There has never been a year since I have been a Member of this body that I did not expend more for clerk hire, by a considerable amount, than the amount reimbursed to me by the Government, and I never yet secured the services of a clerk whom I thought was too good to be a clerk. It may be that by hunting around I might be able to secure the services, temporarily, of a young gentleman desirous of occupying his time in the study of law, but a young man who came to Washington as my clerk, intending to study law, would find at night instead of being in the law school, he was at work until 11 or 12 o'clock at night, and all the law he would acquire knowledge of would be through his work for me and not from his study in the law school.

It is always wise for any legislative official to provide himself with ample tools with which to work, and one of the most efficient tools in the service of the Government is an able, intelligent, tactful clerk, both to a Member of the House and to a member of the Senate, who can not be obtained, I regret to say, either for $1,200 a year or even for $1,500 a year. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. UNDERWOOD, on a division (demanded by Mr. UNDERWOOD), there were—ayes 11, noes 122.

Accordingly, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. DAWSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

On page 21 strike out all of lines 15 to 24, inclusive, and lines 1 and 2, on page 22, and insert in lieu thereof:

"Clerks to Members and Delegates: For clerk hire to each Member and Delegate, at $1,500; and clerks to the Members and Delegates hereunder shall be placed on the rolls of the House and be paid as are other clerks and employees of the House; $594,000."

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, I make the same point of order that I have already made against an almost identical amendment, namely, that it changes existing law in violation of the second paragraph of Rule XXI.

Mr. DAWSON. I should like to be heard on the point of order.

Mr. KEIFER. Allow me to make the further suggestion that we have just voted down a proposition to strike out the entire paragraph, and if it was in order to make amendments to the paragraph they ought to have been offered before the vote was taken on the motion to strike out. As I recollect the rule, it is too late now to undertake to perfect the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the seventh paragraph of Rule XVI.

The Clerk read as follows:

A motion to strike out and insert is indivisible, but a motion to strike out being lost shall neither preclude amendment nor motion to strike out and insert; and no motion or proposition on a subject different from that under consideration shall be admitted under color of amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] is overruled.

Mr. DAWSON Now, Mr. Chairman, I should like to be heard on the point of order raised by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized on the point of order.

Mr. DAWSON. As I understand, this entire paragraph in the bill was at one time in the consideration of the bill subject itself to a point of order. That point of order, however, was not raised, and the committee proceeded to the consideration of the proposition itself. That having been done, is it not true that any amendment which is germane to the subject-matter is in order, the point of order not having been raised against the amendment?

Mr. LAWRENCE. That is right. The paragraph itself changes existing law.

Mr. OLMSTED. While it may be true, as the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DAWSON] has suggested, that this paragraph was at one time itself subject to a point of order as changing existing law, in that it increased the amount of clerk hire, this proposed amendment changes it in another particular, which is not germane to the particular in which the paragraph itself transgressed the rule, namely, in the amount of clerk hire. This amendment not only increases the compensation to fifteen hundred dollars, but goes further and changes the entire scheme, because, instead of allowing a certain amount for clerk hire to each Member, who may pay it to one clerk or divide it between two clerks if he chooses, it provides for the appointment of one clerk, who is not to be the employee of the Member, but of the House of Representatives. It simply increases the number of employees of the House. It is additional legislation, provides for a different class of employees, and comes clearly within the precedents quoted at the bottom of page 357 of the Manual, and in opposition to the precedents upon which the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DAWSON] doubtless relies, that a paragraph which changes existing law, being allowed by general consent to remain, may be perfected by any germane amendment.

That is undoubtedly true, but you will find at the bottom of page 357 this language: "But this does not permit an amendment which adds additional legislation," and the precedents there cited.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE.

Office of the Public Printer: Public Printer, $6,000; deputy public printer, who shall perform the duties of chief clerk, have supervision of buildings, and be appointed by the Public Printer, $3,600; private secretary, $2,250; stenographer, $1,000; cashier and paymaster, $2,500; paying teller, $2,000; one messenger; one telephone switchboard operator; two assistant telephone switchboard operators; chief inspector and purchasing agent, $3,600; and one clerk of class 1; in all, $24,910.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to reserve a point of order on this paragraph, because it changes existing legislation in fixing the salary of the Public Printer. I reserve the point of order until we can have an explanation of the reason. This increases the salary of the Public Printer from $4,500 to $6,000. It seems to me like a good and substantial increase.

Mr. BINGHAM. I will state to the gentleman from Illinois that as a result of the hearings in connection with the large responsibility that is now thrown upon the Public Printer, who goes into the office controlling upward of 4,000 subordinate employees, who has submitted to your committee a line of improvements which he is now engaged upon, which will save large sums of money to the Government; in view of the fact that he handles the largest public printing establishment in the world, appropriations for which are almost $6,000,000 annually; in view of the suggested changes which he claims will save to the Government large sums of money, your committee think that it is only a fair compensation.

I want to say that he is a man of large experience, young in years, determined to make a reputation for himself in the administration of this great office, whereby the beneficiary will be the Government of the United States. He believes the great office is susceptible of large improvements, and your committee felt that in handling a proposition of this character, with the promises of the large saving in that great enterprise, that $1,500, the proposed increase, is not too much. We have a very capable man there, a man of marked ability, large responsibility, great experience in the business, his knowledge of the public service—all those things enter into the reasons for the increase. In this case the enterprise is so large, the amount of money handled is so great, largely at his own discretion, because he goes into the markets and makes his own figures, looks after the mechanical work, that we thought that a fair compensation was $6,000.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will pardon me, I can understand the theory of the increase of the compensation to an old and tried servant. I do not quite understand the theory upon which, when you have just appointed a young man to an office where there has been no increase in his predecessor's salary, you should instantly increase the salary of that young man by a very large amount.

Mr. TAWNEY. If the gentleman from Illinois will permit me, I will say that we are not increasing the salary of any individual employee; we are increasing the salary of the man who fills the office of Public Printer, whoever he may be, now or hereafter.

Mr. MANN. Of course, I understand; we never go back. [Laughter.]

Mr. TAWNEY. With reference to the man now filling the office of Public Printer, let me say that the enviable record of having saved to the Government a million dollars in the output of our printing establishment in one year, as compared with the cost of that institution's output during preceding years, is a record that deserves recognition.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman from Minnesota will tell us how he saved that, I will be obliged to him.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say that he saved it in administration.

Mr. MANN. He could not save it in the administration, because the administration does not cost a million dollars.

Mr. TAWNEY. In the administration of his office, the purchase of supplies, and in the reduction in the cost of the output. I include in the administration the entire management of the business of this largest printing establishment in the world, the value of the product of which last year was over $4,000,000. One word more. If the gentleman from Illinois will go to the Printing Office, as I did a week or ten days ago——

Mr. MANN. Did the gentleman go in a carriage furnished by the Government? [Laughter.]

Mr. TAWNEY. I beg the gentleman's pardon; it is not material how I went there. If the gentleman will go, as I did a week or ten days ago, he will find, as I did, that as the result of this man's effort and his business capacity he has reclaimed from the junk pile in the Public Printing Office $250,000 worth of type, a great deal of which is new and has been there for ten years and never unpacked.

He has, in addition to that, reclaimed from the junk pile about $250,000 worth of machinery, some of which has been there for years and has never been unpacked. He has reclaimed nine Smythe sewing machines installed in the bindery department of the Public Printing Office some years ago—a standard sewing machine, costing $1,200 apiece. They were operated for about two years without showing any wear whatever, yet for no reason that anybody can ascertain these nine machines were rejected and other sewing machines were installed in their place. These nine machines have been reclaimed, have been put in place, and they can be sold for cash at $1,000 apiece, because they are standard machines, a machine of very general use in a great many bookbinding establishments in the United States. That is some of the work that the Public Printer has been doing since he went into that office. In addition to this, he has effected a great saving by the reduction of the force and is accomplishing more work, far more work, with a smaller force than has been accomplished heretofore under any previous administration of that department.

Now, a man who has the capacity to manage on economical business lines a plant of that size, having the capacity for output that the Public Printing Office of the Government of the United States has, must be a very valuable man. There is no private institution or corporation that could obtain a man capable of managing an institution of that size for the salary the Government of the United States has heretofore been paying to the Public Printer. In view of the ability required for this position, in view of the work, in view of the economies that the present Public Printer has already effected, the committee felt that it was justified in giving him a compensation commensurate with the work he is doing, and thus encourage him in his efforts to secure better administration, greater economy, and more efficient service in this great Government manufacturing establishment. I will say further that the gentleman did not make an application for this increase. The Public Printer was not even asked whether he would take it, but the committee was prompted to giving him this increase in salary because of the result he has obtained and because of his efforts during the first year of his administration to make the Government Printing Office the model printing establishment of the world.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I wondered why the action of the committee giving this increase was prompted. I am very glad to see present my distinguished friend from Indiana [Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS], who runs the Public Printing Office. I am very glad that the committee was not governed at all by the little memorandum in the note which we all received the other day from the Public Printer, which reads as follows:

If you will kindly notify me a little in advance of the time you would like to visit the Government Printing Office, I will be pleased to send one of the office carriages for you, and have it return with you to the Capitol or elsewhere, as you may desire.

The distinguished gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS] was the author of the proposition to do away with the private carriages owned or controlled by the various public officials in Washington at the expense of the General Government, and we heard one day that gentleman standing in his place in the House enumerate the long list of carriages that reached from the Capitol to the White House, ridden in and used by the underlings, as he called them, of the Government. Yet it comes about in the course of time that the gentleman peculiarly under his control and domination, the gentleman who relies upon him for his support and his direction, not only offers to ride in his own office carriage, but offers to send for any and all the Members of Congress and take them by way of the Printing Office to the White House reception, to their homes, to the Zoo—any other place that they may wish, not even barring Cabin John. I have been surprised that we have not already heard from my lovely and distinguished friend from Indiana, and I have wondered whether riding in these carriages from the Capitol to the Printing Office has been the occasion for this voluntary, this forced raise of salary, not asked by the Public Printer, but urged upon him—taken unwillingly on his part—by the Committee on Appropriations. It is the only instance of the kind with which I have ever met in Congress. Its very uniqueness may compel me to withdraw the point of order, for I hope that he will be so economic in the administration of his office that he will at least confine the use of his many office carriages to the Committee on Appropriations or to the Committee on Printing. The rest of us do not need them.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 23 strike out after the word "Printer," in line 9, down to and including the word "Printer" in line 11, and after line 19 insert: "The office of Deputy Public Printer shall be filled by the selection and appointment by the Public Printer of a person skilled as a practical printer and versed in the art of bookbinding, and who shall perform the duties heretofore required of the chief clerk, have the supervision of the buildings occupied by the Government Printing Office, and perform such other duties as may be required of him by the Public Printer."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Hereafter in printing documents authorized by law or ordered by Congress or either branch thereof the Government Printing Office shall follow the rules of orthography established by Webster's or other generally accepted dictionaries of the English language.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make the point of order against the paragraph just read.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Chairman, I trust that the gentleman will reserve his point of order.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Very well; I reserve the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana will state his point of order.

Mr. TAWNEY. I understood the gentleman from Indiana to reserve the point of order.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I want to state the ground for it, however, that the paragraph changes existing law; that it is new legislation. I, however, reserve the point of order if gentlemen care to express themselves in relation to the merits of this proposed legislation.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I understand the gentleman has reserved the point of order so that we may briefly speak on the merits of the proposition. I assume that the reason for offering the point of order is that this subject is not properly a subject of legislation, and I would agree with the gentleman ordinarily, but I think he fails to note the distinction between this and other cases. I do not believe the English language can or ought to be changed by Congressional action or by Presidential decree. I do not think it is properly a subject of Congressional action, but there is a clear difference between an attempt by Congress to change language as written in official documents and an attempt by Congress to preserve the existing language as written in official documents, and that is what the committee sought to accomplish—to preserve the established order. Now, what threatens the established order? Absolutely nothing but an Executive decree. I point out to the gentleman that the President of the United States derives no authority from the simplified spelling board. The Executive decree would be just as effective if no simplified spelling board existed at all. If the President of the United States has authority by imperial ukase to change the spelling of 300 words of the English language, it follows that he has authority to change 30,000 words, or every word in the language. The result may be that a new court language may be established by Executive decree for the new American empire. We got along very well with the customary form of the English language until the reign of the present Ruler, and I think we will get along quite as well if the language is left unchanged.

Now, what will be the effect of the point of order if it is sustained by the Chair, as I anticipate it will be, if it is pressed? It will be that the Government Printer, who desires to retain his position, realizing that he has been appointed by the President and may be removed by the President, will print official documents as ordered by the President, unless this measure offered by the committee becomes a law. He will do so because he fears the Presidential power. The result will be that the language, so far as it appears in official documents, will be changed upon the initiative of a single individual of the 80,000,000 people in the United States, each one of whom has just as much right and just as much power, if power be measured by legal authority, to change the language as has the President of the United States.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts yield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. SULLIVAN. I do.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Is the purpose of this paragraph to show that the President has not this power?

Mr. SULLIVAN. The purpose is not to show that the President has or has not the power. The purpose of the paragraph, as I understand it, is to preserve the right of Congress to have the speeches made upon the floor and also to have public documents spelled according to the usages established in the United States of America, and not changed because a Government official, who fears the Presidential power, spells in accordance with an Executive decree.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. SULLIVAN. I do.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts one question not touching the point of order, but the merits of the proposition or the paragraph of the bill. The gentleman, I understand, is on the committee which reported this bill.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Does not the gentleman think if this paragraph were enacted into law it would be giving by law a very great advantage to the publishers of Webster's Dictionary?

Mr. SULLIVAN. I do, and——

Mr. TAWNEY. If the gentleman will permit me——

Mr. SULLIVAN (continuing). I think an amendment ought to be offered striking out the word "Webster's," so as to leave it "generally accepted dictionaries of the English language."

Mr. TAWNEY. I will state that the chairman of the subcommittee has an amendment proposing to strike out "Webster's" and to leave it to any recognized dictionary of the English language.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. In that connection I observed, in reading the testimony given before the committee by Public Printer Stillings, he was asked this question:

Is there any difference between Webster's and Worcester's dictionary?
Mr. STILLINGS. I know very little about Worcester's dictionary I have not examined it recently.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Then would it not be putting quite a responsibility upon anyone who submitted a document there, if the statute be mandatory, and have him assume that the Public Printer would recognize the authority of a Worcester as proper? Would it not compel him to accept Webster as the only authority?

Mr. SULLIVAN. The chairman has stated that it is the intention of the committee to offer an amendment to strike out this apparent discrimination.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. What could be the interpretation "of any generally recognized dictionary" and the Public Printer saying that he does not consult Worcester at all?

Mr. SULLIVAN. I presume the Public Printer would have the right to consult Worcester or Webster or the Standard or the Century. I assume he would not go back to the dictionary of Samuel Johnson or Mr. Walker. I assume he would consult generally recognized authorities for spelling and pronunciation of the English language.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. But if Worcester is the dictionary that the Public Printer does not consult, would that be an accepted dictionary of the English language?

Mr. SULLIVAN. Unquestionably it would be. The mere fact that the Public Printer did not accept it does not alter the fact that it is a standard work which officially he would be bound to recognize.

Mr. NORRIS rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. SULLIVAN] yield to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS]?

Mr. SULLIVAN. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. Was not the intention of the committee in this paragraph to prohibit the Public Printer from following the instructions of the President in orthography, in printing his own message, for instance?

Mr. SULLIVAN. No.

Mr. NORRIS. Now, if the gentleman will look at the paragraph, it says: "Hereafter in printing documents authorized by law."

Now, as I take it, that would include any communication that the President had to make. Does the committee want to go so far as to preclude and make it illegal for the President to use any form of spelling that he wants to?

Mr. SULLIVAN. I do not think that the committee intended to go so far. Speaking for myself, I would be glad to go so far as to tell the President of the United States to have all the official documents printed according to the established usages of the English language. I see no reason why the President should not submit to some authority, even if it is only the authority established by the standard dictionaries of the language.

Mr. NORRIS. I wanted to find out whether the committee wanted to go that far or not.

Mr. SULLIVAN. As I stated, I do not think that is their intention.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SULLIVAN. The effect of the gentleman's point of order will be this, that the House, which has been constantly losing its power because of its own rulings, will become an ally of the President in this new form of usurpation. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER], by arising here and pressing his point of order, will render this House powerless to keep up the established system of spelling in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and other official documents. That will be the result of the gentleman's action, and I wish to call that to his attention as one reason for not pressing it.

Now, there is a great question of utility involved in this discussion which I think ought not to be pushed prominently forward, because the question of authority ought to be decisive of the whole question at issue. But even on the question of utility there is no unanimity among scholars, either as to the wisdom or the expediency of these proposed changes. Scholars quite as eminent and quite as high in authority in the world of letters as the gentleman who compose the simplified spelling board have declared it is neither wise nor expedient to adopt the new spelling of these 300 words. The result will be, therefore, that men of letters who have a large influence over our language will spell in the old way and we will have two standards in the United States. We will have the official standard, established in the court language here at Washington, and we will have the unofficial standard established by men of letters and conformed to generally by the people throughout the United States. The confusion which would result—not in my opinion merely, but in the opinion of eminent scholars—would be far greater than any confusion which exists to-day. Therefore, on the ground of utility, it seems to me that this change ought not to be made. I trust that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] will remember the prerogatives of this House and that to-day he will occupy the position which he has proudly occupied in the past, as a defender of the House and its privileges, and not an attacker of them; that he will not become a conscious or unconscious ally of the President in this new attempt at Executive usurpation, but will allow the English language, as used in official documents, to be spelled as formerly, according to the plain sense of the American people and the usages established by eminent men in English literature.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, there has been a great deal of discussion upon the subject of the so-called "simplified spelling," and some criticism of the Committee on Appropriations for having incorporated this provision in this appropriation bill. I am of the impression that Members of the House fail to fully realize the position of Congress with respect to this proposition. The Committee on Appropriations did not voluntarily precipitate this discussion. It was made necessary by an Executive order directing that all executive publications shall be printed in accordance with the recommendations of a board on simplified spelling in respect to the orthography of 300 words. When the Committee on Appropriations convened, before the opening of the session, we were presented with the book of annual estimates printed in accordance with the decree of the Executive in accordance with the rules laid down by this board on simplified spelling. On the first pages was printed the word "fixt" and [fixed]. When the clerk made up the bill for the use of the subcommittee in its work it was his duty, under the rule and custom of the committee, to have these estimates printed in the language in which they came to the committee in the Book of Estimates, printing the new matter in italics. He was also obliged to have, and did have, the current law, or the way in which the words were spelled in the current law, printed in brackets.

Therefore it was absolutely necessary at the inception of our work at this session of Congress to consider whether or not the Congress of the United States should follow the legislation of the Executive Department of the Government in respect to the spelling of these 300 words so far as the printing of public documents was concerned, or whether the former usage of the Government should be followed. It was the judgment of your committee that Congress was not in favor of adopting this alleged simplified form of spelling. That being so, the committee was obliged to consider the further question—the practical question—the question of expense and the effect of the lack of uniformity in the event Congress did not adopt the simplified form of spelling, or direct the continuance of the policy that has heretofore obtained in the printing of public documents. The committee carefully investigated the question of the practical operation of one department of our Government following one form of spelling and another department of the Government adopting and following a different form of spelling, and reached the conclusion embodied in this paragraph.

We were advised that the Supreme Court of the United States, while it had in part adopted the new form, did not do so in whole, for the reason that all quotations printed in briefs or in current opinions rendered by the Supreme Court or by the Court of Claims had to be printed in the old or usual form of spelling, the form in which these quotations were originally printed.

I was informed by a foreman of the Government Printing Office, when I inquired about the practical operation of this incongruous system, that the men in his division, when printing the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States and the briefs filed with the Court of Claims, were all in the air, for the reason that part of these briefs were printed in one form of spelling and another part in another form of spelling.

Now, Mr. Chairman, for these reasons the Committee on Appropriations felt that it was absolutely essential that Congress should take some action one way or the other, either adopt the simplified form of spelling, following the decree of the President, or declare by law that the form of spelling should be the usual form, the familiar form of spelling heretofore employed, and thus continue uniformity in the printing of documents that are printed in accordance with law or under the direction of Congress. Now, gentlemen, do not——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TAWNEY. I should like to have a few more minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. TAWNEY. If gentlemen do not believe that we should follow the former usage or custom in spelling in printing public documents and that we should follow the simplified form of spelling recommended by this board or ordered by the President, then let us do it. Let us have but one standard of orthography in the printing of our documents and all governmental publications. But unless we take some action documents that are printed under the direction of Congress and executive documents printed by authority of law independent of Congressional authority will have to be printed in accordance with two different rules of orthography. While the Congressional document, such as the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, will be printed in the usual form of spelling, the executive document will be printed in accordance with the decree of the President, and we will have nothing but chaos and unnecessary expense incident to the varying rules of orthography in the printing of Executive and Congressional documents. This additional expense results necessarily from the fact that in a document printed in the simplified form of spelling, when printed by order of Congress, the proof reading will be duplicated, necessitating a resetting of the type, or a remolding of part of the plate, if not all of it.

Mr. PARSONS. Why ought not the simplest solution be to provide that when an executive document is printed in the simplified form it should always be printed in that form? Then you would not have this expense of making changes.

Mr. TAWNEY. We would not have the expense of making changes, but we would have the Government of the United States put in the ridiculous position before the American people of having one document printed in one form of spelling and another document printed in another form of spelling.

If the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] insists upon his point of order because he is in favor of simplified spelling, he should follow his point of order with a substitute for this paragraph, directing that our CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and all other public documents printed by order of Congress or under authority of law shall be printed in the simplified form of spelling, so as to secure uniformity of spelling in the printing of all public documents.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is it not a fact that there is a prior act of Congress, passed several years ago, adopting the spelling approved by Webster's Dictionary and other standard authorities?

Mr. TAWNEY. I have been investigating that, and I have had the law librarian of the Library of Congress searching for two days to ascertain whether there has been any legislation upon this subject. He has not reported to me yet, nor have I, nor have a great many gentlemen who have examined the subject, been able to find that there has been any legislation upon this subject in the past.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I have seen it stated that there was a law passed several years ago.

Mr. TAWNEY. If there is such a law I should be glad to know it. I have not been able to find it.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. We have no new legislation on this subject in this bill. It is not subject to the rule. If the gentleman from Indiana wants to make the point of order at all, let him make it on the Executive order changing the common rule of the country. We have made no change. It does not lie at our door.

Mr. TAWNEY. That discussion will properly come after the point of order is made; but I appeal to the gentleman from Indiana, as a Member of this House, that unless we adopt this provision, or adopt the simplified form of spelling that has been adopted by the executive department of the Government, we will of necessity have chaos and discord and additional expense incident to the public printing resulting from one branch of the Government having its documents printed in one form of spelling and another branch of the Government having its documents and publications printed in another form of spelling. I hope the gentleman will not press this point of order.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that this point of order is not well taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would remind the gentleman that no point of order has yet been made. It has simply been reserved.

Mr. LACEY. I trust the gentleman will not insist upon it. I think I can give him a good reason why it should not be reserved. Suppose that an Executive order had adopted the phonetic spelling, with Mr. Pitman's additional letters which he invented. Would that not be an order requiring that the printing should not be in the English language as it is commonly understood? Is it not a part of the common law of the land to-day that all laws shall be printed in the English language? And is not a radical change in the orthography of the official documents and statutes of the country a change in existing law? In other words, this declaration in the bill is not a change of existing law, but is simply a protest against an order changing the existing law. This is a declaration of the existing law, not an enactment of a new law.

Mr. NORRIS. As I understand it, if the position taken by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] is correct, then this paragraph to which the point of order has been reserved is no legislation whatever. Now, if that be true, what hurt will it do? If it is not legislation, then there is no point of order, as the gentleman says.

Mr. TAWNEY. It is a legislative declaration of existing law.

Mr. NORRIS. If it is not legislation, then why not let it go out?

Mr. LACEY. It should not go out for this reason: Suppose there should be an Executive order requiring the laws to be printed in Latin, which was formerly the universal official language and which is now taught and understood in all countries. Suppose there should be an Executive order requiring the printing of public documents in one of the newly invented languages.

Mr. TOWNE. In Esperanto.

Mr. LACEY. Or in Volapuk. Then it would become a question of an Executive order against the existing standards fixed by unanimous consent and by the common law. In short, Mr. Chairman, this is simply a declaration of this House that the English language "as she is spoke, and the English as she is spelt," shall remain in force. A great authority on spelling, Mr. Artemus Ward, said concerning an early English poet that "Chawsir was a grate poit, but he could not spel." That was his only objection to Chaucer.

Mr. TOWNE. That objection is still good. [Laughter.]

Mr. LACEY. These new words are offensive to the eye. Gradually they grow up by custom and we get used to them. First we "endure, then pity, and then embrace." But to put them, by Executive order, into the laws of the land before they have reached common use in literature is getting the matter wrong end foremost. Literature may gradually change usage in orthography. It has long done so. But these changes evolve very slowly. Let this Congress put this declaration into law; it is not enacting anything, but it is simply protesting against the interference with the established custom as it has been followed for more than one hundred years. [Applause.]

Mr. SOUTHARD. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. LACEY. Certainly.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Then would the gentleman say that the provision that these documents should not be printed in Latin, that they should not be printed in "Artemus Ward spelling," would not be legislation?

Mr. LACEY. It would be simply a legislative declaration of what the law now is. It could be put in the form of a limitation on the appropriation that no money should be expended under any appropriation of Congress in the "Artemus Ward or Josh Billings spelling." Seriously, of course, there is progress being made in orthography. That progress has been going on from year to year. We have dropped the "k" out of "public" and "almanac," and the "u" out of such words as "labor" and "harbor." These have grown up in literary usage, and we have become used to them.

We must all recollect that this is not the American language. I received in my mail from New York this morning a request to sign a card agreeing to write the "national language" and to recognize a "national language" and to conform in all respects to the spelling as now proposed in the so-called "simplified orthography." I did not sign that card. I prefer the best usages of the writers of our world-wide language. This is not the American language. It is the English language, a world-wide language, which we have no more right to change by legislation in the United States, or, at least, no moral right, than they have to change it by legislation in Canada, Australia, or New Zealand. It is the New Zealand language, it is the Texas language, it is the New York language, and it is the Yorkshire language, and the orthography is as much a part of the language as the spoken language itself.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Will the gentleman allow me an interruption?

Mr. LACEY. Certainly.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. As I understand, there is no legislation on the statute book requiring you to spell in any particular way?

Mr. LACEY. No; it is the common usage of mankind, the common law of the land. I have been trying to explain that if somebody should see fit to print our laws in a foreign language that would be a violation of existing law, and to print it in a different orthography is just as much a violation, because the orthography is a part of the language itself.

Great rulers have not always been good spellers. Napoleon was noted for his lapses in spelling, which, however, were somewhat disguised by the illegibility of his writing. Washington was not always accurate in his orthography, and Andrew Jackson was very original and erratic in his method of spelling. The public will continue to look to the general literature of the English language for their orthography, instead of going to the Patent Office reports or the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Congress and the Executive Departments of the Government are not leaders on questions of literary taste and style. The business of Congress is to make laws, not literature.

Our President is a most able and brilliant man and has won a proud place in letters as well as in statesmanship, but his example in orthography has not thus far been followed by the press of the country.

There is a strong and natural prejudice in favor of good spelling which has always existed. The French worshiped Napoleon, but they did not follow his example in orthography. The Democracy voted for Jackson with great enthusiasm, but his lapses in spelling were not adopted by his admirers.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then the gentleman is denying the President the right to spell his message to Congress as he pleases.

Mr. LACEY. He can spell it in any way he wants to, but when Congress prints it we should print it in the usual and accepted orthography.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Is not that taking away a privilege of the President?

Mr. LACEY. It is not. My friend from Alabama can write a letter to his grandchild or to his best girl and spell it in any way he pleases. That is a personal privilege. He can speak in the sign language, but when it comes to printing public documents, the laws of the land, or the records of Congress there is only one language to print them in, and that is the English language, and the usually accepted spelling is a part of that language which, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me, is a part of a common law, and that the reservation of the point of order has no foundation within the rules of the House.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I will address myself to the point of order very briefly. I desire to say a few words only on the wisdom of this paragraph and on the policy of this kind of legislation. I do not believe, as a matter of general policy, that the standard of orthography ought to be established by act of legislation. The tendency of a fixed standard is to retard that evolutional reform in spelling that I think every person acquainted with the language and its orthography should welcome. My judgment is that if Congress enacts a law fixing a legislative standard of orthography, it would seriously retard that gradual reform in orthography that is going on all the time. The effect of this proposition would not be to establish uniformity.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes.

Mr. TAWNEY. Does the gentleman pretend to say that this paragraph fixes a standard of orthography in the publication of public documents?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That is its purpose.

Mr. TAWNEY. Well, let us assume that that is so, for the sake of argument. Has Congress any less power in that regard than has the Chief Executive?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It is not a question of power. I am discussing it as a question of policy.

Mr. TAWNEY. Is it not a fact that that will be the effect of the Executive order of the President——

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That is a different proposition.

Mr. TAWNEY. If we adopt it?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. This House is not responsible for an order of the Executive on the question of simplified spelling. It carries no responsibility for such an order, but the effect of the Executive order would be to establish or promote reform and to establish uniformity. The standard we fix here gives rather a large latitude, and there still may be two or three ways of spelling several hundred words.

Mr. LITTAUER. Well, but it admits of progression.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It very likely admits of progression, but its moral effect will be to retard progress and reform. Scholars and authors would naturally observe the standard of spelling that has legislative sanction, the standard that is fixed by legislative action, and I think it would very seriously retard progress along proper lines.

Now, in relation to the responsibility for insisting upon the point of order, whenever a Member of the House or a committee seeks to introduce legislation in contravention of the rules of the House, of course it always goes by implied unanimous consent. I believe it to be the duty of every Member of the House who is not ready to consent to the legislation when it is asked under conditions that imply unanimous consent to make his objection at the time. Mr. Chairman, I have no doubt of the fact that this paragraph is subject to the point of order. It is new legislation, it undertakes to fix by law that which exists only by custom or in the discretion of the Public Printer. There is no legislation now fixing a standard of orthography for the printing of public documents or anything else. The standard of orthography now is a matter of taste on the part of the Public Printer, a matter of discretion in a large measure with him, and the effect of this legislation will be to limit and circumscribe that discretion, to direct and control in a degree the latitude that the Public Printer has under existing conditions.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask my friend from Indiana if he thinks the Public Printer would have the discretion to spell the word "CRUMPACKER" with a "K?" [Laughter.]

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I think he would. Names are only for purposes of identification, and as long as the purpose is preserved the object is secured.

Mr. LACEY. Would not that be changing a Member of Congress? [Laughter.]

Mr. CRUMPACKER. There is no law that fixes or limits the method of spelling, and the confusion that gentlemen talk about here is chiefly fanciful. I do not believe that the absence of legislation would result in any extravagance or confusion. There certainly can be no confusion of ideas, and the object of language is to convey our ideas. Nobody pretends to have any question about the meaning of the words if spelled after the reformed fashion. It occurs to me that there can be no doubt that the paragraph is obnoxious to the rules of the House in that it is new legislation.

Mr. JAMES. Would not the result of this legislation be, in case reform spelling is put into effect by Congress, that all of the schools throughout the United States would have to follow it?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Oh, no.

Mr. JAMES. And the result would be that new schoolbooks would have to be bought and placed in all the schools.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Oh, no.

Mr. LITTAUER. And new dictionaries would have to be printed.

Mr. JAMES. And new dictionaries.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. No; the people of each State could determine for themselves, and the people of the State of Kentucky particularly would, I have no doubt, resent the interference of the Federal Government and an effort on its part to establish a standard of spelling.

Mr. JAMES. But Kentucky, like every other State, would want to keep in touch with the National Government, and new dictionaries and spelling books would have to be put in all the schools.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I insist on the point of order.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I want to speak to the question of the point of order. As I understand the point of order, it is the claim is made that the paragraph under consideration changes existing law. What law? What existing law? It is one thing to make a statement of a proposition and it is another thing to convince an intelligent man that you are right about it.

What is the law that is changed by directing that the Public Printer shall print in the English language? Where do we get this English language from? From whence does it come? There is no statute, we are told, that directs that the printing ordered by Congress, the simple order to print, shall be printed in any given language. Then we will suppose that the Public Printer prints in Choctaw or in French, if you please, that very polite language, and spends a lot of money in doing so. Would he not be obnoxious to the statute for embezzlement of money, or, in any event, would he not be impeachable for deflecting the public funds for an unlawful purpose? Where does the law come from, then? What is the law on this subject? Does the gentleman say that it is necessary in order that there shall be a law prescribing that a certain thing shall be printed in the English language that at this year of our Lord that the enactment shall show "in the English language" or else there is not statute authorizing it?

Mr. TOWNE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNE. Is not the paragraph we are discussing on page 23 of the bill?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNE. And is not the substance of it in line 23?

Mr. GROSVENOR. It is.

Mr. TOWNE. Then is it not a double "skiddoo," and does it not go out as a matter of necessity?

Mr. GROSVENOR. The trouble about the gentleman is that that piece of brilliancy has been published in all the daily papers during the last week almost continually.

Mr. TOWNE. Then I am behind the time.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The gentleman has brought in something new, and that seems to be the order of this objection.

Mr. TOWNE. I wanted the gentleman's authority for it, and that is conclusive.

Mr. GROSVENOR. That is conclusive. I have been put on the list myself some time ago.

Mr. TOWNE. We hope that is not conclusive.

Mr. GROSVENOR. In looking around I see the gentleman in the same boat.

Mr. TOWNE. We have this difference: I put myself there and the gentleman was put there. [Laughter.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. That is the difference, and that was a violation of existing law. [Great laughter.]

Mr. TOWNE. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. GROSVENOR. In your case it was just a declaration of consent—unanimous consent. Now, if the Chair will give his attention I will come to the point of my argument. I was deflected from the course of my argument at a point where I was pointing out that the English language is the law of the people of the United States. It is not written in the statute book, but it is written indelibly upon the pages of American history and American life, and he who seeks to change that language in an official document will be compelled to change existing law. I take it if there were a provision in this bill that the printing of any given public document should be made in German it would go out of this bill upon the point of order. It would go out of it because it changes the law that is higher and better and more comprehensive and irrepealable than any statute that can be put upon the statute books, so I proceed to state that the law of our language is the English language. Now, then, if that be true; what does this proposed proposition mean?

Mr. SOUTHARD. May I ask the gentleman, would he say that the word "though," if spelled "tho," is not part of the English language, but if spelled "though" it is part of the English language?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I need not answer that question. It has no application here or pertinency to my argument. This is my argument, if the gentleman will wait a moment. The provision of this bill is a mere direction that in the use of the English language, which is the law in the Printing Office and all over the United States, the Public Printer shall be guided by the rules of orthography established, etc. Suppose that the Public Printer undertook to use a form of grammatical construction differing widely from that in common use among the people of this country, would it be a change of existing law to say when we send documents to him to be printed they shall be printed in the English language as it is to-day, and that is all there is in this paragraph. It simply says, "Conform in your printing to the established law of this country."

Mr. SOUTHARD. Will the gentleman tell us who is to judge of what the established authority is?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana first.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I desire to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that this paragraph fixes a standard as that fixed by certain dictionaries.

Now, I want to ask him if the standard is not that used by scholars and literary men throughout the country and if the dictionaries are not the compilation of that use? I want to ask the gentleman now if the language of the country is not such as is used by the best scholars and has been used by the best English scholars in this country in times past?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I think so.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The paragraph, then, denies the Public Printer the right to have access to the scholars?

Mr. GROSVENOR. What does the gentleman mean? Does he mean this mangled-up condition that you see comes from the scholars?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I mean in legislative literature, political literature—such scholars as Thomas Jefferson, George Washington, and John Marshall.

Mr. GROSVENOR. George Washington, it is said, could not spell anything. [Laughter.]

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I do not know. I mean the standard of spelling that was given the country from these men.

This paragraph would deny the Public Printer the right to spell after the fashion of Thomas Jefferson and John Marshall and of Benjamin Franklin, and the fathers of the country, and I think they were masters of English. They helped to fix the standard. The legislation limits the Public Printer to dictionaries of the country, which are simply the summing up or a conclusion of the authors respecting the standard of spelling taken from scholars and those that are considered authority on that subject throughout the country.

Mr. GROSVENOR. My answer to that, Mr. Chairman, is this: The dictionaries of the English language to-day embody whatever of change and method there has been in the English language from the days when General Washington wrote certain words and spelled them in a certain way, and Jefferson and Madison did the same thing, so far as I know. I do not know anything about that, and I do not think they have transmitted their orthography down to this period of time. But whatever there may have been in that, the present English language, which is the law of this country to-day, is embodied in the popular use of the English langauge, and is made apparent in the dictionaries of to-day. So that there is nothing, in my judgment, in that proposition. Now, then, what is this? It must come under the exact language of this objection; it must be a change of existing law or else it is not obnoxious. In my judgment, if you will allow me the suggestion, I do not believe there is anything more vital in that paragraph in this bill than though it had said "the Public Printer shall print the public documents of the country correctly in the English language." And I can not bring myself to believe that the House of Representatives is foreclosed from demanding at the hands of the Public Printer the execution of his duties and powers in this paragraph in the plain language of the country simply because the paragraph points out to him simply where he can find the standard that we insist he shall act upon. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, this question has lately been given by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] something of the turn of an international question, and perhaps it would be well enough for us to consider, before we go too far, whether we are liable to be embroiled with Great Britain on account of legislating a portion of their language out of existence or making changes in it which they may not approve. The language does belong, I suppose, to the English-speaking people the world over, as well as to those of the United States. Perhaps the people of Great Britain have a little advantage of us in the matter by reason of priority. The language was their language before it was our language, as their nation is older than our nation. I believe, however, that with the increase of the Navy that is going on we need not hesitate to make some changes on account of fear of trouble with Great Britain or of the consequences of that trouble. The fact is, I think, that the trouble will arise, if it arises at all, on account of legislation and not on account of the absence of it. It seems to me that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] was strangely illogical when he was advocating legislation upon the subject of the language, while those who make the point of order and insist upon it are merely standing upon the proposition that it is wise not to legislate upon that subject.

The discovery has been made also that to change existing law you must in form propose to amend some provision to be found in the law. I think these gentlemen, by referring to the decisions on this Rule XXI, will probably find that the making of new law is the changing of existing law. Whatever brings about a change in the state of the law, whether it be the putting in of a law that does not exist or the making of something new by the changing of something old, the change of existing law is effected within the terms, within the spirit, and within the purpose of the rule which forbids this kind of legislation upon appropriation bills. I think there will be no doubt left upon that proposition if the decisions under this rule be referred to, because I think they are abundant and convincing upon the point of a proposition to change existing law by making a new law.

Now, let us put it to another test. The President, by Executive order, has directed the use of the new spelling in executive documents, and has employed it in executive documents which he has sent to this House. Has he violated any law, or has he not violated any law? Is he a lawbreaker in doing that, or is he not? I am rather of the opinion that neither the Executive nor any of those who have followed his direction has been guilty of a violation of the law in adopting the new spelling. If he has violated the law, what law? Where is the law to be found? Is it part of the common law or part of statute law? In what book shall we read it? What court has pronounced a decision upon it? How are we to find what it is, and where it is?

Now, I think we may safely assume that this proposition is to legislate where there is no legislation; to change the body of the law as it now is, by incorporating something new and bringing it into use. If so, then this objection that is made, the point of order that is raised, is good.

Now, I do not for myself see visions of great difficulties that would arise, provided some latitude were given to people in office as well as people out of office with reference to orthography. There have been instances stated here of what would happen, and how bad it would be, and how unlawful it would be, if a book were to be ordered to be printed in the Latin, the German, or any foreign language. It has been stated and restated that the English language is our language, and that documents must be printed in the English language. That is assuming to argue a proposition which is not before the House, and has no existence with reference to this proposition. There is no proposition to have anything printed in any language except the English language; nobody proposes to have any foreign language substituted in whole or in part for the English language; but the only question is as to whether by act of Congress we shall fix the orthography of the words in which thoughts in the English language shall be expressed.

Now, suppose that a word were incorrectly spelled, contrary to the canons of authority, where it happens in a most important legal document. Would the effect be to destroy the validity of that document wholly or in part, provided it could be understood what the real meaning was, although the orthography has no authority to support it? Suppose I employ in a publication the words spelled in the new way of spelling. Does anybody suppose the document would be vitiated? And what of confusion would arise, and what of trouble about words where there is but a slight change in them?

The proposed changes in spelling are very slight changes; in some instances a change in one, two, or three letters; in some instances lopping off one, two, or three letters. Nobody need be troubled about recognizing the words, and nobody who has any knowledge of spelling the old way or the new need have any trouble as to the meaning of the words.

Now, all things have an individuality; why not in spelling as well as in other things? Why not allow a man in office or out of office to use some individuality in spelling? Why may not a man in a public document, which he has the right to send to Congress or to give out to the public, use his judgment and his taste in the spelling which he employs in the expression of his ideas? He has the right to choose his words, use his own judgment, gratify his own taste, and draw upon his own culture in the expression of his thoughts in what he esteems as the best English. Why circumscribe the form in which certain words shall be written or printed?

Talking about the confusion down at the Printing Office; there can be no more reason for confusion in printing our own spelling than there is in printing our own expressions in a given way that the man who sets the type would not adopt. Every man has his own individuality; has his own way of constructing his sentences; chooses the words in which he expresses his thoughts. Why may he not have also and exercise also his own choice, his own judgment, and his own taste as to his orthography?

Now, a thing that the Printer could wisely do, and might well do, is to follow copy, instead of himself putting up and establishing a standard of spelling. If anybody who has the right to send him a document to be printed chooses to exercise that right of choice in spelling, who can justly complain, if the document be so printed that everybody will understand it? And there will be at least the possible advantage, a practical advantage, not only of bringing into the language, but into general use in it, words that conform to the simplified style, and which in that dress would receive the approval and indorsement of the general public. Why bar the door of progress; why halt every step of individuality by legislative act?

This provision is objectionable, as suggested, in naming one particular dictionary as the standard, when some others may be as good a standard by which to test spelling.

The objection found here is not met fairly anyhow. The objection is that the President, by Executive order and by his own example, has adopted what is called the "simplified form" of spelling. Now, it is one thing, if you choose to do it, to enact a law to the effect that no official, by order, shall change the established form of spelling in any documents whatever or direct anybody else to do it. If that is what is intended here, why is that not attempted? If it can be done, why is that not done? This legislation goes far beyond the supposed abuse which it is meant to reach. The President has chosen to adopt the simplified spelling. The President has seen proper to direct various executive and departmental officers to follow it also. Now, with that as the ground of offending, according to the views of the gentleman on the Committee on Appropriations, they would nail down the whole language, fix, so far as they can fix, the entire orthography of their day and time against all attempts at progress.

Mr. GILBERT. I wish to ask the gentleman from Missouri, for my own information and for the information of the House, what existing law is violated or would be violated by the insertion of that clause in the pending appropriation bill?

Mr. DE ARMOND. The existing law, by virtue of which it is not unlawful for a man to spell words according to this simplified spelling. That would be changed.

Mr. GILBERT. Where is there any provision of the common law, or the statutory law, or any other law that is infringed by that clause? That is what I want to know. If there is any such provision, point it out to me.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I have already discussed that matter. The gentleman seems to hang up his parliamentary knowledge upon the hook that unless a proposition is made to amend some particular provision of law there is no proposition to change law. I have already been over that. According to my view, and a correct one, I think, and borne out by the decisions—many of them—anything in the way of legislation upon an appropriation bill which works a change in existing law——

Mr. GILBERT. Where is the change?

Mr. DE ARMOND. Wait until I finish what I am saying. Anything which when it becomes the law leaves the state of the law different from what it was before is a change of existing law.

Mr. GILBERT. Unquestionably; but that is the difficulty. Now, point out the change in existing law.

Mr. DE ARMOND. The change in existing law is this, as I understand it; and if the gentleman does not understand it that way, I should be glad to have him say so in so many words. As I understand, it is no violation of law to spell words as the President spells them in his message, where he departed from the general usage of spelling. Now, is that or is that not a violation of law?

Mr. GILBERT. Unquestionably not.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Well, then, it will be made a violation of law, so far as the Printer is concerned, if he follows that kind of copy after the enactment of this provision. Now, if that is not a change of law, what is it?

Mr. GILBERT. But the gentleman from Missouri has already said very distinctly that that pronunciamento or ukase of the President did not amount to a law. It was a mere personal privilege of the President, and the gentleman reasons in a circle when he comes back and says that to prohibit the enforcement of that personal predilection of the President is a violation of the existing law.

Mr. DE ARMOND. What I say is this, Mr. Chairman—and the gentleman admits that I am right about it—I say that the President violated no law when he adopted the new or simplified spelling in his message and in other papers and when he directed the people in the Departments to follow the same sort of spelling. I say that the Public Printer violated no law, and neither did any printer in any of the Departments, when he printed the words according to the spelling adopted by the author of the documents sent to him for printing.

Mr. GILBERT. Therefore——

Mr. DE ARMOND. That is true, I think.

Mr. GILBERT. Therefore, the order——

Mr. DE ARMOND. No; let me finish this. I would rather make this my way for several reasons; one, because I am in the business of making it, and the other because I conclude I am right and I conclude that the gentleman is wrong. Now, read this into the law, and suppose it is in the law, this provision that has been offered, and I ask anybody then whether the Public Printer, without violating the law, can print those words in the simplified spelling? Could he or could he not? If he could not, has there been a change made in the law or has there not been a change made in the law? That may be reasoning in a circle, but I hardly think so.

Mr. GILBERT. Let me ask one question, and then I will stop.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I hope the gentleman will not do that.

Mr. GILBERT. Does the order issued by the President change existing law?

Mr. DE ARMOND. I am not talking about the order issued by the President.

Mr. GILBERT. Does compelling the disregard of that order change existing law?

Mr. DE ARMOND. No; I have already said that. Saying a thing a great many times I do not think adds force to the correctness of it.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Will the gentleman allow me a suggestion?

Mr. DE ARMOND. Certainly.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Assuming, as the gentleman asserts, that the gentleman has the right to spell as he pleases, will the gentleman tell me by what right the President can enforce his idea of spelling upon the public official whom we call the Public Printer, and whose salary is paid out of the Treasury of the United States?

Mr. DE ARMOND. That is a question I do not care to go into. I was touching the edge of that question when the gentleman from Kentucky diverted my attention by the questions which he asked. I was saying that the President issued an order which, it is claimed, he ought not to have issued, and with that as the reason, or the supposed reason, for some legislation, the proposition offered in the way of new legislation goes far beyond the effect, or any possible effect, of the Executive order. If gentlemen wish to legislate on a proposition that the President ought not to issue such an order, and that he should be forbidden by law from issuing such an order, why do they not do it? They know and I do not know. They could state and I could only speculate. If the object is, as it appears to be, to reach the end by indirect means, by wholesale legislation, which, in my judgment, would be bad, it would seem to me to be better to approach their object in a more direct way, and to propose legislation which would be less harmful in its effect.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman from Missouri yield for a question?

Mr. DE ARMOND. Certainly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the gentleman mean to suggest that every time the President issues an order directing the performance of some act for which no authority can be found empowering him to issue such an order that Congress should pass a law saying that he should not issue orders which the law does not authorize him to issue?

Mr. DE ARMOND. No; I do not mean anything of that kind. I mean if gentlemen wish to forbid the Executive from issuing orders with reference to spelling and propose to make it a crime—that is, a violation of law to obey such orders—they ought to come up to the question and propose to do that. I am not proposing to do it. I am not urging anybody to do it; but in order to accomplish that sort of thing which I think it is unnecessary to accomplish, I am not willing to vote to padlock the language as these gentlemen by this legislation would tend to do.

Coming back to the point of order, it seem to me there can be no question at all about its being good. The law will be different, the law will be changed from what it is now if this goes into the law. Therefore it is a proposition upon an appropriation bill to change existing law by making the existing law something different from what it is now, by incorporating into it something which is not now in it, in form or in substance.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I have an authority which I would like to submit, if the Chair would like to hear it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The language assailed by the point of order is as follows:

Hereafter in printing documents authorized by law or ordered by Congress or either branch thereof, the Government Printing Office shall follow the rules of orthography established by Webster's or other generally accepted dictionaries of the English language.

That language is assailed by a clause of Rule XXI, which is as follows:

Nor shall any provision changing existing law be in order in any general appropriation bill, or in any amendment thereto.

The language of the provision I have read is either an enactment or it is a legislative construction of what we generally term the common law. The attention of the Chair has not been called to any statute upon this subject, and if there is any law upon the subject it is simply the law of usage or of custom. If it is an enactment, it is obnoxious to many of the precedents established in this House. For instance, it has been held that the enactment of positive law where none exists is a change of existing law within the meaning of Rule XXI. Again, it has been generally held that provisions giving new construction of law or limiting the discretion which has been exercised by the officers charged with the duties of administration are changes of law within the meaning of the rule.

Again, a provision authorizing or directing an officer of the Government to do things involves legislation. The language of this statute requires the Public Printer hereafter to pursue a particular line of action or to do things. It has been held that in the pension appropriation bill a paragraph proposing a construction of existing law different from that adhered to by the Department was legislation and not a limitation. Again, it has generally been held that provisions giving a new construction of law or limiting the discretion which has been exercised by officers charged with the duties of administration are changes of law within the meaning of the rule.

In view of these precedents, the point of order will be sustained.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lieu of the paragraph stricken out insert:
"No money appropriated in this act shall be used in connection with the printing of documents authorized by law or ordered by Congress, or either branch thereof, unless the same shall conform to the orthography recognized and used by generally accepted dictionaries of the English language."

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that amendment that it changes existing law. It contains legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has just ruled that the paragraph which was assailed by the point of order heretofore made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] changed existing law. Here there is a proposition, not to change existing law, but to attach certain provisions to an appropriation of dollars made in this bill—in other words, a limitation as to the use of the money herein appropriated. Very many precedents can be found sustaining this kind of legislation, and the Chair holds that this is a limitation upon the appropriation in the bill. [Applause.]

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment, and I would like to have the amendment again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

There was no objection; and the Clerk again reported the amendment.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to move to amend the amendment by striking out all after the words "conform to" and insert in lieu thereof the words "the language in which the document is written which is to be printed." That is, Mr. Chairman, I want the Public Printer to follow the copy.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the amendment by striking out all after the words "conform to" and insert in lieu thereof the words "the language in which the document is written to be printed."

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Chairman, if I may say a word in behalf of my amendment, we have heard some discussion here to-day in the way of freedom in the matter of spelling. My amendment will make it incumbent upon the Public Printer to follow the copy. If the President of the United States chooses to spell through t-h-r-u, the document should be printed in that way. If the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] chooses to spell the word plow p-l-o-u-g-h-e, then the Public Printer will be compelled to spell in the antiquated form of the old-fashioned gentleman who represents the constituency in the Northwest. In other words, let every man enjoy his fancy in spelling, from the President of the United States up to a member of the Appropriations Committee [laughter], and however he may choose to spell, let the Public Printer set it up as he finds it in the copy before him.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I do.

Mr. KEIFER. If I heard the proposed amendment to the amendment rightly, it would not require the Public Printer to change the spelling if it was misspelled. Is that what the gentleman means?

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Yes; it would mean that, too. I mean that the Public Printer shall follow the copy before him.

Mr. KEIFER. Then every man must have his copy followed as to the manner of spelling?

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Yes; in every instance.

Mr. MANN. I have no doubt that that would be quite convenient for Missouri generally. [Laughter.]

Mr. KEIFER. I suggest that the gentleman better change the form of his amendment and see if he can not use language which would slightly change it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I can understand how the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHACKLEFORD] possibly desires to have different spelling in every different district in the United States, but I can not understand how the Committee on Appropriations desires to make the confusion a great deal worse by the amendment which has now been offered. I rather sympathized with the committee in the proposition which came in in the bill, designed to have a uniform system of spelling in the Public Printing Office, but here is a proposition now presented to us which will require a very small portion of the printing in the Printing Office to conform to the old orthography and permit a very large amount to conform to the new orthography. Now, whatever action is taken ought to make it in the Public Printing Office so that there shall be some method of uniformity.

The objection which was made before was that when a document is issued by one Department and printed for the use of a Department, that would be printed with the new style of orthography, and then when presented at the beginning of the session to the House or Congress it goes again to the Printing Office for a new edition, known as the "Congressional edition," and that would require a new setting up of the plates and new composition, because it must conform to the old style of orthography. The original proposition was designed to do away with that confusion in order that all editions might be printed by the same method, but here is a proposition that makes it still worse. No one can tell, if this amendment becomes a law, just what will be printed with the new style and what will not be printed with the new style. There is but a trifle of public printing carried by this bill, and it seems to me idle nonsense for Congress to put upon the statute books a provision that a small portion of the printing done by Congress shall be done on one style of spelling and that all the rest of the printing can be done upon the other style of spelling.

Mr. OLMSTED. I think the gentleman is mistaken as to the scope of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, which I understood relates to all the printing authorized by law or by either branch of Congress.

Mr. MANN. If it related to all printing, the amendment would have been subject to the point of order. The amendment only relates to all printing authorized by this appropriation act.

Mr. LITTAUER. That covers the Public Printer's salary and everything that has to do with the Public Printer's office.

Mr. MANN. Not at all. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be re-reported to the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be re-reported.

The Clerk again reported the amendment.

Mr. OLMSTED. That relates to all printing.

Mr. MANN. Not at all.

Mr. LITTAUER. When you come to read that part of the bill which makes appropriation for the Government Printing Office you will see the limitation and——

Mr. MANN. Oh, the Public Printer is paid a salary irrespective of any printing ordered by Congress or by law.

Mr. LITTAUER. There is a limitation placed upon every paragraph, the Public Printer's salary, and everything under him.

Mr. MANN. It is perfectly plain, I think, to gentlemen who ought to be well versed in the construction of laws that fixing the salary of an official such as the Public Printer and then making a limitation that something printed in the Government Printing Office shall conform thereto does not affect the salary of the Public Printer at all. The salary of the Public Printer is entirely apart from the printing directed to be done by law or by Congress, and I have not the slightest hesitation in saying that no Public Printer will ever construe that he loses his salary because he follows his own method of printing.

Mr. KEIFER rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. MANN. I do.

Mr. KEIFER. I simply wanted to inquire whether this would not be true; that we would go on until the 1st of July, 1907, printing according to the President's order and then begin on the 1st of July, 1907, printing under the limitation of this clause?

Mr. MANN. If it had any effect at all that would be the case.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes additional.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Will the gentleman allow an interruption—a short one?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri for a question.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. If the gentleman has observed the reading of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, it says the Public Printer shall not print any public document sent to him unless that document conforms to the established spelling.

Mr. MANN. That is not what the amendment says at all, I will say to the gentleman——

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I beg the gentleman's pardon, it does say so. If the President sent a message in the reformed method of spelling, would it not be the duty of the Public Printer, under the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, to refuse to print it at all?

Mr. MANN. Now, Mr. Chairman, under the rules which have been issued by the Public Printer, and I take it that at some time or another, either by usage or by law, he acquired the right to issue rules, under the rules that have been issued and are published in the Printing Office Manual of Style, which has been furnished to every Member of Congress, it is provided that Webster's International Dictionary shall be followed in spelling and divisions, with a few exceptions; and various other provisions are made, because it is necessary in the Public Printing Office, as it is necessary in any other office, to follow a uniform method of printing, a uniform method of capitalization, a uniform method of division of words. But here we have a proposition now presented to us by the Committee on Appropriations, in its present form, which will require a certain method of printing in a few cases and permit a different method of spelling or printing in other cases. It seems to me that this is a matter that ought to be taken in charge, if there is to be any change at all, by the Committee on Printing, and I hope that this amendment, designed to make confusion worse confounded, will not get into the law.

[Cries of "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHACKLEFORD].

The question was taken; and the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment in lieu of the amendment of my colleague [Mr. BINGHAM].

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I call for the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is consideration of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED]. The Clerk will read the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting in lieu of the former amendment:

"No part of the compensation provided by this act shall be paid to the Public Printer unless he shall, in printing documents authorized by law or ordered by Congress or either branch thereof, conform in the spelling thereof to the rules of orthography recognized and used by accepted dictionaries of the English language."

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that amendment.

Mr. OLMSTED. Will the gentleman please withhold it a minute?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, I will reserve it.

Mr. OLMSTED. The amendment of my colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM], who is in charge of the bill, provides, as I understand it, that none of the money appropriated in this bill shall be paid unless the documents themselves submitted for printing conform to the orthography established, and so forth, and so forth. That would make it unlawful for the Public Printer to print the document at all if it were misspelled or if in any particular it did not follow the established orthography. I think my amendment carries into effect what was intended by my colleague, namely, that if the spelling does not conform, the Printer shall in printing it conform to the established printing; in other words, if the speech of a Member of Congress should go down and the typewriter or stenographer should misspell it, the Printer, under my colleague's amendment, would not be permitted to print it all in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman does not accomplish what he wishes.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I am of the opinion that the substitute submitted has less complication than the amendment offered by the gentleman, and I ask that there be another reading of the amendment which I submitted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to pass upon the point of order. This very question has been ruled upon——

Mr. BINGHAM. If the Chair is ready to rule on the point of order, of course I have nothing to say.

The CHAIRMAN. An amendment proposing to make the payment of salaries of certain officials dependent upon contingencies was held to be a change of law and not a limitation. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I desire to be recognized in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I would like to be heard in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the President issued an Executive order requiring documents to be printed in accordance with certain rules of orthography. The committee recommended a provision that might perhaps have obviated the difficulties that have followed that direction. This amendment will not do so. There are no appropriations in this bill for public printing outside of those that are made for the compensation of certain designated officials.

The language, the music, and the literature of a nation are among its most valuable assets; we should not attempt to make radical innovations in them. The language is continually undergoing changes. They are so gradual, however, as to become generally accepted without conflict or controversy. The President of the United States is recognized as a man of culture, a well and widely read man. So far as the documents that he himself prepares and sends to Congress it seems to me we should and well might be willing to permit him to use that orthography which, according to his standards and ideals, is correct. While we should not attempt to control his action, it is equally clear that he should not attempt to force his ideas upon those who are in a subordinate position to him. The President in his letter to the Public Printer said that if these words in the modified form were not accepted generally, if they did not meet with public approval, that the movement to have the new spelling adopted would probably, to employ the word that he used, be "dropt."

It seems to me that in addition to the opposition expressed upon the floor of this House to the enforcement of this order of the President, the fact that a number of distinguished scholars, recognized as men of culture, differ as to the correctness of the orthography of certain of the 300 words specified by the board of simplified spelling, that the board of education of the city of New York, among others, has refused to accept the simplified spelling, the President might well annul this order. Apparently it has not met with the public approbation that he hoped it would. Upon ascertaining the difficulty that arises from it, the confusion that it involves, the complications that beset this House, may he not well deem it best to rescind the order, and permit men who have, to say the least, some culture to prepare their documents according to their own standards of orthography. After this discussion he may direct the Public Printer to do as has always been the practice, unless it be insisted that some peculiar method of spelling be used of certain words that he ascertain as best he can what is the form used most generally and by the best and most generally accepted authorities, and use those forms in the public printing.

We have some obligations, Mr. Chairman. We should attempt to legislate in good English; we should insist that laws be framed in accordance with the rules of the best grammarians, and the words used be spelled in the generally accepted forms. Having done that, is it not going pretty far to say that this House should attempt to determine for the President, a man of culture, to what peculiar standard he should conform in the preparation of public documents which it is hoped will some day form part of the literature of the country? Scholars differ as to the correct form of certain words; he is sufficiently scholarly and cultured to determine his own form when using words the preferential orthography of which is disputed. I hope that this amendment will not be pressed; it will not accomplish what is desired. It would be better to have a round robin signed by Members of Congress and presented to the President requesting him to withdraw or to annul the order that he has issued.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, this incident shows the folly of attempting to legislate on an appropriation bill. The committee brought in here an amendment which I suppose was well considered, and which certainly was not as drastic as the one that is now proposed and not as far-reaching. That amendment very properly went out on a point of order. Now, the gentleman in charge of the bill offers this amendment. Under this amendment not a dollar of the appropriation for the salary of the Public Printer or of the executive force in his office can be expended for any printing whatever unless it conforms to the old recognized standard in spelling, or unless it violates, or causes him to violate, the order of his superior officer, the President of the United States. And under the rulings which have been made the Chair was justified in his decision. I remember a very able ruling that I myself made several years ago in that direction, and which has been quoted here a great many times since. The more it is quoted the more doubtful I am about the propriety of the ruling. [Laughter.] Yet it was an able ruling. It has been followed a good deal. It has sometimes been honored more in the breach than in the observance.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Will the gentleman from New York yield for a question?

Mr. PAYNE. With pleasure.

Mr. SOUTHARD. I understand that the Century Dictionary has adopted the new spelling. Now, if that is true, and supposing the Public Printer continues to use that spelling, if the gentleman should be in the chair and be called upon to rule with reference to this question of appropriating for the salary of the Public Printer, what would his ruling be, under this substitute?

Mr. PAYNE. That would be a matter for the gentleman to decide when he was called to the chair. The construction must be based upon the language of the bill if it becomes a law. The Public Printer must construe that.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. PAYNE. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

The CHAIRMAN. Before an interruption can be permitted, the gentleman desiring to interrupt must address the Chair.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. TAWNEY. I desire to ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SOUTHARD], who interrupted the gentleman from New York a moment ago, if he is aware of the fact that one of the publishers of the Century Dictionary was a member of the board on simplified spelling?

Mr. SOUTHARD. I was not aware of that.

Mr. TAWNEY. And that if action is taken by Congress adopting simplified spelling, it will not only perhaps lead to a republication of all dictionaries, but of all school books as well?

Mr. SOUTHARD. I am not aware of that.

Mr. LITTAUER. And that it would lead to a multiplication of sales of these publications in consequence?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman from New York, if this amendment prevails, would it be necessary for the Auditor and the Comptroller to read all of the documents issued by the Government Printing Office in order to determine whether the salary of these different officials should be paid?

Mr. PAYNE. Well, in the conscientious performance of a public duty possibly it might be necessary.

Mr. MANN. The law would require it.

Mr. PAYNE. That is something for them to decide. My own private opinion is that this amendment ought to be voted down and let this matter be referred to the very able and competent Committee on Printing, who are so intimately acquainted with the workings of the Government Printing Office, and who know so much about simplified spelling, or are supposed to know. Let them come in and give the House the benefit of their judgment, so that the House can act more intelligently upon the matter than we are likely to do this afternoon. This amendment, of course, will go over to the other body, and the other body will strike it all out probably or substitute something else for it. Then it will come back and go to conference, and the conference committee, consisting of three wise gentlemen from each House, will bring in a substitute in the conference report—something that nobody ever dreamed of up to that moment—and the report embodying their wisdom will come into the House without much time for reflection, and possibly less than a majority of the House will decide this all-important question. I call it an all-important question because it has rocked the Republic for the last two or three months. I have considered it a good deal like a tempest in a teapot. I have not considered it very important. I have not been able to get excited. Above all, I have not been able to get so indignant as some of my friends around me on this question. I can not work up any excitement on the subject. I have found that out of these 300 words I myself have, perhaps unconsciously, been using about 150 of them in my correspondence, and I never have been very severely criticised for my method of spelling—that is to say, the method used by my typewriter—and I will say that since I employed this typewriter I have been considered a pretty fair speller. [Laughter.]

In fact, I may say that I was a very good speller when I was at school. It doesn't make much difference to me whether you spell it "t-h-r-u," "t-h-r-o-u-g-h," or "t-h-r-e-w," it is all through the same to me.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the point of my remarks is simply this: It shows the folly of trying to legislate upon an appropriation bill. I want to press that home on the Members of this House, but more particularly on the distinguished gentlemen on the Committee on Appropriations, whose wisdom generally I commend to the House, and whom I am generally glad to follow most anywhere they may lead, if they only confine themselves to the legitimate functions of that committee, and satisfy themselves by bringing in an appropriation bill and not trying to put in limitations. Why, in the report I have here, what they call the original language in the act and a limitation, is purely and simply legislation and new law. Of course, they get this in here finally under the guise of limitation. Gentlemen, do not be so confoundedly jealous of giving the other committees an opportunity to deliberate upon the subjects which belong to them. Let them bring them into the House and let the House fully consider them, and when they have considered the momentous question as to simplified spelling, let the House decide it in accordance with the fitness of things and in accordance with eternal right and justice. [Applause.]

The question was taken on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM]; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MANN) there were—142 yeas, and 25 noes.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Increase of Library of Congress: For purchase of books for the Library, and for freight, commissions, and traveling expenses incidental to the acquisition of books by purchase, gift, or exchange, $100,000;

For purchase of books and for periodicals for the law library, under the direction of the Chief Justice, $3,000;

For purchase of new books of reference for the Supreme Court, to be a part of the Library of Congress, and purchased by the marshal of the Supreme Court, under the direction of the Chief Justice, $1,500;

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. What I shall say is not germane to this paragraph, but I wish to get some information from the Committee on Appropriations. I notice, in reading the hearings before the committee, that almost every Bureau in the Government has a separate library; that often in the same building, under the same general executive head, the various bureaus are all gathering together great libraries, duplicating one another and spending large sums of money, besides taking up room that is needed for other purposes. What I want to find out from that committee is what steps have been taken, or what steps they propose to take, to prevent the duplicating of books in the same Department under different bureaus.

Mr. BINGHAM. I will say to the gentleman from South Carolina that the committee has submitted this part of the report, which the gentleman will find on page 7, and he will find the amendment proposed on page 160 of the bill.

SEC. 4. Only such books, periodicals, and pamphlets shall be purchased out of any appropriation made in this or any other act for the use of any library or office or officer as are strictly essential to the technical and professional work of the particular Department, Bureau, office, or officer authorized to use such library or collection of books; and all books, periodicals, and pamphlets which now form a part of or belong to any library or office collection of books and which are not strictly essential to the technical and professional work of the particular Department, Bureau, or office shall be transferred on or before January 1, 1908, to the Library of Congress, except that books of fiction and belles-lettres shall be transferred to the Free Public Library of the District of Columbia, and all expenses of making this transfer, not otherwise sufficiently provided for, shall be paid from appropriations made for contingent expenses of the several Executive Departments or other Government establishments to which this section shall apply.

That paragraph will come at the close of the bill, and that is the proposition of the committee.

Mr. JOHNSON. I am glad the committee has taken some action in the matter, which I consider an abuse.

The Clerk read as follows:

Indexes, digests, and compilations of law: To continue the preparation of a new index to the Statutes at Large, in accordance with a plan approved by the Judiciary Committees of both Houses of Congress, and to prepare such other law indexes, digests, and compilations of law as may be required for Congress and other official use, namely: For one assistant, $1,800; one assistant, $1,200; one assistant, $900; two assistants, at $720 each; and $500 as additional compensation to the law librarian; in all, $5,840.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph just read in order to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill whether this is the identical provision of existing law?

Mr. BINGHAM. It is.

Mr. MANN. I do not quite understand the theory of authorizing the preparation of these digests, and in addition to those which have already been ordered by Congress, "such other law indexes, digests, and compilations of law as may be required for Congress and other official use." There is no end to that, if there is any authority of law for it; and if not, I insist on the point of order.

Mr. BINGHAM. It is word for word with the current law.

Mr. MANN. But current law is no authority for it in here.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. Will the gentleman from Illinois allow me?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. I assume that you have reference to the paragraph near the top of page 32.

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. The sundry civil bill passed last session had identically that provision appropriating a like amount to that appropriated in this bill. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that this matter was fully discussed last session and the work is now in progress. I understand that in a few days this House will be furnished with evidence of the progress made.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will pardon me, I have no desire to interfere with the work under way. I remember the discussion which took place in the House, but the appropriation here goes away beyond any work that is now under way, because here they authorize the gentleman in charge of these digests and indexes to commence any sort of an index, digest, or compilation which any official of the Government may ask for.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that this is the language of the former provision.

Mr. MANN. That does not make any difference. That would not authorize it in this bill, and if it was long before, it is better corrected before somebody makes use of the ill part of it. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, upon that part of the paragraph commencing in line 8, page 32, "And to prepare such other law indexes, digests, and compilations of law as may be required for Congress and other official use," on the ground that there is no provision of law authorizing this appropriation for that purpose.

Mr. LITTAUER. Will the gentleman reserve his point of order?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. BINGHAM. I will state, Mr. Chairman, that it is current law, and your committee regarded it as work in progress. It therefore comes under the rule.

Mr. LITTAUER. I would like further to state, Mr. Chairman, for the information of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that the very objection he has made to this very legislation was taken up in our consideration of this bill. This provision was added to the sundry civil act of last year. We realized that the language "required for Congress and other official use" was a very broad provision and might lead to any amount of extravagance. Yet it would be circumscribed by the amount of clerical force given to carry it out. Our committee attempted to limit this provision, but on calling upon the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD], whom I do not see here now, and whose proposition this was originally, he gave us good reason why at this time the working of this small bureau had better be permitted to go on for another year until we could find out just what character of digests and compilations might properly be called for. We submit here the same provision as is in current law, except that we have inserted the word "law" before "indexes," so that only law indexes and digests would be prepared.

Mr. MANN. Did the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD] have this particular language under consideration and think that it was necessary?

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. Yes.

Mr. LITTAUER. He had this particular language under consideration.

Mr. MANN. Then I am willing to take his judgment on the matter.

Mr. LITTAUER. With this language a very wide latitude is possible. Members might call for digests of the law in connection with their private work, but as long as we provide only a very small force and the present law librarian is in charge of that force, I do not think for the time being any unwarranted use of this privilege will take place.

Mr. MANN. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. LITTAUER. The committee intend next year to place this matter in an altogether better shape.

Mr. MANN. I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For furniture, including partitions, screens, shelving, and electrical work pertaining thereto, and necessary pneumatic dusting apparatus, $40,000.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HEPBURN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 21574—the legislative appropriation bill—and had come to no resolution thereon.

ALCOHOLIC LIQUOR TRAFFIC.

Mr. TIRRELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 5292) to prevent the sale of intoxicating liquors in buildings and upon premises owned or controlled by the United States Government be taken from the House Calendar and referred back to the Committee on Alcoholic Liquor Traffic, no adverse action having been taken thereon.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the bill to which he refers be taken from the House Calendar and referred back to the Committee on Alcoholic Liquor Traffic. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

By unanimous consent leave was granted to the Speaker to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of William N. Hanley, Fifty-eighth Congress (H. R. 18224), no adverse report having been made thereon.

ADJOURNMENT.

Then, on motion of Mr. BINGHAM (at 4 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Director of the Mint submitting an estimate of diversion of appropriation for certain clerks and employees—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting papers in claims of certain natives of Calapan and Baco, Mindoro, P. I., for property destroyed and confiscated from July, 1901, to July, 1902—to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting papers and a petition relating to request of Señor Casimiro Oria y Balbas for remuneration in recognition of his aid to the American cause during the Philippine insurrection—to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

R. 21678) to provide for the extension of time within which homestead settlers may establish their residence upon certain lands which were heretofore a part of the Crow Indian Reservation, within the counties of Yellowstone and Rosebud, in the State of Montana, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 5419); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 21202) fixing the time for homestead entrymen on lands embraced in the Wind River or Shoshone Indian Reservation to establish residence on same, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 5422); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. HOLLIDAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 21849) granting an increase of pension to John P. Dix, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 5413); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

PREVENTION OF COLLISIONS AT SEA.

Mr. FRYE. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 6855) to amend the act approved August 19, 1890, entitled "An act to adopt regulations for preventing collisions at sea."

I was instructed by the Committee on Commerce to ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of this bill. It is very important that it shall become a law at the present session. The International Maritime Congress several years ago met to consider rules and regulations to prevent collisions at sea. All the maritime nations agreed upon certain rules and regulations, and the United States adopted those rules and regulations by law, as it was obliged to do.

The fishing interests were not considered at that time, but since then they have been pursuing the inquiry as to what rules and regulations were required for fishing craft, and all the maritime nations have finally agreed upon rules and regulations touching fishing vessels. Therefore it becomes necessary that we shall unite with them, and the only way we can do it is by enacting into law those rules and regulations.

I will say in relation to the fishermen that circulars were sent to nearly if not quite all who are interested in fishing vessels, and nine replies out of ten were in favor of the rules and regulations as agreed to by the Maritime Congress. The only objection raised by anyone to them was the additional cost to the fishermen. That is a mere bagatelle, and it ought not to be considered in the matter of collisions.

I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

The motion was agreed to.

SENATOR FROM UTAH.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there are no concurrent or other resolutions, the morning business is closed.

Mr. BURROWS. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate resolution No. 143.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution indicated by the Senator from Michigan.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution reported June 11, 1906, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, which was read, as follows:

Resolved, That REED SMOOT is not entitled to a seat as a Senator of the United States from the State of Utah.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President, it is difficult to describe conditions in Utah and the surrounding country where the Mormons are in great numbers so that one not familiar can form an adequate idea of the situation.

Negro domination in the South would not be tolerated by the white man, and, finally, the entire North has come to sympathize with the white people of the South in their determination that the black race shall not be supreme in political affairs.

The same principle is involved in the contest which the non-Mormons are making against the political control of the Mormon hierarchy. It is almost impossible for one who has not spent some time among the Mormon people, and who has not studied conditions existing in the Mormon country, to appreciate the tremendous power and influence which the leaders of the Mormon Church have over their followers in all things.

The Mormon Church is a commercial and political organization essentially. The followers, for the most part, are simple-minded and industrious people, who are content to live on farms and eke out an existence for themselves and families. Their condition is better than it was before they joined the Mormon Church in Sweden, Denmark, or Wales, or England, or the Southern States, or the backwoods of Indiana or Illinois.

The leaders—and by the leaders I mean especially those who control the people in spiritual, temporal, and political affairs, who are the first presidency and the twelve apostles—are, with rare exception, bright and active men of the world, and Americans by birth. They are business men, and handle the church on business principles. Generally they are well to do, and some of them are rich. They live nicely and mingle with men of the world in high positions on perfectly easy and equal footing.

The church collects a tithe from all its members. Its members are taught constantly that the paying of tithes is a high duty, and that one can not be in good standing in the church unless tithing is paid freely and fully. When a Mormon does not pay his tithing cheerfully he is regarded by the heads of the church as a very poor Mormon.

They pay this tithe, or 10 per cent of all their earnings, either in money or in kind; for instance, if a follower has ten calves, but no money, he gives to the tithe collector one calf. If he has ten tons of hay, he gives one ton of hay; and in a great many instances a Mormon has no money, and so gives in kind, no matter whether it is eggs or butter or cheese or chickens, or what not. The tithe collector turns this property over to the proper officer of the church, and the produce is disposed of and is used for the benefit of the church.

If you take into consideration that in addition to this 10 per cent which every good Mormon must pay to the church he is also called upon to pay his ordinary taxes, as a citizen, amounting to from 3 to 5 per cent, you can easily see that the rank and file of the Mormon people do not make much progress toward material independence.

Tithing at the present time is being freely given, and must amount to something in the neighborhood of $2,000,000 a year. This tithing is paid to the high officers of the church, and there is never any accounting to anybody for its disposition.

Only recently a Mr. Smurthwait, of Ogden, Utah, a wealthy man, was turned out of the church because he undertook to enter into business in competition with the church. Before being excommunicated, however, he brought suit against the church in the court for an accounting of the tithings, alleging that he himself paid money to the church, and that he had a right to know what became of it. The subservient courts of Utah of course dismissed the suit.

The Mormons are urged to contribute to the building of temples, and apparently enough money has been collected for the building of these temples to have built a great many more than there are.

The leaders of the Mormon Church are engaged in business enterprises of all descriptions. The Zion Cooperative Mercantile Institution is a great business establishment, dealing in all kinds of articles which department stores would carry, and has many branches. The Mormons trade with the Zion Cooperative Mercantile Institution, and it is almost impossible for a non-Mormon to compete with the Zion Cooperative Mercantile Institution in a community where the Mormons are in the great majority.

The leaders of the church and those high in its councils are the directors and managers and controllers of this high commercial institution. The leaders are also presidents and directors of banks, mining companies, railroad companies, electrical companies, summer and bathing resorts, theaters, etc. In fact, the hierarchy and the church are controlling spirits in all sorts of business enterprises.

They are not made president of the church and apostles because they are successful business men and because they are presidents and directors of these various business organizations, but they become directors and controllers in these organizations by virtue of their being president of the church and apostles, and after they have been selected as president or apostles of the church.

The constant tendency is to make the church and state one, with the church in control. This has been so completely and so ingeniously carried out that it is impossible in any affair, temporal, spiritual, or political, to tell where the authority of the church begins or ends. It is impossible to separate the ecclesiastical power of control from the political power of control.

All authority in temporal, spiritual, and political affairs unites and is centered and is absolute and binding in the hierarchy.

The organization of the church is very complete in its arrangements. The power begins with and ends with the hierarchy. Nearly all members of the church are given some office and some responsibility, and there is an opportunity for advancement in all directions, ecclesiastical, temporal, and political, if the Mormon is obedient to his leaders and accepts without question their counsel. There are but comparatively few lay members of this church. The smallest officers, such as teachers, are selected by the bishops of the various wards. Commencing with the bishops and going up in ecclesiastical authority all the officers of the church are appointed with the approval of the president of the church. In other words, the president selects all officers of the church of responsibility. Commencing at the lowest of the officers of the church and going up to the president himself, you begin with the bishops of wards, who have jurisdiction over geographical subdivisions and locally are the recognized heads of the Mormons in their particular locality. They collect the tithings, settle disputes among the Mormons, look after church and secular affairs of the Mormons in their wards.

Each bishop has two counselors, selected by himself.

Next above the bishop come the presidents of stakes. A stake is a much larger subdivision of territory inhabited by Mormons. The president of a stake has two counselors, also appointed by himself. The president of a stake is the highest authority locally in the Mormon Church, outside of Utah.

Above the president of the stakes are about a dozen other officers, with different designations and different powers, until you come to the twelve apostles, who stand next in authority to the president of the church himself. All of these officers, including the apostles, are appointed directly by the president of the church, without consultation or restraint by anyone, or else, as in the case of bishops, they are approved by the president of the church before their selection can be made valid. In the case of the selection of an apostle to fill a vacancy in the apostolic quorum, the theory is that the apostles themselves fill this vacancy; but it is a fact that the president of the church claims that he received a revelation from God that some certain man shall be selected for this apostleship, and the apostles unhesitatingly accept this revelation and select the man named by the president of the church.

Ecclesiastical preferment in the church means opportunity for temporal advancement. The business, social, and political future of every Mormon depends upon his standing with the church. Every avenue is open to him so long as he implicitly obeys the counsel and does the bidding of the church, while every avenue is closed to him whenever he loses his fellowship in the church. There is nothing left for a Mormon who refuses to obey implicitly whatever policy the church may determine upon except to leave the church entirely and take his chances with the world, the same as non-Mormons do. For a Mormon brought up in the church to sever the ties which bind him to all his kindred and the associations, teachings, and trainings of a lifetime is well-nigh appalling. It means social ostracism. The pretty fiction is given to the Mormon people and the world that all these officers of the Mormon Church, including the president himself, must be selected by the people at the various conferences. This they attempt to prove from the fact that at these conferences the names of the first presidents and the apostles, the seven presidents of seventies, the presidents of stakes, and the bishops are submitted to the people and they are asked to "sustain" them by holding up their hands. The list includes a great many, of course, and I doubt if a case has ever been known where anyone of the 10,000 people gathered in a semi-annual conference has risen in his place and objected to "sustaining" any officer submitted to the conference by the authorities of the church. I doubt if any provision is made in case such a protest or dissent should come. It never was contemplated that any member of the church would question the divine right of the authorities to select these officers. I imagine that if anyone should have the temerity to object to sustaining an officer presented to the conference for their approval that such a member would have to withdraw his objection or else be disfellowshipped if he persisted in his objection.

You can imagine what complete domination the church has over its followers through this power of the president to appoint all the officers of the church by reflecting on the effect on the appointees their selection by the President of the United States has on them. As a rule, the President selects men to fill the Federal offices who have demonstrated their acceptance of the principles of the party of which the President is the head and who have been zealous in the advocacy of those principles. Whenever a policy for the party is announced by the President of the United States and his close party associates high in authority, these officeholders, as a rule, immediately become advocates of that policy. When you contemplate that these appointees of the president of the Mormon Church are not, as is the case with the President of the United States, confined to one party, but embrace members of all parties, you can have some faint idea of their subserviency.

When you take into account, in addition, that not only political preferment is involved in their acquiescence, but that every opportunity for advancement in all the walks of life are dependent upon their accepting the decrees of their leaders, you can begin to comprehend the tremendous power politically which this hierarchy wields.

The president of the Mormon Church, Joseph F. Smith, and the president of the twelve apostles, who is next in line for the presidency of the church, both testified before the Senate committee that they were living in open polygamy, in defiance of law and of the contract which they made with the Government when they secured statehood for Utah. More than half of the twelve apostles are admittedly defying the law and the Government, in that they are openly living in polygamous relations.

New polygamous marriages are continually being celebrated in the Mormon Church. It has been shown that apostles of the church have entered into or performed these new ceremonies since the manifesto of the church was issued in which the church agreed solemnly to suspend polygamy.

New polygamous marriages are not entered into so openly as in the days before the manifesto, and a different character of men are now entering into the polygamous relation. Formerly the poor and ignorant took plural wives, the same as those better off, and of a higher order of intelligence. Now, young men of ability are selected to enter into these relations. The brainy young men of the church are tied irrevocably to the church and made subservient to it through the polygamous relation. Whenever they contract polygamous marriages, they are without the pale of the law, and their only hope for protection is through this powerful church organization. It is a wonderful fact, and has stood forth plainly throughout all the history of the church, that the polygamists occupy the high ecclesiastical and political positions, and are the wealthiest and most powerful members of the organization in all respects. Under the present system, polygamous marriages are celebrated secretly, and for the most part in foreign countries or beyond the jurisdiction of the United States; for instance, a young man is to take a plural wife, he gets the consent of the authorities through his bishop, goes with his prospective wife to British Columbia, Mexico, or to some place on the ocean some miles beyond the United States coast, where the marriage is celebrated by some authorized officer of the church. Instead, as in the old days when polygamy was entered into indiscriminately, now the polygamists are selected, and in this way the practice is more insidious and dangerous than formerly, because a cult and aristocracy of polygamists are being built up within the church. Those in polygamy are in complete control of the organization now, and have ever been, and it is evident that under the system which they are building up now, they intend to remain always in complete control.

It is much more difficult in these days to prove polygamy or polygamous cohabitation than formerly, because now every means is resorted to to keep the facts concealed that anyone has gone into polygamy. There is no record anywhere of the plural marriages which anyone not a member of the governing body of the church has access to. It is impossible to prove a polygamous marriage because of the lack of power to prove by the records that a polygamous marriage has been celebrated. When children come as a result of plural marriages the neighbors readily understand that the polygamous relation is being maintained, and if the power were in the State to punish, convictions could be had for unlawful cohabitation. It would be impossible, however, to prove polygamy. In fact, when the Edmunds law was being rigidly enforced, while quite a number of convictions in Utah were secured under the provisions of that act for unlawful cohabitation, no convictions for polygamy could be prosecuted successfully because of the inability on the part of the officers to prove the plural marriage.

A national law, passed by Congress and approved by the President, giving to the United States authorities power to prosecute for polygamy would be ineffective, because there would be no possible way by which a plural marriage could be proved to the satisfaction of a judge or jury.

I desire the Senate to bear that in mind, because at some time in the future when I shall not be here this question will come up. The President of the United States in his message recommends a law for correcting evils connected with marriage and divorce and against polygamy. That is a Mormon suggestion. The leaders of the Mormon Church have asked me to introduce a constitutional amendment to that effect. Such an amendment would not be worth the paper on which it might be written. You can not prove polygamy against these people. If the Government had the power it could provide against plural marriages, but not against Mormons; and every Mormon here stands behind the recommendation of the President of the United States. You can not prove polygamy without proving the second marriage, and you can not prove the second marriage on a Mormon. Such marriages are celebrated in their endowment houses, no one being present except Mormons. The ceremony is performed by the high officials of that organization and no record is kept of it. In their testimony before our committee in regard to their plural marriages they could not even recollect the slightest portion of the ceremony. It is futile to pass laws against polygamy.

While thousands of convictions were secured under the Edmunds law, there were but four or five all told in Utah, Idaho, and elsewhere for polygamy; and in those cases such convictions happened where the polygamous marriage to the second wife, accidentally or through inadvertence, was performed before a recording officer. You can prove unlawful cohabitation, but no Mormon will ever support an amendment to the Constitution providing for the punishment of those living in unlawful cohabitation. You will be confronted with that. The defenders of the Mormons here, including the apostle Senator himself, who is on trial, and all those who are here through the votes and grace of the Mormons, will insist on the polygamous amendment, but they will be very strenuously against an unlawful-cohabitation amendment.

The Supreme Court of the United States has unanimously held that to prove unlawful cohabitation it is only necessary to prove that a man holds out to the world more than one woman as his wife. It is unnecessary even that she bear him children. That can be proved through circumstantial evidence, but you can not prove polygamy through circumstantial evidence.

I may say also, in passing, that unless you provide for the selection of jurors you can not convict; and when you come to the adoption of a constitutional amendment I beg Senators to bear that in mind. You can not, and never could and never did, convict a Mormon of any of these offenses if there was a Mormon on the jury. There is not a Mormon anywhere within the sound of my voice or elsewhere who does not believe, as firmly as any of you believe that which is most dear to you, in the divine right of polygamy; and with a Mormon on the jury you can not convict another Mormon of these offenses. In the early days, under the Edmunds Act, the United States marshal was granted an open venire. He selected his own jurors, and until he did that there never was a conviction of a Mormon for these offenses.

One polygamous marriage entered into now under the system adopted of selecting those who should go into polygamy, with great care, is more dangerous and more inimical, more subversive of law, and more degrading to womanhood than forty such marriages entered into indiscriminately in the past.

It is apparent to all close observers that the church does not intend to give up polygamy. It is plain, on the contrary, that they intend to establish it more firmly, and that they will openly proclaim it again as a divine institution so soon as they think they are in a position to do so.

Their every endeavor is to strengthen their position by extending their political control. They are all powerful in Utah now, and can control all the political offices, including Senators and Members of Congress. They are so strong in Idaho that no one can be elected to the Senate or House without their consent. This is equally true in Wyoming. They are becoming a large balance of power in Oregon, and when the Government irrigation enterprises are developed in Nevada and large tracts of land are opened there for settlement, they can and easily will colonize and control politics in Nevada.

It is the present condition and the future menace politically that the non-Mormons of this section especially protest against. The non-Mormons in all this region have the same detestation of polygamy that the balance of the country has, and join with the rest of the United States in their desire to protect and exalt womanhood and to enforce obedience and respect for the laws of the land. Those who have not come in contact with the organization, however, do not and can not understand the effect on our free institutions and to our system of government of this tremendous political home of the Mormon hierarchy. It is the chief desire of the non-Mormons in that section to make plain this close union of church and state and to arouse the country, so that through Congressional action it will come to our rescue and help us to break it down.

The lower branch of Congress refused to seat Brigham H. Roberts because he was a self-confessed polygamist. Roberts claimed to be a Democrat. He was a high official, and is now a high official of the Mormon Church, and stands higher in the estimation of that organization than he did before he was deprived of his seat in Congress. His highest allegiance then and his highest allegiance now is to the Mormon Church. Whether he calls himself a Democrat or a Republican is a mere bagatelle, and counts for nothing.

Senator SMOOT is not a polygamist, or rather no attempt is made to prove that he is a polygamist. He may be or he may not be. In his case this question does not particularly interest the non-Mormons who live in that section of the country. Senator SMOOT is an apostle of the Mormon Church. He is one of the body of twelve, who, next to the first presidency and in conjunction with the first presidency, are the controlling authorities of the church in everything, spiritual, temporal, and political. He would not have been selected as an apostle unless he was in full accord with the authorities of the church.

As I have indicated, obedience to the leaders, obedience to council, subserviency to the ruling authorities of the church lead to promotion in the church.

The fact that Senator SMOOT was steadily promoted until he was finally selected to be an apostle is proof conclusive that he is in full accord with Joseph F. Smith, Mr. Lyman, and his other brother apostles, who, by their own statements and admissions, are openly living in polygamous relations in defiance of the law. In addition to that, it is not denied, but on the other hand it has been sworn to by the president of the church himself, that REED SMOOT had to secure the consent of the church and of his associate apostles before he could become a candidate for the United States Senate. The president of the church gave his consent that REED SMOOT should be a candidate for the United States Senate. He did not give his consent that any other person should be a candidate for this high office. This consent was given openly and proclaimed to the people of Utah. There was no other candidate for the United States Senate at that election in either party, because it was understood by every man, woman, and child in Utah that, the president of the church and the authorities of the church having given their consent that REED SMOOT should be a candidate, it was the desire and counsel of the church to the Mormons that REED SMOOT should be elected to the United States Senate. No other Mormon dared to announce his candidacy for the United Senate after the church had selected REED SMOOT. It was useless for any non-Mormon to become a candidate against the candidate of the church. REED SMOOT, therefore, is clearly the Senator of the Mormon hierarchy, and is unmistakably the representative of all the Mormon hierarchy, and is unmistakably the representative of all the Mormon hierarchy stands for, and would do the bidding of the church as its Senator if the directions of the church came in conflict with the duties he has sworn to perform as a Senator of the United States.

I say that notwithstanding the fact that the Senator from Utah testified that if he were confronted with that problem he would go to some other country where he could live his religion, I insist that under the organization of his church he would do the bidding of the church here, and he would not leave the United States and go to any other country, where he could live his religion. He would live it here in the open Senate. If Joseph Smith should receive a revelation from God on any subject, this revelation would be binding on REED SMOOT, no matter what relation it might bear to the duties which he has sworn to perform under his oath to the United States.

It must be plain to anyone who has followed the testimony of the present case that the Mormon authorities constitute a band of conspirators, whose object is to set aside and nullify the laws of the land when in their judgment such laws are in conflict with the duties which they owe to their organization, and that this conspiracy aims to make the state subservient to the church and to concentrate in the hands of the church authorities the political powers which belong solely to the State. REED SMOOT is a part of this conspiracy as an apostle of the church. He is one of the head conspirators, and not only fully understands the object of the conspiracy, but countenances and encourages by his acquiescence and support the plans and aims of the conspiracy.

Non-Mormons in that section where Mormon influence is predominant believe that the separation of the church and state, the denial of the right of the church to dictate politically, and the breaking down of the church hierarchy in political affairs will have more to do with stopping polygamy than any laws which possibly can be framed or enforced against the practice of polygamy. So long as the political power of the church authorities is maintained and exercised, just so long will every avenue for advancement in all lines to the Mormon people be absolutely under the control of the Mormon authorities. Every incentive compels them, therefore, to accept the conclusion and the counsel of their authorities in every spiritual, temporal, and political matter.

The masses of the Mormon people do not approve of the continuance of polygamy and polygamous living, nor do they approve of the union of church and state and the dictation of the church authorities in political matters. These conditions are no more pleasing to them than to the non-Mormons. Their own individual ambition is stifled, and their independence of action in political and temporal affairs taken away. None would hail with more delight the complete abandonment of polygamy and the political control by the leaders than would the great number of followers of these leaders. Their lives are so interwoven with the teachings and the doctrines of the church, and they are so dependent in their every relation on the church organization, however, that they perforce dread breaking away from it entirely, and rather than do that, with all its attendant consequences, accept present conditions.

If the church authorities would give them absolute freedom of action, and would not, by their example and counsel, teach them obedience in political affairs and defiance of the law in respect to polygamy and polygamous cohabitation, the great masses of the Mormon people would quickly put a stop to polygamy, and would with vigor and energy exercise complete independence in all political matters.

It is my judgment that the masses of the Mormon people intended to live up to the promises made by their leaders to the Government when statehood for Utah was secured. They believed their leaders were sincere in entering into the compact with the Government that polygamy and polygamous relations would cease and that the church would not interfere in politics.

It is the constituted authorities of the organization that the Government has to contend with and not the masses of the people.

So long as polygamy and polygamous relations are openly maintained by the leaders of this organization, and so long as the ruling authorities of the church claim and exercise the right to dominate the State politically, just so long will polygamous relations continue, and just so long will the political power of the church authorities be maintained and strengthened. The followers and the great masses of the people will take the example of their leaders, and will be guided by their counsel in all things.

The hopes of the masses of the people are in the Government, and in them the Government has an ally in so far as their hopes and wishes will aid.

It is only fair, I think, for me to say—and I am glad the distinguished Senator from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] treated upon it the other day—that there is a branch of the Mormons, called the "Josephites," who ought to be separated clearly in the minds of all Senators from the Brighamite Mormons. The Josephites claim that they are the custodians of the church as it was founded. They claim that Brigham Young has interjected doctrines into the church which the Mormons did not accept in the beginning. At any rate, however that may be, the Josephite Mormons, with their headquarters at Lamoni, in the State of Iowa, and wherever they are, no matter in what part of the country, are among the best of our citizens in all respects. They do not believe in polygamy; they never practiced polygamy. They discountenanced it. They do not believe in church dictation in political affairs. They are the same as other church organizations, and to their religion no one has any objection. I am glad to call the attention of Senators to it, so that in the future we may not confuse the Josephite with the Brighamite Mormons.

I have in this brief sketch endeavored to convey an idea as to what the Mormon organization is. There has been no change in the spirit or intent of the Brighamite branch of the Mormon Church, to which Apostle SMOOT owes his complete allegiance, from its beginning down to the present day. Its methods in carrying out its objects differ from time to time and in different localities as the exigency demands. The Mormon Church is a government of its own in all things, and demands and receives of its followers their first and highest allegiance. Wherever it is sufficiently strong it completely dominates the State politically, as in Utah, and where it has a large minority of the population it dominates the State through its great balance of power, as in Idaho and Wyoming.

One of its chief tenets is the divine right of polygamy, to the practice of which it has clung tenaciously during all the years, and to which it tenaciously adheres to-day.

From its very inception this organization has been a menace to our form of government, and has been bitterly assailed wherever it has located itself by American citizens who have come in contact with it. There has been a perpetual conflict between it and the Government, with the exception of a few years following the issuance of the manifesto in 1890. I will refer to this later on in my remarks and give the reasons why there was a temporary cessation of hostilities between the United States Government and the government of the church during these years.

So opposed are the teachings and practices of this organization to the ordinary conception of what constitutes American citizenship and so offensive have been its practices that every President of the United States, from Buchanan down to McKinley, has called attention in his messages to Congress to the necessity for the most stringent legislation in restraint of their treasonable and obnoxious practices.

I should like to read the messages of Presidents Buchanan, Grant, Hayes, Garfield, Arthur, and Cleveland (during his first term), but, with the consent of the Senate, will content myself by having them made a part of my argument.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the matter referred to by the Senator from Idaho will be printed in the RECORD as part of his remarks.

The matter referred to is as follows:

EXTRACT FROM FIRST ANNUAL MESSAGE OF PRESIDENT BUCHANAN.

A Territorial government was established for Utah by act of Congress approved the 9th September, 1850, and the Constitution and laws of the United States were thereby extended over it "so far as the same or any provisions thereof may be applicable." This act provided for the appointment by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, of a governor (who was to be ex officio superintendent of Indian affairs), a secretary, three judges of the supreme court, a marshal, and a district attorney. Subsequent acts provided for the appointment of the officers necessary to extend our land and our Indian system over the Territory. Brigham Young was appointed the first governor on the 20th September, 1850, and has held the office ever since. Whilst Governor Young has been both governor and superintendent of Indian affairs throughout this period, he has been at the same time the head of the church called the Latter-Day Saints, and professes to govern its members and dispose of their property by direct inspiration and authority from the Almighty. His power has been, therefore, absolute over both church and state.

The people of Utah almost exclusively belong to this church, and believing with a fanatical spirit that he is governor of the Territory by divine appointment, they obey his commands as if these were direct revelations from heaven. If, therefore, he chooses that his government shall come into collision with the Government of the United States, the members of the Mormon Church will yield implicit obedience to his will. Unfortunately, existing facts leave but little doubt that such is his determination. Without entering upon a minute history of occurrences, it is sufficient to say that all the officers of the United States, judicial and executive, with the single exception of two Indian agents, have found it necessary for their own personal safety to withdraw from the Territory, and there no longer remains any government in Utah but the despotism of Brigham Young. This being the condition of affairs in the Territory, I could not mistake the path of duty. As Chief Executive Magistrate I was bound to restore the supremacy of the Constitution and laws within its limits. In order to effect this purpose I appointed a new governor and other Federal officers for Utah and sent with them a military force for their protection and to aid as a posse comitatus in case of need in the execution of the laws.

With the religious opinions of the Mormons, as long as they remain mere opinions, however deplorable in themselves and revolting to the moral and religious sentiment of all Christendom, I had no right to interfere. Actions alone, when in violation of the Constitution and laws of the United States, become the legitimate subjects for the jurisdiction of a civil magistrate. My instructions to Governor Cumming have therefore been framed in strict accordance with these principles. At their date a hope was indulged that no necessity might exist for employing the military in restoring and maintaining the authority of the law, but this hope has now vanished. Governor Young has by proclamation declared his determination to maintain his power by force, and has already committed acts of hostility against the United States. Unless he should retrace his steps the Territory of Utah will be in a state of open rebellion. He has committed these acts of hostility notwithstanding Major Van Vliet, an officer of the Army, sent to Utah by the commanding general to purchase provisions for the troops, had given him the strongest assurances of the peaceful intentions of the Government, and that the troops would only be employed as a posse comitatus when called on by the civil authorities to aid in the execution of the laws.

There is reason to believe that Governor Young has long contemplated this result. He knows that the continuance of his despotic power depends upon the exclusion of all settlers from the Territory except those who will acknowledge his divine mission and implicitly obey his will, and that an enlightened public opinion there would soon prostrate institutions at war with the laws both of God and man. He has, therefore, for several years, in order to maintain his independence, been industriously employed in collecting and fabricating arms and munitions of war and in disciplining the Mormons for military affairs. As superintendent of Indian affairs he has had an opportunity of tampering with the Indian tribes and exciting their hostile feelings against the United States. This, according to our information, he has accomplished in regard to some of these tribes, while others have remained true to their allegiance and have communicated his intrigues to our Indian agents. He has laid in a store of provisions for three years, which in case of necessity, as he informed Major Van Vliet, he will conceal "and then take to the mountains and bid defiance to all the powers of the Government."

A great part of all of this may be idle boasting, but yet no wise government will lightly estimate the efforts which may be inspired by such frenzied fanaticism as exists among the Mormons in Utah. This is the first rebellion which has existed in our Territories, and humanity itself requires that we shall put it down in such a manner that it shall be the last. To trifle with it would be to encourage it and to render it formidable. We ought to go there with such an imposing force as to convince these deluded people that resistance would be in vain, and thus spare the effusion of blood. We can in this manner best convince them that we are their friends, not their enemies. In order to accomplish this object, it will be necessary, according to the estimate of the War Department, to raise four additional regiments, and this I earnestly recommend to Congress. At the present moment of depression in the revenues of the country I am sorry to be obliged to recommend such a measure; but I feel confident of the support of Congress, cost what it may, in suppressing the insurrection and in restoring and maintaining the sovereignty of the Constitution and laws over the Territory of Utah.

EXTRACT FROM THIRD ANNUAL MESSAGE OF PRESIDENT GRANT.

In Utah there still remains a remnant of barbarism repugnant to civilization, to decency, and to the laws of the United States. Territorial officers, however, have been found who are willing to perform their duty in a spirit of equity and with a due sense of the necessity of sustaining the majesty of the law. Neither polygamy nor any other violation of existing statutes will be permitted within the territory of the United States. It is not with the religion of the self-styled saints that we are now dealing, but with their practices. They will be protected in the worship of God according to the dictates of their consciences, but they will not be permitted to violate the laws under the cloak of religion.

It may be advisable for Congress to consider what, in the execution of the laws against polygamy, is to be the status of plural wives and their offspring. The propriety of Congress passing an enabling act authorizing the Territorial legislature of Utah to legitimatize all children born prior to a time fixed in the act might be justified by its humanity to these innocent children. This is a suggestion only, and not a recommendation.

EXTRACT FROM SEVENTH ANNUAL MESSAGE OF PRESIDENT GRANT.

In nearly every annual message that I have had the honor of transmitting to Congress, I have called attention to the anomalous, not to say scandalous, condition of affairs existing in the Territory of Utah, and have asked for definite legislation to correct it. That polygamy should exist in a free, enlightened, and Christian country, without the power to punish so flagrant a crime against decency and morality, seems preposterous. True, there is no law to sustain this unnatural vice; but what is needed is a law to punish it as a crime and at the same time to fix the status of the innocent children, the offspring of this system, and of the possibly innocent plural wives, but as an institution polygamy should be banished from the land.

EXTRACT FROM PRESIDENT HAYES'S THIRD ANNUAL MESSAGE.

The continued deliberate violation by a large number of the prominent and influential citizens of the Territory of Utah of the laws of the United States for the prosecution and punishment of polygamy demands the attention of every department of the Government. This Territory has a population sufficient to entitle it to admission as a State, and the general interests of the nation, as well as the welfare of the citizens of the Territory, require its advance from the Territorial form of government to the responsibilities and privileges of a State. This important change will not, however, be approved by the country while the citizens of Utah in very considerable number uphold a practice which is condemned as a crime by the laws of all civilized communities throughout the world.

The law for the suppression of this offense was enacted with great unanimity by Congress more than seventeen years ago, but has remained until recently a dead letter in the Territory of Utah, because of the peculiar difficulties attending its enforcement. The opinion widely prevailed among the citizens of Utah that the law was in contravention of the constitutional guaranty of religious freedom. This objection is now removed. The Supreme Court of the United States has decided the law to be within the legislative power of Congress and binding as a rule of action for all who reside within the Territories. There is no longer any reason for delay or hesitation in its enforcement. It should be firmly and effectively executed. If not sufficiently stringent in its provisions, it should be amended; and in aid of the purpose in view I recommend that more comprehensive and more searching methods for preventing as well as punishing this crime be provided. If necessary to secure obedience to the law, the enjoyment and exercise of the rights and privileges of citizenship in the Territories of the United States may be withheld or withdrawn from those who violate or oppose the enforcement of the law on this subject.

EXTRACT FROM PRESIDENT HAYES'S FOURTH ANNUAL MESSAGE.

It is the recognized duty and purpose of the people of the United States to suppress polygamy where it now exists in our Territories and to prevent its extension. Faithful and zealous efforts have been made by the United States authorities in Utah to enforce the laws against it. Experience has shown that the legislation upon this subject to be effective requires extensive modification and amendment. The longer action is delayed the more difficult it will be to accomplish what is desired. Prompt and decided measures are necessary. The Mormon sectarian organization which upholds polygamy has the whole power of making and executing the local legislation of the Territory. By its control of the grand and petit juries it possesses large influence over the administration of justice. Exercising, as the heads of this sect do, the local political power of the Territory, they are able to make effective their hostility to the law of Congress on the subject of polygamy, and, in fact, do prevent its enforcement. Polygamy will not be abolished if the enforcement of the law depends on those who practice and uphold the crime. It can only be suppressed by taking away the political power of the sect which encourages and sustains it.

The power of Congress to enact suitable laws to protect the Territories is ample. It is not a case for halfway measures. The political power of the Mormon sect is increasing. It controls now one of our wealthiest and most populous Territories. It is extending steadily into other Territories. Wherever it goes it establishes polygamy and sectarian political power. The sanctity of marriage and the family relation are the corner stone of our American society and civilization. Religious liberty and the separation of church and state are among the elementary ideas of free institutions. To reestablish the interests and principles which polygamy and Mormonism have imperiled and to fully reopen to intelligent and virtuous immigrants of all creeds that part of our domain which has been in a great degree closed to general immigration by intolerant and immoral institutions, it is recommended that the government of the Territory of Utah be reorganized.

I recommend that Congress provide for the government of Utah by a governor and judges or commissioners appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate—a government analogous to the provisional government established for the territory northwest of the Ohio by the ordinance of 1787. If, however, it is deemed best to continue the existing form of local government, I recommend that the right to vote, hold office, and sit on juries in the Territory of Utah be confined to those who neither practice nor uphold polygamy. If thorough measures are adopted, it is believed that within a few years the evils which now afflict Utah will be eradicated and that this Territory will in good time become one of the most prosperous and attractive of the new States of the Union.

EXTRACT FROM PRESIDENT GARFIELD'S INAUGURAL ADDRESS.

The Constitution guarantees absolute religious freedom. Congress is prohibited from making any law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof. The Territories of the United States are subject to the direct legislative authority of Congress, and hence the General Government is responsible for any violation of the Constitution in any of them. It is therefore a reproach to the Government that in the most populous of the Territories the constitutional guaranty is not enjoyed by the people and the authority of Congress is set at naught. The Mormon Church not only offends the moral sense of manhood by sanctioning polygamy, but prevents the administration of justice through ordinary instrumentalities of law.

In my judgment it is the duty of Congress, while respecting to the uttermost the conscientious convictions and religious scruples of every citizen, to prohibit within its jurisdiction all criminal practices, especially of that class which destroy the family relations and endanger social order. Nor can any ecclesiastical organization be safely permitted to usurp in the smallest degree the functions and powers of the National Government.

EXTRACT FROM PRESIDENT ARTHUR'S FIRST ANNUAL MESSAGE TO CONGRESS.

For many years the Executive, in his annual message to Congress, has urged the necessity of stringent legislation for the suppression of polygamy in the Territories, and especially in the Territory of Utah. The existing statute for the punishment of this odious crime, so revolting to the moral and religious sense of Christendom, has been persistently and contemptuously violated ever since its enactment. Indeed, in spite of commendable efforts on the part of the authorities who represent the United States in that Territory, the law has in very rare instances been enforced and, for a cause to which reference will presently be made, is practically a dead letter.

The facts that adherents of the Mormon Church, which rests upon polygamy as its corner stone, have recently been peopling in large numbers Idaho, Arizona, and other of our Western Territories is well calculated to excite the liveliest interest and apprehension. It imposes upon Congress and the Executive the duty of arraying against this barbarous system all the power which under the Constitution and the law they can wield for its destruction.

Reference has been already made to the obstacles which the United States officers have encountered in their efforts to punish violations of law. Prominent among these obstacles is the difficulty of procuring legal evidence sufficient to warrant a conviction even in the case of the most notorious offenders.

Your attention is called to a recent opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States, explaining its judgment of reversal in the case of Miles who had been convicted of bigamy in Utah. The court refers to the fact that the secrecy attending the celebration of marriages in that Territory makes the proof of polygamy very difficult, and the propriety is suggested of modifying the law of evidence which now makes a wife incompetent to testify against her husband.

This suggestion is approved. I recommend also the passage of an act providing that in the Territories of the United States the fact that a woman has been married to a person charged with bigamy shall not disqualify her as a witness upon his trial for that offense. I further recommend legislation by which any person solemnizing a marriage in any of the Territories shall be required, under stringent penalties for neglect or refusal to file a certificate of such marriage in the supreme court of the Territory.

Doubtless Congress may devise other practical measures for obviating the difficulties which have hitherto attended the efforts to suppress this iniquity. I assure you of my determined purpose to cooperate with you in any lawful and discreet measures which may be proposed to that end.

EXTRACT FROM PRESIDENT ARTHUR'S THIRD ANNUAL MESSAGE.

The Utah Commission has submitted to the Secretary of the Interior the second annual report. As the result of its labors in supervising the recent election in that Territory, pursuant to the act of March 22, 1882, it appears that persons by that act disqualified, to the number of about 12,000, were excluded from the polls. This fact, however, affords little cause for congratulation, and I fear it is far from indicating any real and substantial progress toward the extirpation of polygamy. All the members-elect of the legislature are Mormons. There is grave reason to believe that they are in sympathy with the practices that this Government is seeking to suppress, and that its efforts in that regard will be more likely to encounter their opposition than to receive their encouragement and support. Even if this view should happily be erroneous, the law under which the Commissioners have been acting should be made more effective by the incorporation of some such stringent amendments as they recommend and as were included in bill No. 2238 on the Calendar of the Senate at its last session.

I am convinced, however, that polygamy has become so strongly intrenched in the Territory of Utah that it is profitless to attack it with any but the stoutest weapons which constitutional legislation can fashion. I favor, therefore, the repeal of the act upon which the existing government depends, the assumption by the National Legislature of the entire political control of the Territory, and the establishment of a commission with such powers and duties as shall be delegated to it by law.

EXTRACT FROM PRESIDENT ARTHUR'S FOURTH ANNUAL MESSAGE TO CONGRESS.

The report of the Utah Commission will be read with interest.

It discloses the results of recent legislation looking to the prevention and punishment of polygamy in that Territory. I still believe that if that abominable practice can be suppressed by law it can only be by the most radical legislation consistent with the restraints of the Constitution.

I again recommend, therefore, that Congress assume absolute political control of the Territory of Utah and provide for the appointment of commissioners with such governmental powers as, in its judgment, may justly and wisely be put into their hands.

EXTRACT FROM PRESIDENT CLEVELAND'S FIRST ANNUAL MESSAGE.

In the Territory of Utah the law of the United States passed for the suppression of polygamy has been energetically and faithfully executed during the past year, with measurably good results. A number of convictions have been secured for unlawful cohabitation, and in some cases pleas of guilty have been entered and a slight punishment imposed, upon a promise by the accused that they would not again offend against the law, nor advise, counsel, or aid or abet in any way its violation by others.

The Utah commissioners express the opinion, based upon such information as they are able to obtain, that but few polygamous marriages have taken place in the Territory during the last year. They further report that while there can not be found upon the registration lists of voters the name of a man actually guilty of polygamy, and while none of that class are holding office, yet at the last election in the Territory all of the officers elected, except in one county, were men who, though not actually living in the practice of polygamy, subscribed to the doctrine of polygamous marriages as a divine revelation and a law unto all higher and more binding upon the conscience than any human law, local or national. Thus is the strange spectacle presented of a community protected by a republican form of government, to which they owe allegiance, sustaining by their suffrages a principle and a belief which set at naught that obligation of absolute obedience to the law of the land which lies at the foundation of republican institutions.

The strength, the perpetuity, and the destiny of the nation rest upon our homes, established by the law of God, guarded by parental care, regulated by parental authority, and sanctified by parental love.

These are not the homes of polygamy.

The mothers of our land, who rule the nation as they mold the characters and guide the actions of their sons, live according to God's holy ordinances, and each, secure and happy in the exclusive love of the father of her children, sheds the warm light of true womanhood, unperverted and unpolluted, upon all within her pure and wholesome family circle.

These are not the cheerless, crushed, and unwomanly mothers of polygamy.

The fathers of our families are the best citizens of the Republic. Wife and children are the sources of patriotism, and conjugal and parental affection beget devotion to the country. The man who, undefiled with plural marriage, is surrounded in his single home with his wife and children has a stake in the country which inspires him with respect for its laws and courage for its defense.

These are not the fathers of polygamous families.

There is no feature of this practice or the system which sanctions it which is not opposed to all that is of value in our institutions.

There should be no relaxation in the firm but just execution of the law now in operation, and I should be glad to approve such further discreet legislation as will rid the country of this blot upon its fair fame.

Since the people upholding polygamy in our Territories are reenforced by immigration from other lands, I recommend that a law be passed to prevent the importation of Mormons into the country.

EXTRACT FROM PRESIDENT CLEVELAND'S FOURTH ANNUAL MESSAGE TO CONGRESS.

It also appears from this report that though prior to March, 1885, there had been but six convictions in the Territories of Utah and Idaho under the laws of 1862 and 1882, punishing polygamy and unlawful cohabitation as crimes, there have been since that date nearly 600 convictions under these laws and the statutes of 1887; and the opinion is expressed that under such a firm and vigilant execution of these laws and the advance of ideas opposed to the forbidden practices, polygamy within the United States is virtually at an end.

Suits instituted by the Government under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1887, for the termination of the corporations known as the Perpetual Emigrating Fund Company and the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints have resulted in a decree favorable to the Government, declaring the charters of these corporations forfeited and escheating their property. Such property, amounting in value to more than $800,000, is in the hands of a receiver pending further proceedings, an appeal having been taken to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. DUBOIS. I will read the second and third messages of President Harrison to Congress bearing on this subject. (Vol. IX, pages 118 and 206, Messages and Papers of the Presidents.) This is what President Harrison said in his second message:

The increasing numbers and influence of the non-Mormon population of Utah are observed with satisfaction. The recent letter of Wilford Woodruff, president of the Mormon Church, in which he advised his people "to refrain from contracting any marriage forbidden by the laws of the land," has attracted wide attention, and it is hoped that its influence will be highly beneficial in restraining infractions of the laws of the United States. But the fact should not be overlooked that the doctrine or belief of the church, that polygamous marriages are rightful and supported by divine revelation, remains unchanged. President Woodruff does not renounce the doctrine, but refrain from teaching it and advises against the practice of it because the law is against it. Now, it is quite true that the law should not attempt to deal with the faith or belief of anyone, but it is quite another thing, and the only safe thing, so to deal with the Territory of Utah as that those who believe polygamy to be rightful shall not have the power to make it lawful.

It is to be regretted that the wise and statesmanlike warnings of President Harrison were not heeded. Mr. Harrison said in his third message to Congress:

The legislation of Congress for the repression of polyamy has, after years of resistance on the part of the Mormons, at last brought them to the conclusion that resistance is unprofitable and unavailing. The power of Congress over this subject should not be surrendered until we have satisfactory evidence that the people of the State to be created would exercise the exclusive power of the State over this subject in the same way. The question is not whether these people now obey the laws of Congress against polygamy, but, rather, would they make enforce, and maintain such laws themselves if absolutely free to regulate the subject? We can not afford to experiment with this subject, for when a State is once constituted the act is final and any mistake irretrievable. No compact in the enabling act could, in my opinion, be binding or effective.

I will not read, but, with the consent of the Senate, will have inserted as a part of my remarks the manifesto of President Woodruff, in which he promises a cessation of polygamous living and an abandonment and giving up of that practice, and also a petition for amnesty signed by the authorities of the Mormon Church to President Harrison, in which they set forth that they will in the future cease living in polygamous relations, cease dominating the State politically, and beg the President of the United States for amnesty for their past crimes.

The papers referred to are as follows:

OFFICIAL DECLARATION.

To whom it may concern:

Press dispatches having been sent for political purposes from Salt Lake City, which have been widely published, to the effect that the Utah Commission, in their recent report to the Secretary of the Interior, allege that plural marriages are still being solemnized and that forty or more such marriages have been contracted in Utah since last June or during the past year; also that in public discourses the leaders of the church have taught, encouraged, and urged the continuance of the practice of polygamy.

I, therefore, as president of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints, do hereby, in the most solemn manner, declare that these charges are false. We are not teaching polygamy, or plural marriage, nor permitting any person to enter into its practice, and I deny that either forty or any other number of plural marriages have, during that period, been solemnized in our temples or in any other place in the Territory.

One case has been reported in which the parties alleged that the marriage was performed in the endowment house, in Salt Lake City, in the spring of 1889, but I have not been able to learn who performed the ceremony; whatever was done in this matter was without my knowledge. In consequence of the alleged occurrence the endowment house was, by my instructions, taken down without delay.

Inasmuch as laws have been enacted by Congress forbidding plural marriages, which laws have been pronounced constitutional by the court of last resort, I hereby declare my intention to submit to those laws and to use my influence with the members of the church over which I preside to have them do likewise.

There is nothing in my teachings to the church or in those of my associates during the time specified which can be reasonably construed to inculcate or encourage polygamy, and when any elder of the church has used language which appeared to convey any such teachings he has been promptly reproved. And I now publicly declare that my advice to the Latter-Day Saints is to refrain from contracting any marriage forbidden by the law of the land.

WILFORD WOODRUFF,
President of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints.

PETITION.

To the President:

We, the first presidency and apostles of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints, beg respectfully to present to Your Excellency the following facts:

We formerly taught to our people that polygamy, or celestial marriage, as commanded by God through Joseph Smith, was right; that it was a necessity to man's highest exaltation in the life to come.

That doctrine was publicly promulgated by our president, the late Brigham Young, forty years ago, and was steadily taught and impressed upon the Latter-Day Saints up to a short time before September, 1890. Our people are devout and sincere and they accepted the doctrine and many personally embraced and practiced polygamy.

When the Government sought to stamp the practice out our people, almost without exception, remained firm, for they, while having no desire to oppose the Government in anything, still felt that their lives and their honor as men were pledged to a vindication of their faith, and that their duty toward those whose lives were a part of their own was a paramount one, to fulfill which they had no right to count anything, not even their own lives, as standing in the way. Following this conviction hundreds endured arrest, trial, fine, and imprisonment, and the immeasurable suffering borne by the faithful people no language can describe. That suffering, in abated form, still continues.

More, the Government added disfranchisement to its other punishments for those who clung to their faith and fulfilled its covenants.

According to our faith the head of our church receives, from time to time, revelations for the religious guidance of his people.

In September, 1890, the present head of the church, in anguish and prayer, cried to God for help for his flock, and received the permission to advise the members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints that the law commanding polygamy was henceforth suspended.

At the great semiannual conference which was held a few days later this was submitted to the people, numbering many thousands, and representing every community of the people of Utah, and was by them in the most solemn manner accepted as the future rule of their lives.

They have since been faithful of the convenant made that day.

At the late October conference, after a year had passed by, the matter was once more submitted to the thousands of people gathered together, and they again, in the most potential manner, ratified the solemn covenant.

This being the true situation, and believing that the object of the Government was simply the vindication of its own authority and to compel obedience to its laws, and that it takes no pleasure in persecution, we respectfully pray that full amnesty may be extended to all who are under disabilities because of the operation of the so-called "Edmunds and Edmunds-Tucker laws." Our people are scattered, homes are made desolate, many are still imprisoned, others are banished or in hiding. Our hearts bleed for these. In the past they followed our counsels, and while they are thus afflicted our souls are in sackcloth and ashes.

We believe there are nowhere in the Union a more loyal people than the Latter-Day Saints. They know no other country except this. They expect to live and die on this soil.

When the men of the South who were in rebellion against the Government, in 1865 threw down their arms and asked for recognition along the old lines of citizenship the Government hastened to grant their prayer.

To be at peace with the Government and in harmony with their fellow-citizens who are not of their faith, and to share in the confidence of the Government and people our people have voluntarily put aside something which all their lives they have believed to be a sacred principle.

Have they not the right to ask for such clemency as comes when the claims of both law and justice have been fully liquidated?

As shepherds of a patient and suffering people we ask amnesty for them and pledge our faith and honor for their future.

And your petitioners will ever pray.

Mr. DUBOIS. I will read the proclamation of President Harrison granting amnesty:

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 4, 1893.

Whereas Congress by a statute approved March 22, 1882, and by statutes in furtherance and amendment thereof, defined the crimes of bigamy, polygamy, and unlawful cohabitation in the Territories and other places within the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States, and prescribed a penalty for such crimes; and

Whereas, on or about the 6th day of October, 1890, the Church of the Latter-Day Saints, commonly known as the "Mormon Church," through its president, issued a manifesto proclaiming the purpose of said church no longer to sanction the practice of polygamous marriages, and calling upon all members and adherents of said church to obey the laws of the United States in reference to said subject-matter; and

Whereas it is represented that since the date of said declaration the members and adherents of said church have generally obeyed said laws and have abstained from plural marriages and polygamous cohabitation; and

Whereas by petition dated December 19, 1891, the officials of said church, pledging the membership thereof to a faithful obedience to the laws against plural marriage and unlawful cohabitation, have applied to me to grant amnesty for past offenses against said laws, which request a very large number of influential non-Mormons residing in the Territories have also strongly urged; and

Whereas the Utah Commission, in their report bearing date September 15, 1892, recommend that said petition be granted and said amnesty proclaimed under proper conditions as to the future observance of the law, with a view to the encouragement of those now disposed to become law-abiding citizens; and

Whereas during the past two years such amnesty has been granted individual applicants in a very large number of cases, conditioned upon the faithful observance of the laws of the United States against unlawful cohabitation, and there are now pending many more such applications:

Now, therefore, I, Benjamin Harrison, President of the United States, by virtue of the powers in me vested, do hereby declare and grant a full amnesty and pardon to all persons liable to the penalties of said act by reason of unlawful cohabitation under the color of polygamous or plural marriage who have, since November 1, 1890, abstained from such unlawful cohabitation; but upon the express condition that they shall in the future faithfully obey the laws of the United States hereinbefore named, and not otherwise. Those who shall fail to avail themselves of the clemency hereby offered will be vigorously prosecuted.

BENJAMIN HARRISON.

By the President:
JOHN W. FOSTER, Secretary of State.

Mr. President, I call attention to these messages of the Presidents for two purposes: One, to indicate the views of our former Executives; the other, to mark the contrast between them and the present occupant of the White House. Mormonism is more insidious, more dangerous, and a greater menace to our Government and civilization to-day than it was at any particular period when these messages were addressed to Congress. Yet President Roosevelt does not deem the subject worthy of mention in a message filled with suggestions. A majority of a great committee of the Senate, after patient and exhaustive research, have reported that REED SMOOT is not entitled to his seat as a Senator. It was not a partisan report. It should not be a partisan subject. No President heretofore has made it a matter of partisan politics. President Roosevelt has.

Mr. President, I can not help but think that my position would be similar to that of a Senator from the South if he were asked to make a plea against negro domination in the South to an audience having the power to grant him relief, but which was ignorant of the subject in its detail. I imagine if I were a Senator from the State of Mississippi and were called upon to plead for the American white citizenship of the South to a body powerful enough to grant relief, I would confine myself to the State of Mississippi, because negro domination in Mississippi is the same as negro domination in North Carolina or elsewhere.

I should like to make an impression on the Senate and the country, because I stand as the last representative of the American citizenship of the Rocky Mountain country opposed to the domination of the Mormon hierarchy in our politics; and I think perhaps it would be as well for me to do as I imagine I would do if I were from the South. I have lived among these people for a quarter of a century, for more than twenty-five years. I went there from Illinois, after having been graduated from an eastern college. I knew nothing of the Mormons. My lot fell there. My life has been spent there. Mormons everywhere are the same, and perhaps I had better tell you of conditions as they have been and now are in Idaho rather than to deliver a thesis on the Mormon question.

When, in 1880, I went to Blackfoot, where I now live, the polygamists were on all sides. They held the high church positions, the high official positions. No one could be preferred, either ecclesiastically or politically, unless he were a polygamist. There were no laws on the statute books then by which they could be punished, and I am sorry to say that in my State—Idaho—there are now no laws on our statute books by which they can be punished there. That has been my contention in my State—that we pass laws; but we can not; we are powerless.

That entire western country was divided into Territories in those days—Montana, Utah, Idaho, Wyoming, Washington, the Dakotas. We had no Senators or Representatives in Congress then. If we had none now we would put an end to this question, as we did then, because then so flagrant had become the practices of this organization that the prayers and entreaties which went up from that western country finally reached your ears here in the East, penetrated your minds, and in March, 1882, Congress passed the Edmunds Act, which provided for the punishment of those living in unlawful cohabitation.

I had much to do with the enforcement of that act. Under it hundreds and thousands of Mormons were sent to the penitentiary for unlawful cohabitation, hundreds of them in southeastern Idaho. In no case did a judge ever sentence a convicted Mormon until he asked him the question, "Will you, in the future, agree to obey the laws of your country?" If the convicted one said, "I will," the judge allowed him to go free on his own parole. But in no instance did one of these convicted Mormons agree that in the future he would obey the laws of his country. The Mormons are very technical, and perhaps their defenders will be as technical; so I will qualify that statement by saying Bishop Sharp, in Utah, did agree to obey the laws of the country, and he was removed from office and pursued by the church in consequence thereof, so that no other Mormon attempted it.

The political domination of the Mormon leaders over their followers was as absolute then as it is now. There was a little difference in methods. They were more open and brutal then. Now they are more covert. Now they employ men by making them governors and Senators and Representatives to say there is no such thing. Then they made no pretense of concealment.

Conditions had become such in Idaho that there was organized an anti-Mormon party in the southeastern belt of Idaho which embraced every non-Mormon. In a fierce campaign, because in that great county the Mormons and Gentiles were about equally divided, the anti-Mormons won. They sent six members to the Territorial legislature of Idaho out of thirty-six. The sentiment of the Territory had been aroused. The good people from the other sections stood with the anti-Mormons of the southeast, and they passed through the Idaho legislature a test oath, so-called, under the provisions of which no Mormon voted or held office in Idaho for ten years.

Neither the Edmunds Act nor our action in Idaho seemed to make any impression on the Mormon people. They were just the same. They were just as defiant. So in 1887 Congress passed the Edmunds-Tucker Act, which provided additional penalties against these people and, amongst other things, took away from them their vast church belongings. Think of it, my brother Senators. From the beginning to this day and now and forever wherever there are Mormons living with Gentiles there is this perpetual conflict; and in the past Congress took away from it its church belongings, its church property. Would the American citizenship there during all these years do all those things to persecute any religious sect on account of its religion? Would your fellow American citizens there be making this fight now on account of anybody's religion? Does it not occur to the Mormons themselves, or to you, perhaps, that there is something inherently wrong in their organization or else this conflict would not be perpetual?

Congress took away their property and put it into the hands of the United States marshal as a receiver. This did not seem to affect the Mormons. Congress contemplated other legislation. So that finally here they were, going to the penitentiary by the thousands; their church property had been taken away from them; they were disfranchised in one of the Territories; bills were pending in Congress, the Struble bill amongst others, to disfranchise them everywhere. They were sorely beset. Their leaders were in hiding or in the penitentiary. Their followers had left their families and fled into the mountain fastnesses to evade the officers of the law. It was a trying time. And in addition to that there was then what I am sorry to say I do not observe now—a movement among the younger members of the church against the leaders.

The younger members then said to the leaders, "You must give up this unequal contest. You can not carry on this struggle against the great power of the United States. You must live as other citizens live. You must obey the laws of the land. You must yield or we will be destroyed." Pressed on all sides, by the Government from without, by their younger men from within, President Woodruff, on the 25th day of September, 1890, issued a manifesto to the world that from that time on there would be no more polygamous living, there would be no more dictation by this organization in political affairs.

Unless one were in that fight in southeastern Idaho and in Utah in those days, he can not begin to comprehend or realize the sigh of relief which went up from our friends when that manifesto was issued. We had stood for ten years solidly arrayed one against the other—the Mormons there, the Gentiles here. We scarcely spoke to one another. We had no business or social relations. Life was hardly worth the living, so intense was the conflict. They were contending for what they thought to be a religious principle; we were contending for the sanctity and purity of the American home; and to-day in Utah and Idaho, in the southeastern part, the Gentiles are once more united, making a fight for the sanctity and the purity of the home, and once more they will win the fight.

We took the Mormons by the hand and said to them, "Let us forget past animosities; let us bury differences, and together we will live as American citizens and here build up a young Commonwealth to be the pride of our sister States." Every party hastened to remove the restrictions against the Mormons. I myself was the first. I think I can say—and I think my colleague will not charge me with egotism when I say—that at that time I was the undisputed leader of the Republican party of my State. I was its representative in this Chamber. I sent a letter to the chairman of our State committee on this subject, dated July 24, 1892, which I wish to read. I had just been elected to a six-year term in the Senate:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D. C., July 24, 1892.

HON. EDGAR WILSON,
Chairman Republican State Central Committee,
Boise City, Idaho.

SIR: Your telegram inviting me to meet the Republican editors of the State on August 1 to consult with them regarding plans and measures and policies which will best tend to maintain the supremacy of Republican principles is at hand.

There is a local question still with us and with which our party has contended unitedly and aggressively for many years. I refer to the Mormons. I would like to be with you all to exchange views fairly and freely in regard to it. There is a law on our statute books which disfranchises them. So long as it remains there it is the duty of every good citizen to see that it is obeyed. The Mormons themselves will be quick to recognize the absolute necessity for this if, as they claim, they are now law-abiding citizens in every sense of the word.

Bad laws should be repealed. Laws which have been enacted to cure certain evils and which are harsh in their provisions, and in their workings make hardships for individuals, should likewise be promptly repealed when they have served their purpose and have cured the evils which they are enacted to correct. The Republican party has always been the party of liberty and progress, and it is its boast that it guarantees a free ballot and a fair count to every citizen, however humble. The course of our party on the Mormon question in Idaho in the past is one of which we may all feel justly proud. We made it a question of party fealty that its members should demand that the Mormons should give up polygamy and that the leaders of the Mormon Church should not exercise political control over their followers. Our party demanded that there should be no union of church and state, and that the individual members of the Mormon Church should be allowed to exercise, untrammeled, perfect freedom of action in all political affairs. The people of the State sustained our party in this position. The Mormons have acknowledged that we were right by openly and repeatedly proclaiming that they have abandoned polygamy and that their leaders no longer attempt nor will they attempt to use their positions to influence the judgment of their followers in political matters. If this is so, if polygamy has been given up for all time, if members of the Mormon Church are taking sides with the different parties according to their individual judgment and as their conscience dictates, the Republican party should be the first to extend to them the right hand of fellowship and to use its best endeavors to make them feel welcome as full citizens in every sense of the word. Our party, as a party, can not afford and will not prosecute any class of men for past mistakes nor through prejudice.

Please extend to each one present individually my best wishes, and accept my sincere regrets that I can not be with you.

Yours, very truly,

FRED T. DUBOIS.

The church not only issued the manifesto, but a plea for amnesty was sent to President Harrison, signed by the authorities of the church, in which plea they set forth that from that time on there would be no more polygamous living nor would they dictate in political affairs, and asking pardon for past offenses. The authorities of the Mormon Church are twenty-six in number—the president and his two counselors, the twelve apostles, a patriarch, three high bishops, and seven presidents of the seventies, making twenty-six. But as a matter of fact, as was shown in the testimony, the authority is exercised by and resides in the first presidency and the twelve apostles. Every one of them signed this plea for amnesty, saving, I think, two, who were in Europe. They signed their names. These authorities have full control over their followers in all things. They speak for them, and when the president of the church receives a revelation from God it is binding on the church.

This manifesto of President Woodruff came to him as a revelation from God. That sounds queer in the United States Senate, but there is not a Mormon anywhere who does not believe that the president of his church receives communications directly from God Almighty—not one. In addition to that, when the president of this church receives a revelation from God and submits to the people of the church and they accept it, it is binding on them as a command from God. This manifesto received by the president from God Almighty was submitted to the Mormon people in conference shortly after its reception. There gather in the great temple in Salt Lake City twice in every year ten to fifteen thousand of the leaders of this church in their great conferences. At their first conference shortly after the manifesto was received it was submitted to the people, and these ten or fifteen thousand, speaking for all the people, with uplifted hands ratified and accepted the manifesto. And again, six months afterwards, in another conference the Mormon people accepted this manifesto which came to their president as a revelation from God. That is the record.

As I say, no one can understand the joy with which we accepted the changed conditions. The Republican party and the Democratic party in their first State conventions after the manifesto put planks in their platforms favoring the repeal of the statutes making effective our test oath, and in the legislature which followed, the legislature of 1893–94, the statutory provisions making effective our test oath were repealed, I think, without a dissenting voice. Gradually, too, since then all other statutes in Idaho reflecting on these people have been repealed. Gradually all your Congressional action has been repealed. The Edmunds-Tucker Act and the Edmunds Act were wiped out by statehood. You have restored to them their church property, and in 1896 we gave statehood to Utah, and it stood there as a sovereign State, with no law against it except those of its own manufacture and to be enforced by itself.

Things went along quietly after the manifesto and until statehood was secured for Utah. It was not long after that, however, before the signs became ominous, and I will tell you a few things which happened which have caused the renewal of this contest. It was none of our seeking; it was forced upon us by the church itself.

In the election of 1902 there appeared in southeastern Idaho a polygamous apostle, John Henry Smith, from Utah; a polygamous apostle, Mathias F. Cowley, of Utah, and a polygamous apostle, Francis Lyman, of Utah, all Republicans, who went among the Mormons and told them how they should vote. We all understood what it meant. That portion of Idaho was then Democratic. In the early days, when the Republican party was passing the Edmunds Act, there was not a Republican Mormon in Idaho; every Mormon in Idaho was a Democrat. There is not a Democratic Mormon in Idaho now.

I went down to one of the Mormon counties, Oneida, a Democratic county then, as they were divided. There was David L. Evans running for the State senate. His brother Lorenzo was chairman of the Democratic county committee. Both were Mormons. I met them. I said, "We are beaten; the church once more is taking possession of our politics." They said, "Yes, it is;" and David L. Evans, one of the brainest men of the organization, wanted to withdraw the county ticket; but finally he concluded to let it go through. Matthias F. Cowley, the polygamist apostle of the Mormon Church from Utah, was going into this county of Oneida, distributing the Republican ticket to the church people, telling them it was the will of the Lord, and that they must obey Him politically as they did in spiritual affairs. After that, of course, they were successful.

In the legislature following the election in Idaho of 1902–3 this same polygamous apostle, John Henry Smith, of Utah, appeared at Boise City to pass a resolution through the Idaho legislature for a new constitutional convention to take the test oath out of the Idaho constitution. He testified about it before this committee, and so did Gentiles. He went to the leading Republicans there. He went to Governor Morrison, the Republican governor. John Henry Smith himself testifies that Morrison tried to dissuade him. I do not know that it had any bearing on it or not. Governor Morrison was a worthy gentleman, apparently a good governor. We generally give our governors two terms. He was not renominated. The solid Mormon vote was against him for renomination. Whether it was on account of the advice he gave John Henry Smith or not, I will not say. The editor of the Boise Stateman testified before the Committee on Privileges and Elections that John Henry Smith came to him and said: "I want a constitutional convention to take the test oath out of your constitution." He asked, "Why do you want to take it out?" He said, "Because it is obnoxious to our people." He replied, "You can not take it out. The people of Idaho will not submit to it. You will destroy the Republican party if you attempt it."

All the Republican leaders apparently gave him the same advice, and they thought they had dissuaded him, because he left the city. But he came back in about ten days and he slipped so quietly a resolution through the legislature calling for a constitutional convention, the avowed object of which was to take the test oath out, that no one knew it. It was not published in any paper. No one knew that we were to be confronted with such a question as that for six or eight months after its passage, and when the attention of the people of the State was called to the fact there was a protest from one end to the other, so much so that the attorney-general of the State, in answer to a communication, delivered an opinion, which was published, that the resolution had been improperly passed and, therefore, could not be submitted to the people. The only thing that restrained them was the knowledge on their part that the people of Idaho were not yet sufficiently educated to stand for that; the Mormons must be a little more patient before they can lead the people of Idaho up to that step, because unless that provision was in our constitution of Idaho to-day we would be as helpless as they are in Utah.

I know the attorney-general would not have rendered that opinion except for fear of the consequences, because the attorney-general then was a Mormon. The attorney-general then was a polygamist, and I stated time and time again in Idaho without contradiction that the attorney-general of Idaho, three years ago occupying the highest judicial office in that State, took a polygamous wife while attorney-general, and we can not pass laws in Idaho to punish him.

To show the utter subserviency to the Mormon power and the care which they exercise for their material interests, the same legislature in Idaho of 1902 and 1903 passed a sugar-bounty bill, which provided for the payment of a cent a pound on manufactured sugar for the first year and half a cent a pound for the second year and a flat bonus of $20,000 for the sugar factories. It did not provide a bounty for the grower of the beet, the farmer. It gave it to the manufacturer, to the manufactured product, to the factory. There are three sugar-beet factories in full operation in Idaho now, one in my town, Blackfoot, with a capacity of 500 tons a day; one in my county, at Idaho Falls, with a like capacity, and another one in the adjacent county of Fremont, at Sugar City, with a capacity of 1,000 tons a day.

The president of the Mormon Church and the polygamous apostles are the directors of every one of these factories. So this legislature voted directly to the Mormon Church some three or four hundred thousand dollars as a bounty. They have put the Gentiles of that State to paying tithings the same as the Mormons.

The auditor of the State, one of the most capable auditors we have had, serving his first term, refused to pay the bounty when they presented it. The Mormons refused very promptly to renominate him as State auditor. The Democratic party of the State, however, called attention to these facts which I have narrated, and up to date the Republican party has not yet paid that bounty. But they passed the law, and it is there to-day. My judgment is that it is unconstitutional; but whether it is or not, the law was passed.

These were large incidents in Idaho. There were many smaller ones. At about the same time the apostle from Utah was elected a Senator of the United States from Utah. The right to his seat was questioned. An investigation was had. I happened to be a member of the Committee on Privileges and Elections before I knew there was such a man as REED SMOOT.

I was on that committee when his case came before it. I heard all of that appalling testimony which has brought the blush of shame to the cheek of every right-thinking and pure-minded person in the world. I heard it all.

There come times to you, to every one of us, in our lives when we pause for most serious meditation. We are confronted with our conscience. There is an easy way for us to go, but there is a conscience which says you must go the other. It comes to all of us in our lives. It came to me. When I heard that testimony and when these occurrences took place in Idaho I thought of the bitter fight of ten years of my early manhood. When it was finished I thought no power on earth could induce me to enter upon another such. I wanted to flee from it all.

On the other hand, there were the people of Idaho, who had honored me far beyond any deserts of mine for twenty years. For twenty years, no matter to what party I had belonged, they had made me their leader. They were there, those good men and women, to follow again in a fight for American citizenship. I had to quit or I had to fight. It was none of my seeking.

I heard that testimony. You are all familiar with it. I shall not go into it in great detail. The president of the church, the president of the quorum of twelve apostles, who will become president of the church if he outlives the president, and the first five apostles in line of succession to the presidency all testified that they are now living in the polygamous relation, and everyone of them had signed his name to the solemn covenant made with the President of the United States to the people of the United States, that from that time on they would cease these practices.

Some men undertake to excuse them because they are old cases of polygamy, entered into years ago. The president of the church testified, the head of the quorum of apostles testified that their living in the polygamous relation now was not contrary to the laws of God and man. I ask these apologists for these old polygamists, "Where is your sympathy for the children? They are brought into this world to carry through life the awful brand that they come here contrary to the laws of God and man."

It was shown in this testimony that several of the apostles have gone into new polygamy since the manifesto. It was proved that John W. Taylor married two sisters, he being an apostle of the church, at the same ceremony, in 1897, he having two wives at the time.

I might say in passing that it is very common for polygamous Mormons to marry sisters. They do it almost invariably if the opportunity affords; and there is scarcely a leader among the Mormons in Utah to-day who is not married to two sisters. Joseph F. Smith himself is. This John W. Taylor, who married two sisters into polygamy in 1897, was one of the authorities who signed his name to the amnesty plea and who was granted pardon by the President of the United States. Do you attribute to the apostle Senator from Utah so little intelligence as to think that he did not know of these occurrences, sitting as a brother apostle with Taylor?

Abraham H. Cannon, another apostle who signed this plea for amnesty, married Lillian Hamlin as his wife in 1896, and the ceremony was performed by Joseph F. Smith, the president of the Mormon Church.

I do not know how much testimony you expected the committee to wring from the lips of reluctant Mormon witnesses. The chairman of the committee, the Senator from Michigan, referred to the cases of Thatcher and Roberts from a political standpoint. They were candidates, respectively, for Congress and the United States Senate on the Democratic ticket, Thatcher having been nominated in the State convention. In the middle of the campaign the church issued a ruling that no officer of the church, from a bishop up, inclusive, could be a candidate for office without getting the consent of the church. Thatcher and Roberts were the most conspicuous Mormons of them all, the two most eloquent men of the church, and I think Thatcher was the most beloved man in his church, the most beloved of any who has appeared among them for twenty years, and the authorities evidently intended to make a lasting example of these two shining lights. They had a reconvened Democratic State convention in Utah, which undertook to denounce this action of the church. Thatcher published letter after letter and made speech after speech, claiming that as an American citizen he had a right to aspire to office, notwithstanding the orders of his church, and Roberts did the same thing.

They carried the controversy into the election. Their addresses appealed to the highest type of American citizenship and would have been a credit to American statesmanship anywhere. Both were beaten at the polls, the Republicans winning the election. Both were candidates two years after for the same offices, but in the meantime Roberts had recanted, had written an open letter saying that the church had a right to dominate him and all other followers in politics. He then asked the consent of the church to become a candidate for Congress. Consent was given by the church. Thatcher continued his opposition. The Democrats were successful, and Roberts was elected to Congress. The legislature was Democratic, and the Mormon leaders then took away from Thatcher his Democratic following, and finally had one Republican Mormon change his vote in order to elect some one besides Thatcher.

REED SMOOT in the committee's investigation was asked if it was necessary for him to get the consent of the president of the church to become a candidate for the United States Senate, and he said yes. Joseph F. Smith was asked if it was necessary for Senator SMOOT to get his consent, and he said it was. Some Senator, I think it was the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], asked, and the same question may occur to you perhaps, what would become of one if he would insist on running notwithstanding he did not get the consent of the church. That question was asked, I think, of Roberts, but, at any rate, whoever answered the question, whatever Mormon it was on the witness stand, he replied that he would be out of harmony with the quorum.

Now, it does not seem probably very dreadful to you, Senators, to be out of harmony with your quorum, but it is of considerable moment to a Mormon. Mr. Thatcher was out of harmony with his quorum, and after they had beaten him out of the Senatorship they took away his apostleship. They dropped him. They took away every ecclesiastical office which he had, until now, I think, he is the only Mormon living who has not any office. They stripped him of his temporal possessions. They have reduced him to nothing. They made him a pitiable object. They destroyed him financially, ecclesiastically, physically, and finally made him apologize abjectly in a written open letter to the world in which he said "the church has a perfect right to command me in all things." That is what it means to be out of harmony with your quorum.

So far as the Gentiles of Utah and Idaho are concerned, it is about equally as bad with them. We had a Democratic platform in Idaho in 1904, which reads as follows—this is the 1904 platform:

> We demand the extermination of polygamy and unlawful cohabitation within the State of Idaho and the complete separation of church and state in political affairs.

We had hard work to pass that plank. There were many Mormons in the convention. But it was finally adopted, and it cost the Democratic party every Mormon vote in Idaho. That was the sum total of the platform. That was all there was to it. That was in the 1904 campaign. We went before the people demanding the power to enact laws to punish these people and to separate the church from the state in politics. Finally, at the end of the campaign, the Republican leaders from the stump pledged the people that if they were given the power again they would enact adequate laws. That pledge was made by Governor Gooding and Judge Richards and two or three other leading Republicans plainly and everywhere. The people evidently took them at their word, because Idaho is strongly Republican, and they preferred to remain with their party. So they voted the Republicans in almost overwhelmingly; and the first thing that the Republicans did when they met in legislature was to elect a Mormon bishop speaker.

There was a judge, J. H. Richards, one of the leading attorneys of the State, who had canvassed the entire State pledging the Republicans to the enactment of sufficient legislation. He is a man of high character and standing in the party. While he was making the campaign through the State he was elected to the legislature from Boise City, Ada County. When the legislature assembled he introduced bills against unlawful cohabitation and for a change of venue—what we had then been demanding. They were carefully drawn, carefully considered bills. He introduced them. The Mormons and the Republican authorities throttled them and passed what they called an "administration bill"—that is, a bill against polygamy—and, as I have demonstrated here to-day, you might as well pass a bill to divide the moon into four equal parts, so far as its effectiveness is concerned, as to pass a law against polygamy. It is a dead letter. They stifled the bill against unlawful cohabitation, because under that we could punish these practices, provided we had a change of venue.

Polygamous children are being born constantly in my State. We have the names, we have the dates, but we can not prosecute the polygamous parents. The Mormons absolutely control in southeastern Idaho as they do in Utah, and even more so. If the officers are not Mormons, they are those who were elected by the Mormons and are dependent upon them, and in these Mormon communities in southeastern Idaho you can not any more than you can in Utah proceed against these offenders; and not so well in Idaho, because we have not the laws. In numerous instances I see their political power here as well as in Idaho. They have become an object of solicitude now. They are a political factor because they control Senators and electoral votes and Members of Congress. They are to be reckoned with, not as a criminal organization, but as a political factor.

I will refer to an old soldier. I will not call attention to a number of things that I could, but will confine myself mostly to the political aspect of it. There was an old soldier, a major in the Union Army, who was holding the postmastership in the town of Montpelier, in Bear Lake County. It is a Mormon county, strongly so, but Montpelier itself is a divided town. From what I gather and from my knowledge I should think that considerably more than one-half of the business of the post-office at Montpelier is done by Gentiles. This Major Underwood was a Gentile. His place was filled by the appointment of a Mormon bishop, and the Gentiles of Montpelier protested to me, and I went to the Departments about it. The Gentiles thought that they ought to have that office. I called the attention of the President and the Postmaster-General to the facts in the case, but without avail. I can not better tell the story than by reading my letters to both the President and the Postmaster-General. The letter to the President is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 22, 1906.

To the PRESIDENT:

I hand you herewith some papers in regard to the appointment of the Mormon postmaster at Montpelier, Idaho. I have no recommendation to make as to the appointee. There are a number of qualified Gentiles in Montpelier, any one of whom would be glad to be postmaster.

I am sure that it would be much more in the line of good government if Congressman FRENCH would select a postmaster from among the Gentiles. I think a mistake was made in displacing the present postmaster.

Unless a Gentile is appointed postmaster at Montpelier the very large Gentile population of this county will not have a representative in any office, county or Federal. It does seem to me that no church, or alleged church, is so superior in its membership that every office in the county should be in the possession and under the control of this organization. I have an agreement with my colleague, Senator HEYBURN, that the Senate will pass upon the confirmation of Mr. Winters, the Mormon bishop, Thursday, the 28th. I will acquiesce in your decision. If you think the Gentiles, under the circumstances, are entitled to this position, and will ask Mr. FRENCH to recommend a Gentile and will get him to consent to the withdrawal of Mr. Winters for that purpose, you will gratify those in Montpelier who are not Mormons, as well as myself. If you think, under the circumstances, that Mr. Winters should be confirmed and will so intimate to me, I will raise no objection.

I ask that you kindly give me your answer before Thursday of this week.

Respectfully, FRED T. DUBOIS.

I received no answer to that communication. I wrote the following letter to Postmaster-General Cortelyou:

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 30, 1906.

Hon. GEORGE B. CORTELYOU,
Postmaster-General, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. CORTELYOU: I hand you herewith another petition for the appointment of Marcus F. Whitman as postmaster at Montpelier, Idaho.

I desire to call attention to this fact, that all the county offices in Bear Lake County, where Montpelier is situated, are held by Mormons, and every Federal office, excepting the post-office at Montpelier, is held by Mormons.

Montpelier is a Gentile town, a considerable majority of the people being Gentiles.

I inclosed with the letters filed with you a little typewritten statement showing the vote of the county for President and governor and lieutenant-governor at the last election, from which it will be seen that the Republican vote was between 1,500 and 1,600 and the Democratic vote between 300 and 400.

At the same election there was a Gentile candidate for superintendent of schools and for treasurer on the Republican county ticket, yet both of them were beaten by Mormons who were running for the same offices on the County Democratic ticket.

The situation there means the disfranchisement of every American citizen by this political organization which calls itself a church.

The domination of this so-called "church" in political affairs and the complete union of church and state is perfectly exemplified in this county of Bear Lake, Idaho. Under existing circumstances the American citizens there are helpless so far as county affairs are concerned, but I do think they are entitled to the support of the National Government in the unequal fight in which they are engaged in trying to maintain American citizenship.

Respectfully, FRED T. DUBOIS.

I received no answer to that communication.

Now, I will read you the Democratic platform adopted prior to the last election; and when I am describing conditions in Idaho, I am describing conditions wherever Mormons are found, and these are so familiar to me that no one can dispute any statement which I make. There was this plank in our platform during the last election, viz:

STATE BOARD OF HEALTH LAW.

We pledge the party to enact a State board of health law for the control of contagious and infectious diseases, and for the collection of vital statistics

It was rather strange that it was necessary to put a plank of that sort in a political platform. Idaho is the only State in the Union which does not have such a law. It is one of the most favored States. Our climate is such that if vital statistics were published, the State would become famous as a health resort. Yet we can not pass a law to control contagious or infectious diseases or to collect vital statistics, because, of necessity, it carries with it a provision for a registration of births, and the Mormons in the legislature and the Republican leaders will not let us pass such a law. The Mormons say so openly. They do not disguise it. They say, "You can not pass that law, because you could then locate the polygamists, and our people would not submit to it."

A Democratic State senator from south Idaho, in the legislature before the last, spent almost the entire session—and he is a doctor—trying to get such a bill through, but he failed. The medical association of the State has been urging it for years. A Republican doctor and State senator from north Idaho spent the last session in trying to have a similar bill passed, and he failed for the same reason. We adopted our plank of 1904 in our last State platform demanding the extermination of polygamy and unlawful cohabitation within the State of Idaho, as follows:

EXTERMINATION OF POLYGAMY AND UNLAWFUL COHABITATION.

We demand the extermination of polygamy and unlawful cohabitation within the State of Idaho and the complete separation of church and state in political affairs. We pledge the people of Idaho that, in the event of Democratic success at the polls in November, we will make effective by legislative enactment the wise and patriotic declarations in our State constitution, contained in section 3, Article VI, which reads as follows:

"No person is permitted to vote, serve as a juror, or hold any civil office who is under guardianship, idiotic, or insane; or who has, at any place, been convicted of treason, felony, embezzlement of the public funds, bartering or selling, or offering to barter or sell, his vote, or purchasing or offering to purchase the vote of another, or other infamous crime, and who has not been restored to the rights of citizenship, or who, at the time of such election, is confined in prison on conviction of a criminal offense; or who is a bigamist or polygamist, or who is living in what is known as patriarchal, plural, or celestial marriage, or in violation of any law of this State or of the United States forbidding any such crime, or who in any manner teaches, advises, counsels, aids, or encourages any person to enter into bigamy, polygamy, or such patriarchal, plural, or celestial marriage, or to live in violation of any such law, or to commit any such crime; or who is a member of or contributes to the support, aid, or encouragement of any order, organization, association, corporation, or society, which teaches, advises, counsels, encourages, or aids any person to enter into bigamy, polygamy, or such patriarchal or plural marriage, or which teaches or advises that the laws of this State prescribing rules of civil conduct are not the supreme law of the State; nor shall Chinese, or persons of Mongolian descent, not born in the United States, nor Indians not taxed, who have not severed their tribal relations and adopted the habits of civilization, either vote, serve as jurors, or hold any civil office."

That is the test oath. The platform further declared:

We favor further legislation in harmony with the unanimous recommendation of our supreme court to the last session of the legislature, providing for a change of venue on the application of the State upon a proper showing on behalf of the prosecution that justice demands such change.

I will say in passing that the Supreme Court of the United States unanimously affirmed the constitutionality of that act, and complimented the people of Idaho for having passed it. The Congress of the United States, the Senate, after great deliberation, admitted Idaho to statehood with that provision in our constitution, knowing full well what it meant. The next clause of our State constitution, following immediately after that, says:

SECTION IV, ARTICLE VI. The legislature may prescribe qualifications, limitations, and conditions for the right of suffrage additional to those prescribed in this article, but shall never annul any of the provisions in this article contained.

That is the constitution of the State of Idaho.

Immediately after that was passed—and it was passed unanimously—delegates had come there from every portion of the State, and the Democratic party of Idaho was in a more hopeless minority than it is in Vermont. Two years before that its candidates had not received nearly one-half of the votes of the State. The party had driven from their support all the Mormons; yet they were there in their seats in that convention in Coeur d'Alene, in the extreme north of the State. The Democratic party put that plank in their platform which said from this time on no Democratic politician shall trade or barter away the principles and rights of the people of this State for a Mormon vote. They had no hope or expectation of winning. Every Democratic county convention in the Mormon counties repudiated that platform and the Democratic party after it was passed. In Fremont County the Mormons nominated on the Republican ticket six members of the legislature, all of whom were Mormon bishops. The other Mormons nominated what they called a citizens' ticket. They also put up for the legislature six Mormon bishops. The American citizenship party there nominated a ticket, but it was, of course, hopelessly beaten. In my county of Bingham the Mormons nominated a Democratic ticket, so called, but they repudiated that platform, denounced the Democratic State ticket, and put up candidates for the legislature pledged to vote, at any rate, against the nominees of the Democratic State convention. In my county the Americans nominated a ticket; and I am proud to state that it received a great many more votes than the so-called Democratic ticket.

In Oneida County they nominated four bishops on each ticket—three or four, I have forgotten the exact number—and in Bear Lake County they did the same, repudiating utterly the Democratic party on account of that platform.

I will ask that the address of the chairman of the Democratic committee of the State of Idaho, Mr. Lockhart, be inserted in the RECORD. I will not read it. The address is confined entirely to the Mormon question.

The address referred to is as follows:

CHAIRMAN LOCKHART'S ADDRESS ON THE POLITICAL SITUATION.

To the people of Idaho:

In view of the great consequences which will arise from the campaign of 1906, and which may reflect for good or evil the destinies of the people of Idaho for a long time to come, I have deemed it proper that a statement should be given to the people of this State relative to the course to be pursued by the Democratic State Committee, of which I have the honor to be the chairman.

DEMOCRATIC STATE CONVENTION.

A convention of the Democratic party lately held in Coeur d'Alene City has declared in unmistakable words that polygamy and unlawful cohabitation must cease, and that the interference in the political affairs of this State by the Mormon hierarchy must stop; and it pledged itself, if given the power by the people at the polls, to carry into effect by statutes punishing such offenses, that clause of the State constitution which has heretofore been at once the bulwark of morality and decency in the homes of this State and the weapon of defense against the political domination of an unscrupulous and selfish alien oligarchy which seeks to confuse the religious sentiments of its people by directing them in their political actions.

NO PARTISANSHIP DICTATED COURSE.

No partisanship has dictated the course of the Democratic party in presenting this issue, for at all times, disregarding the possibilities of deriving advantage by truckling to the Mormon hierarchy, the Democratic party has sought to occupy the high ground of citizenship which looks solely to the welfare of the State and the preservation of those homes which are at once the glory and safeguard of a republic.

POLYGAMY IN IDAHO.

We affirm unhesitatingly that polygamy is not only practiced in this State, but is increasing to an alarming extent, and if the people of Idaho will intrust the affairs of government of the State of Idaho to the nominees of the Coeur d'Alene convention and the legislators from the various counties who indorse the Coeur d'Alene platform, we will pass such laws at the next session of the Idaho legislature as will enable us to prove this assertion; without laws we are powerless to act. We affirm that children, the future citizens of this State, are being born branded with illegitimacy and deprived of their legal birthright, and reared in an atmosphere which must undermine their moral natures. To absolutely stamp out this crime, prohibited by the moral sense of mankind, and to rescue these little children, so that each may stand equal in the eyes of the law, unashamed of its parentage, we appeal to the motherhood of this State to stretch out protecting arms over the children reared in this vicious practice of unlawful cohabitation.

WOMEN'S PRIVILEGE AND DUTY.

The women of Idaho have been given at once a great privilege and a great duty, and we urge them so to act in this campaign that the claims made in their behalf shall be vindicated, viz, whenever a question of morality should be presented to the people, the votes of the women would be cast fearlessly for the right. Can you, women of Idaho, looking into the clear, innocent eyes of your children, fail to help us free the polygamous children of the curse of bastardy? Was it not taught on the shores of Galilee that, "It were better that a millstone were hanged about his neck and that he be cast into the sea, rather than that he should offend one of these little ones." Is that not living truth to-day in Idaho? Is not the question whether or not you will continue to permit these little ones to be offended put straight to the hearts of the women of Idaho to-day in this campaign; or whether, joining with us, you will put down forever the practice of polygamy in this State? There have appeared apologists for the old polygamists, but who, if not women of this State, shall be heard in defense of their young children?

FRENCH'S TESTIMONY.

The State of Idaho stands pilloried before the United States, placed there by the sworn testimony of Representative French before the REED SMOOT investigating committee of the United States Senate, where, sitting between two polygamous apostles of the Mormon Church, he unblushingly testified that the people of Idaho condoned the crime of polygamy and unlawful cohabitation in the cases of old polygamists. Do you, women of Idaho, condone the birth of children of old polygamists, tainted from their infancy with this system of crime? (Last July a forty-third child was born to the third polygamous wife of Joseph F. Smith, president of the Mormon Church.) Are we to allow this statement to stand regarding Idaho, or will the earnest men and women of this State repudiate it?

CHURCH INTERFERENCE.

No less momentous in its effects upon the future of Idaho is the interference in political affairs of the Mormon hierarchy. As is well known, the Mormon voters hold the balance of power between the two great parties—the Republican and Democratic—and these Mormon voters are absolutely controlled by the hierarchy. It is possible for the authorities of the Mormon Church, sitting in Salt Lake City, to say to either party in Idaho: "If you will agree to our demands, we will place you in power." It can say to any individual in either party: "If you agree to support measures favorable to us, we will make you Senator, governor, or put you in whatever office you may aspire to." Is not this great power inimical to the best interests of the State? Will it not build up in our politics the system of "bossism," to trample upon the aspirations of our people? Was not this great power of the Mormon hierarchy lately exerted at Pocatello, when in a convention in which three polygamists sat two men were permitted to prepare a "slate" and parcel out the offices of this State without regard to the choice of the people, but always with the approval of the Mormon leaders? The motto of that convention seems to have been: "If we can please the hierarchy, the people can be disregarded."

APOSTLES COME TO IDAHO.

Have we not seen in Boise the polygamous apostle, John Henry Smith, of the Mormon Church, endeavoring to coerce a legislature and to change the clear provisions of the constitution of Idaho against polygamy, which he said was so objectionable to his people, and has not this been testified to by the leading Republicans of Idaho?

Have we not seen the polygamous apostle Matthias Cowley masquerading as a book agent and visiting homes in Oneida County with the statement that inasmuch as he was the spiritual adviser of the people they must listen to him in political affairs? Have not the people of this State seen Apostle Penrose, likewise a polygamist, leaving his office in Salt Lake City and coming at the request of political leaders in Fremont County, Idaho, and changing its political complexion in a night? Is there, in this demand that the Mormon hierarchy should refrain from interfering in the political affairs in Idaho, any partisan politics? If so, then the evidence of leading men both in the Democratic and Republican parties must be disregarded.

LAST LEGISLATURE.

Who can view the last session of the Idaho legislature without the blush of shame mantling his cheek? Did not Representative Ainey, a Republican, of Canyon County, stand up in the house of representatives and declare that he had been approached by members of the ecclesiastical organization and told that if he voted for certain measures his usefulness as a legislator was ended? Have the men of Idaho become so docile in their subjection to Joseph F. Smith, of Salt Lake, that such a statement can be made by one of their representatives and they not resent it? Was it partisan politics when, acting under their constitutional duty, the judges of the supreme court of this State wisely suggested to the legislature of this State that a change of venue bill be passed in the interest of justice? And yet was this Democratic politics when this measure advocated by the supreme court (composed of two Republicans and one Democrat) and introduced by so prominent a Republican as Judge Richards, of Ada County, in the house, the Mormon speaker left the chair and, descending to the floor of the house, characterized the bill as the weapon of character assassins and with passion declared it an insult aimed at the Mormon people. Why? When this change of venue bill was being discussed in the senate Senator McBeth, in advocating its enactment, stated that if this bill should be passed it would be the death blow to polygamy, and on this statement, notwithstanding the recommendation of the supreme court of the State and in order to continue this abhorrent practice, the influence of the Mormon hierarchy in the senate forthwith killed it.

POWER OF CHURCH.

Are the citizens of Idaho, who are trying to lift Idaho to the high place occupied by her sister States in civic authority and public morality, to be called partisan when they insist that laws that have proven efficacious in other States in preventing disease and in fostering public health be adopted in this State? If in agitating against the control of the affairs of Idaho by the Mormon hierarchy we be called partisan, we point to the experience of Doctor France, Republican representative from Shoshone County in the last legislature, as an example of the power of the church to oppose and defeat the best interests of this people. Doctor France, at the request of the State medical board, introduced a board of health bill, which in effect provided the machinery for stamping out epidemics and contagious diseases and provided for the collection of the vital statistics of the State. Idaho is the only State of the American Union which has not such a law, and to the credit of the medical profession of the State, they endeavored to place Idaho in line with the best medical and scientific information by collating and copying the best part of each law from the different States on this subject. Doctor France introduced this bill, and was thereupon told by the representatives of this Salt Lake hierarchy that if he eliminated the provision regarding the registration of births the bill could be passed, otherwise it could not. Upon his refusal to truckle to this plainly immoral demand the bill met the same fate as its predecessors by being defeated at the hands of the Mormon influence. Thus to hide the evidence that they still preach and practice polygamy the Salt Lake hierarchy have exposed the people of Idaho to contagious disease and possibly death by keeping the State from having the necessary machinery to effectually quarantine against disease.

THE GREAT ISSUE.

There is but one issue to be presented to the people of the State in view of these incontrovertible facts above stated, viz, whether or not the people of Idaho shall enjoy political independence and whether or not they shall cleanse this State of the crimes now being practiced within its borders. I shall not permit the personalities of the different candidates to enter into the discussion, but shall insist at all times that the question of the sanctity of the home and political liberty is greater than the aspirations of any candidate; that the great question to be answered and settled at the polls in November is whether vice shall be effectively suppressed and individual political liberty be preserved to each citizen of Idaho. We must make sure that the State lives before we discuss the question of politics.

APPEAL TO PATRIOTIC CITIZENS.

I am not appealing to the partisan sentiments of the Democratic party, but, rather, I am addressing in this campaign all the citizens of Idaho regardless of party; to Democrats and Republicans alike, because their interests are being injured in the most vital places; to the women of Idaho, regardless of party affiliations, because crime is practiced in this State which particularly affects them. We have before us the ever-continuing struggle of a democracy—the preservation of a liberty dearly bought and heroically maintained. It is a fight for first principles and all that is most dear to men.

Before any other question can be answered the people of this State must, by their solemn votes, affirm that liberty is dearer to them than their party affiliations and that the purity of the home must be preserved and that the children born in this great Commonwealth shall face the world without a stain upon their birth. For the accomplishment of these great ends I appeal to the whole people of Idaho to unite with the Democratic party so that the pledges of its platform may be enacted into the laws of the land.

H. W. LOCKHART, Chairman.

BOISE, IDAHO, August 30, 1906.

Mr. DUBOIS. I will read the letter of the chairman to those whom he invited to speak for the Democratic party during the campaign. It is as follows:

CHAIRMAN LOCKHART'S LETTER TO SPEAKERS.

MY DEAR SIR: The campaign in this State is going to be a very interesting one. The greatest question to be submitted to the voters of Idaho is whether or not the Mormon hierarchy is going to dominate in the political affairs or whether the people of this State are going to settle the question this time by making it plain that the good people of Idaho will never submit to church dictation of politics and the practices of those vices which are against the moral sentiment and the law of the land.

We are very anxious to enlist in this campaign the services of those who believe in advocating strongly a straightforward fight along the lines of noninterference in politics by the Mormon church and the eradication of the practice of polygamy and unlawful cohabitation. We desire very much to have the services of such as speakers in this campaign, and I cordially extend to you, on behalf of the committee, an invitation to speak at such places and at such times as the committee can avail themselves of your services, and we would appreciate it very much if you would kindly respond to this letter at your very earliest convenience.

Thanking you for your prompt response, I remain,

Yours, truly,

W. H. LOCKHART,
Chairman Democratic State Committee.

BOISE, IDAHO, September 1, 1906.

The whole campaign from beginning to end was made on the Mormon question. We put in our platform a plank lamenting the death of ex-Governor Steunenberg and calling for justice to be meted out to his murderers. The Republican State platform was entirely silent on that question. Not a speaker, not even the governor himself, at the State convention said one word about this subject. Our recent candidate for governor is and was the chief justice of Idaho. As chief justice he handed down the decision in the Moyer-Haywood cases, denying the writ of habeas corpus, which decision has been affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States. There was no law or order issue in Idaho of that kind.

Senator HEYBURN, my colleague, made a speech in Boise City on Friday evening, September 14, 1906, which, I presume, you might call a keynote speech. I addressed the people of Boise from the same platform in the same theater on the Tuesday preceding. My colleague was kind enough to attend my meeting, but I was not in Boise when he spoke. I presume my speech was a keynote speech, and his was in answer and a keynote speech for his party. Among other things, my colleague in a measure ridiculed me for putting in our platform the provision regarding the enforcement of our State constitution. In that carefully prepared speech at Boise, after reciting in full the test oath which I have just read to you, my colleague said:

That is the constitution; that is higher law than any statute. The legislature, without regard to party lines, repealed the statute on that subject. They needed no statute; the constitution is sufficient to prevent them from voting. If they come within this provision, they are disfranchised now.

I think that is good doctrine, whether or not it is sound law, especially when our State constitution says further that the legislature shall not take out any of those limitations in our constitution.

At the end of the campaign we instructed our men to challenge the Mormons at the polls; to present to them that constitutional provision, and ask that they conform to the constitutional requirement before they voted. I will ask the Secretary to read what our chairman says in regard to challenging voters.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

REGARDING CHALLENGES.

To the people of Idaho:

At the beginning of the present campaign I addressed you in an open letter in which I insisted, in obedience to the mandate of the Democratic State convention, which was held at Coeur d'Alene city on August 6, the Mormon question was the paramount issue in Idaho politics and that the Republican party, as a result of their State convention held at Pocatello on August 1, were firmly allied with the Mormon Church.

The Democratic State campaign has been conducted in entire harmony with the spirit and letter of the Democratic State convention. The Republican State campaign has been conducted in entire harmony with my suggestion in my former address at the beginning of this campaign, that the Republican party was firmly allied with the Mormon Church.

In his final address to the election judges of the State of Idaho James H. Brady, chairman of the Republican State central committee, emphasizes this fact and shows now for his party an attempt to ride over the constitution of the State of Idaho and to curry favor with the cohorts of his organization, the Church of Jesus Christ of the Latter-Day Saints. This is especially emphasized in his closing sentence, which is as follows:

"Any attempt to challenge voters on account of their being members of churches or organizations, or associations, or on account of their religious or other beliefs is illegal and is an intimidation of voters, and it is your sworn duty to see that this is not done."

Senator HEYBURN, in an address delivered at Columbia Theater, Boise, on Friday evening, September 14, 1906, said, after reading the Idaho test oath:

"That is the constitution; that is higher law than any statute. The legislature, without regard to party lines, repealed the statute on that subject. They needed no statute; the constitution is sufficient to prevent them from voting. If they come within this provision they are disfranchised now."

The Democratic State central committee has undertaken to and will call to account at the polls, by way of challenging, all the Mormons which it is possible to reach by challenge, that they may be made to comply with the spirit and letter of our constitution, which is the fundamental law of the State of Idaho, and with that part in particular found in section 3 of Article VI. This announcement was made a week ago, since which time Governor Gooding and the Republicans generally who belong to his machine have threatened our challengers with arrest. They put this on the flimsy ground that it is the desire of our organization to delay this election.

Our challengers are hereby instructed to preserve order and to act with all possible dispatch. The appeal by the governor and this notice of Chairman Brady to the election judges of the State are exciting trouble. The notice of Chairman Brady to the judges of election is issued for the purpose of avoiding the issue.

The American people must rally to us and help us in the defense of the people exercising the legal rights of the citizens, and our challengers should be supported in doing their duty. The Democratic State central committee will stand behind everybody while performing his duty both before and after election.

The claim of Chairman Brady that none but judges of election can challenge voters is erroneous and unwarranted by law. The law relating to challengers (see Session Laws of 1899, pp. 52 and 53 and secs. 77 to 86, inclusive) provides that any elector may challenge anyone who offers to vote, and should do so if he believes the person is not a qualified voter. There is no law forbidding an elector challenging anyone who offers to vote. The wording of section 5, above referred to, says:

"It shall be the duty of any judge of election to challenge any person offering to vote whom he believes not to be qualified as an elector."

This enjoins upon the judges of election the especial duty of challenging, but does not arrogate to them the sole right to challenge. It has been the custom in this State for any elector to challenge when he believes the person offering to vote is not entitled to vote.

The constitution, the highest law in this State, disqualifies a member of any order from voting who encourages, advises, teaches, counsels, or aids polygamy, plural or celestial marriage, or teaches that any rule of action or law is greater than the laws of this State in matters of civil conduct. The membership of an organization which does these things prohibits anyone from holding any civil office or from voting. The election laws prescribe what questions shall be asked the person offering to vote who is challenged upon certain ground, viz: First. Upon the ground that he is not a citizen. Second. That he has not resided in the precinct, county, or State a sufficient length of time to vote. In no other case does it prescribe what questions shall be asked. To hold that one can not challenge a polygamist or anyone who teaches, advises, or counsels members in the organization that does believe in polygamy, or who places the ecclesiastical above the civil law, is erroneous and contrary to sections 2 and 3 of Article VI of the constitution. Such claim is absurd, and the threat to arrest a person who challenges others offering to vote is not sound in law nor fair to our constitution, upon which rests the entire superstructure of our young Commonwealth. The right to challenge is the privilege accorded by the law above mentioned, and is not an offense. It may be exercised, it should be exercised, to the end that anyone not a qualified elector should be prevented from voting. The election law in Idaho (Session Laws 1899, p. 34, sec. 5) especially provides that—

"Electors are privileged from arrest except for treason, felony, or breach of the peace during their attendance on election."

Our advice to challengers in Idaho is that you challenge any person who offers to vote in your precinct when you believe such person is not entitled to vote under the provision of our constitution, as well as of statute, but in doing so we advise you to act in a peaceable, dignified, and determined manner, without disturbing the peace; that you state the grounds of challenge and ask that the person be sworn and questioned in regard to his constitutional right to vote.

I hope that the higher citizenship may guide all challengers in the performance of this very important function. The good citizens of this State should rally to the support of those who are aiding to insist upon the adherence to this provision of our State constitution, which was placed there by the leading citizens of Idaho, regardless of party affiliations, and which affords such a splendid safeguard to our people, if enforced.

I remain, with great respect,

H. W. LOCKHART,
Chairman Democratic State Central Committee.

BOISE, IDAHO, November 1, 1906.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President, the chairman of the Republican State committee also issued an address to the voters and election judges, in which he advised them in regard to their duty. He said:

ELECTION JUDGES TAKE NOTICE!

An organized attempt has been threatened to prevent thousands of citizens who are duly qualified and registered voters from casting their ballot.

It is your sworn duty to see that qualified electors have an opportunity to cast their ballots without molestation or interference of any kind.

The election laws of Idaho regarding the duties of the judges of election are plain and simple. By an act of the legislature you are furnished by the county clerk with the election laws of the State, which is your only guide in the performance of your duties. When you go beyond this law you interfere with the rights of citizens of the State, and you violate the laws you have sworn to uphold, and you are amenable to the law governing such cases.

It is your sworn duty to keep all persons out of the room where the election is being conducted, except persons who are authorized to vote and the proper election officers. You are empowered to remove all other persons, and it is your duty to do so, and especially such persons as interfere in any manner with the voters.

If you should allow any person to be present for the purpose of challenging, it is your duty to see that it is done in good faith and that such challenge must not result in intimidation or interfering with voters or delaying the voters from casting their ballots.

No one except the judges should be permitted in any manner to interrogate a voter after he is challenged. The challenger can not ask him any questions. It is your duty, if you believe the challenge is made in good faith and upon any of the grounds mentioned in the election laws furnished you, to state the qualifications of an elector to the person challenged, and if the person challenged declares himself qualified and the challenge is not withdrawn, then you should administer to him the elector's oath as provided in the election laws, and you are prohibited from administering any other oath, and he is not compelled to take any other oath in order to be allowed to vote.

Then the chairman of the Republican State committee says:

The elector's oath prescribed by the statute, and which is the only oath that you can administer, is found on page 17 of the election laws, and is as follows:

ELECTOR'S OATH.

"I do swear (or affirm) that I am a citizen of the United States, of the age of 21 years, or will be the ——— day of ———, A. D. 1900—(naming the date of next succeeding election); that I have (or will have) actually resided in this State for six months and in this county for thirty days next preceding the next ensuing election; that I have never been convicted of treason, felony, embezzlement of public funds, bartering or selling or offering to barter or sell my vote, or purchasing or offering to purchase the vote of another, or other infamous crime, without thereafter being restored to the rights of citizenship; that I will not commit any act in violation of the provisions in this oath contained; that I am not now registered or entitled to vote at any other place in this State; that I do regard the Constitution of the United States and the laws thereof, and the constitution of this State and the laws thereof, as interpreted by the courts as the supreme law of the land; (when made before a judge of election as: 'and I have not previously voted at this election') so help me God.

"Subscribed and sworn to before me this ——— day of ——— A. D. 190—. Register of ——— precinct, ——— county, Idaho."

I will say in regard to the elector's oath that it does not prescribe one of the qualifications which are in our constitution. Every one of them which affects a Mormon is carefully eliminated by the legislature from the elector's oath. The chairman of the Republican State committee says:

The elector's oath prescribed by the statute * * * is the only oath that you can administer.

And then the chairman of the Republican State committee says:

The grounds of the challenge must be stated by the challenger, and a challenge can not be made except for the following reasons, to wit:

That the person has been convicted of a felony;

Or that the person has not resided in the State six months;

Or that the person has not resided in the precinct thirty days;

Or that the person is not a citizen of the United States or is not 21 years of age;

That the person is registered and entitled to vote in some other place in the State;

That the person has previously voted at this election.

If the challenge is made on the ground that a person has been convicted of a felony, he shall not be questioned by anyone, not even the judges, but the laws you are furnished with provide the proof to be produced in order to prevent him from voting.

If the challenge is made on any of the other four grounds mentioned, the law provides what questions shall be asked by the judges, and when this is done your full duty and authority is performed.

When a voter is registered the law makes the registration prima facie evidence of his right to vote, and he should be allowed to cast his ballot unless it is shown to you that he is disqualified under the law, and you are furnished with the law pertaining to your duties and what the qualifications of the legal voter are.

Any attempt to challenge voters on account of their being members of churches or organizations or associations, or on account of their religious or other beliefs, is illegal and is an intimidation of voters, and it is your sworn duty to see that this is not done.

JAMES H. BRADY,
Chairman Republican State Committee.

BOISE, IDAHO, October 13, 1906.

In these instructions to judges and Mormons every one of the disqualifications in our constitution is left out.

Governor Gooding, in a speech at Rexburg just before the election—I will say that the vote at Rexburg on election day was 644 for Gooding and 66 for Stockslager, 644 to 66—Governor Gooding, in this Mormon precinct, said: "Arrest these challengers if they interfere or intimidate you. I will stand by you as governor of the State if you arrest them." And the Weiser World, the known organ of Governor Gooding, had this to say on November 2:

To citizens of Idaho:

Carry arms on election day in sections where it may be necessary to defend the rights of citizens, and use such means to protect the ballot as the occasion may demand.

They followed the advice. We sent our challengers to the polls, and the Mormons arrested at Rexburg and threw into jail Mr. H. A. Buchman, who was running for sheriff on the American ticket, and J. A. Kinney, a druggist from St. Anthony. They were there to put the constitutional challenge to Mormons, as they had the right to do under the statutes of Idaho. They were arrested by the Mormons and thrown into jail and deprived of their right to vote. Will Mulkins and Robert Hopkins, as reputable citizens as there are anywhere, were thrown into jail at Sugar City. The vote there stood, Gooding 422, Stockslager 27. They were thrown into jail for intimidating 422 votes against 27!

Down in Bannock County, at McCammon, H. O. Harkness, one of the most reputable citizens of Idaho, who has been a leading character there for thirty years, a lifelong Republican, was arrested for challenging Mormon voters. He was there and helped to make the State. He was one of the pioneers. He is one of the leading characters of the State. He was arrested by a Mormon constable and taken 25 miles to Pocatello.

Our challenger was arrested at Oxford, also in Bannock County. One hundred and five men were challenged there, and the judges refused to administer the constitutional oath. Gray, the Mormon county attorney of the county of Bannock, telephoned to arrest the challenger and throw him in the ditch, and they arrested him. At no place would the Mormons take the constitutional oath. They refused. At Rose precinct, in my county and near my town, a Mormon named Johnson, whose brother has just been elected to the legislature from Bingham County (he is a Mormon bishop), threatened to arrest the judges of election at Rose, two of whom were Gentiles, and prevented them as judges from challenging the voters. It was that way all through this southeastern country. There were fights in some precincts—that is, the great masses of the Mormons would throw out the Gentiles; and in no case did the Mormons take the constitutional requirement.

The Mormons elected twenty-seven members of the legislature in Idaho out of a total of seventy-two. They absolutely elected by force of numbers in those counties twenty-one members. Their votes elected six more. Out of these twenty-one whom they absolutely control they elected sixteen Mormon bishops. They allowed the Gentiles to have, I think, three members of the legislature in southeastern Idaho, but they were careful that they were as subservient to the church as a Mormon bishop would be.

The result of the election—and the whole fight was, as I say, made on the Mormon question, from one end of the State to the other, and from the beginning to the end—was that Governor Gooding carried the six Mormon counties in south Idaho out of the sixteen, and none other. He lost the ten Gentile counties, although all but three of them are strongly Republican. He carried, two years ago, Canyon County, where Governor Steunenberg lived and died and is revered. It is a purely agricultural county, and Governor Gooding carried it two years ago by 1,200. This time he lost it by 600.

Ada County, in which Boise City is situated, which is normally Republican by 2,500, and which Governor Gooding carried two years ago by 3,000, he lost by over 500 this time. It is a purely agricultural county. He lost the Republican counties—every one of them—in south Idaho. He carried three counties out of five in the north by a slight majority. So in the State outside of the Mormon counties he carried three counties only.

Judge Stockslager came to the Mormon belt with a majority of between two and three thousand, which these six Mormon counties wiped out, and planted to the credit of Governor Gooding 8,800 majority. The people of Idaho intended to elect last time a Democratic governor and a Democratic legislature, and they would have elected a Democratic legislature, but that the Socialist vote defeated it. The Democrats were beaten in the county of my colleague, Shoshone County, by 200 as respects their legislative ticket. The Socialist vote was 700 in the county. The Socialist vote added to the Democratic vote would have made a Democratic legislature.

The Democratic party was not making a campaign for the Socialist ticket. The Republicans were encouraging the Socialists to keep up their organization, and in the midst of it President Roosevelt sent Secretary Taft to Idaho to speak in behalf of law and order and for Governor Gooding, who was advising the Mormons to mob American citizens who were attempting to exercise the right of challenge at the polls.

I will submit the official vote of the State, prepared by the secretary of state, which, if anyone is curious to read it, will show that if the Socialists are against law and order, they were the adjuncts of the Republican party; and I trust that the President of the United States does not mean that every member of a labor union is against law and order, because, as I say, these overwhelmingly Republican counties went for Judge Stockslager on the Mormon question, and they were agricultural counties, without a mine in them.

The Socialist vote would have elected the member in Canyon County. There were two Democratic members elected out of four in Canyon County. It went twelve hundred Republican two years ago, and, as I say, it is the place where Governor Steunenberg lived and died. They elected half of the Democratic legislative ticket there, and they beat the district judge who was sitting in this case.

There is nothing in the law-and-order case, except that a self-confessed murderer named Orchard testified, I think, that he stood with his rifle leveled on ex-Governor Steunenberg as he sat by his window, surrounded by his family, during the Christmas holidays. He did not shoot, because he feared the pane of glass might deflect the ball. He waited, and put dynamite between the gateposts, knowing the habits of ex-Governor Steunenberg, and as the ex-governor was going to his home at Christmas time, in the dusk of evening, he struck the string, the bomb exploded, and tore him to pieces. The man who testified to this says that three members of a great organization employed him to do it.

The Idaho authorities had these men arrested in Colorado and taken to Idaho. Friends of these men endeavored to get them out on a writ of habeas corpus. The courts of Idaho passed on the case, there being on the bench, among others, our candidate for governor, Chief Justice Stockslager. They denied the writ of habeas corpus. It came here to the Supreme Court of the United States. It was pending during our election. It was decided only a few days ago in accordance with the decision of the courts of Idaho. And out of that they tried to make the President of the United States and others believe that there was a law-and-order issue in Idaho, as if any citizen of Idaho does not want to see the murderers of ex-Governor Steunenberg executed—Orchard or the other men or anybody else. It was not mentioned in the campaign by anyone, unless it was by Governor Gooding, and then in a way designed not to alarm the labor vote.

I will read a letter from Mr. Buchman, who was thrown into jail at Rexburg. It is from St. Anthony, Fremont County, Idaho, a Gentile town:

Senator FRED T. DUBOIS,
Washington, D. C.

* * * * * * *

Immediately after election a number of prominent Mormons, among them Mr. James Fogg, the bishop of this ward, called on the merchants of this place and demanded from them that I be dismissed from office as chief of police because I went to Rexburg and challenged voters.

The majority of the merchants refused to take this action against me. Mr. ———, the leading merchant here—

Mr. Buchman gives his name, but I will not mention it, because the Mormons would drive him out of town. They would boycott this merchant if I read his name. So I will not give his name:

Mr. ———, the leading merchant here (and one of them whom the bishop had been to see demanding my discharge), came to me and offered to pay my salary to the end of my term in office, or six months, amounting to $450 cash, in full if I would hand in my resignation to the city council. Mr. ——— remarked that it was strictly a matter of business with him, as they (the Mormons) had threatened to boycott his store unless he used his efforts with other merchants to gain my discharge.

I am a Republican, yet I have been appointed chief of police by two Democratic as well as two Republican mayors, and I received the largest vote of any candidate on any ticket in my own precinct for sheriff this last election on the American ticket.

Respectfully, H. A. BUCHMAN.

Mr. Sam Rich, a leading Mormon of my county, who was running for the State senate, went into the Mormon counties and appealed to them to boycott everyone who was supporting the American ticket. They said they would do it. Those are the conditions which confront our American citizens in that section of the country, and the governor proclaims to men who cast votes 175 to nothing, as they did in many precincts, to see that they are not intimidated by a challenger; that if a challenger comes along to arrest him.

You naturally wonder why we do not seek redress in the courts. You can not get it in southeastern Idaho any more than you can get it in Utah. There is not a beneficiary of the Mormon political power that will not make some excuse and some apology for this state of affairs, but not one of them will stand for effective legislation.

In Utah there is a Republican-Mormon party and a Democratic-Mormon party, both equally controlled by the Mormon hierarchy. The American party in Utah is composed of Gentiles, both Republicans and Democrats, who are battling there, under the very shadow of this tremendous ecclesiastical power, for American citizenship, for the separation of church and state, and against the degradation of womanhood and home. It is a noble, magnificent contest they are making.

They have abandoned all hope of political preferment and suffer financially in their unequal struggle for American principles. President Roosevelt throws the weight of his mighty influence against the Americans and for the Republican-Mormons in Utah led by President Smith and Senator SMOOT. He demands in Utah an indorsement of Smith and SMOOT.

The Mutual Improvement Era is the organ of the Mutual Improvement Association of the Mormon Church, and these associations comprise practically all membership of the church ranging between the years of 16 and 35. Joseph F. Smith is the editor. Anything emanating from him in his capacity as editor is considered to be the word of the Lord to the Mormons. His instruction through the Mutual Improvement Era is assumed by him and by all the zealots in his following to be the commandment from the Most High. While he does not name the Republican ticket and the Republican organization as being the special objects of his regard, such specific designation in words is unnecessary, because his following is so tutored as to understand what he means, and every Republican priest who desired to do so could utilize this article and place the intended interpretation upon it. Furthermore, it was ample notice to every Democratic priest to waive his partisanship and assist the Republican cause.

I will read an article of November 2, 1906, just before election, signed by Joseph F. Smith:

[Improvement Era, November, 1906.]

At no time have the leaders of this people counseled evil, and it is true that where individuals have heeded the counsels of the church such persons have in the end succeeded best and have recognized the wisdom and justice of their counsels. The contrary course has universally ended in failure, often in spiritual death and moral degradation, while the fruits of obedience through their counsels are prosperity, spiritual life, moral purity, advancement, contentment, and joy.

Now, these are facts. These have been the fruits of "Mormonism" and the results of following the counsels of the church authority. Why, then, should any young man, or old either, when malicious falsehood is hurled recklessly at the devoted leaders, doubt their integrity or disregard their advice? Has not history proved the servants of the Lord to be honest, just, secure in the right, and their counsels safe guides through the way, ending in ultimate blessing?

Just now there is a tendency among some of the thoughtless young men to join in or sympathize with the fight against the church authority waged by the assassins of virtue, the supporters of vice and riot, and wine and lewd women, gambling, robbery, and general corruption. It is a senseless tendency, and they who follow it will do so to their own destruction.

At the present time we are about to make a choice of some political leaders. It is scarcely necessary to say that a man who has the interest of himself and his people at heart will choose his friends. Who are our friends? Men who have kept informed on the trend of affairs in the nation for the past two years or more may easily surmise. To vote any other way would be ungracious, against our own best interests, and would show a spirit of ungratefulness such as this people do not naturally possess. "Wherefore, by their fruits ye shall know them."

JOSEPH F. SMITH.

Here is a letter from one Musser. It is written by A. Milton Musser, a lifelong devotee of the hierarchy, a polygamist, an employee in the Church Historian office. He would not have dared to commit one sentence of this communication to the public print except by permission of the chief hierarch. Musser claims to be a Democrat and is appealing to Mormon Democrats.

PLAIN FACTS ABOUT THE TWO GREAT POLITICAL PARTIES.

To whom it most concerns:

President Theodore Roosevelt and his Administration are fair to "Mormons" in common with all other citizens. Federal appointments in this State were made in the face of violent opposition from anti-"Mormon" parties, the anti-"Mormon" party. The appointments made by the President show that in such matters he listens exclusively to the Congressional delegation from the State.

The proposition to put in its platform a plank reflecting adversely on the "Mormons" was rejected emphatically by the last Republican national convention—that of 1904, at Chicago—while the same proposition was accepted by the last Democratic national convention—that of 1904, at St. Louis—the anti-"Mormon" plank as presented by FRED T. DUBOIS at that time being incorporated into the Democratic national platform.

The Republican leaders in Congress, on the recommendation of Senator REED SMOOT, struck out of the Arizona-New Mexico statehood law the amendment of Democratic Senator DUBOIS, which was intended to disfranchise the "Mormons" in that State.

The Republican leaders in Congress, on the recommendation of Senator GEORGE SUTHERLAND, struck out of the new immigration law the clause placed there at the instigation of Democratic Senator DUBOIS, by which "Mormon" immigrants were to be excluded from the United States on the ground of belief in polygamy.

The Republican party leaders prevented the consideration and passage by Congress this year—1906—of an amendment to the National Constitution framed by Democratic Senator DUBOIS and intendeed to disfranchise the "Mormons" in the United States.

The minority report of the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections, which report is a complete vindication of the "Mormon" people on the issues raised in the SMOOT case, is signed exclusively by Republicans, the signers being among the strongest, brainiest, and most influential members of the United States Senate. The majority report of the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections in the REED SMOOT case, which report is an assault upon the citizenship of all "Mormons," is signed by every Democratic member of that committee. This case became practically a party question, with the real force and strength of the Democratic party nationally lined up on the side of depriving "Mormons" of their rights as citizens, while the real force and strength of the Republican party nationally is lined up on the side of maintaining the rights of "Mormons" as citizens. Democratic success in Utah means the strengthening of the Democratic line-up against "Mormons," and the weakening—possibly the breaking up—of the Republican line-up in defense of the rights of "Mormons" as citizens.

The Republican party, having control in the nation, having the National Administration, the United States Senate, and the House of Representatives, has the power (and the inclination and courage to use it) to protect "Mormons" in their rights as citizens, which power, if alienated or directed into other channels as advocated by Democratic leaders, would prove most disastrous to the "Mormon" people.

The Democratic party in Idaho, being an integral part of the national Democratic party and therefore of necessity in accord with its general party policy, is openly and actively contending for the disfranchisement of the "Mormon" people, while the Republican party, and therefore of necessity in accord with its general party policy, is openly and actively contending for equal rights to "Mormon" citizens in the face of an extensive anti-"Mormon" prejudice. The most prominent feature of the present political campaign in Idaho is the warfare which the Democratic party is waging against the "Mormon" people and the fight which the Republican party is putting up there on behalf of "Mormons" being protected in their rights as citizens.

The Democratic party organ in Utah—the Salt Lake Herald—has declared in favor of the election of the Democratic State ticket and Democratic Senator DUBOIS in Idaho; these are all pledged to the disfranchisement of the "Mormon" people. This is not surprising, since the party organ must be with the general party policy, and the protest of any small section of that party that it does not agree with such policy is not only futile, but is misleading.

The Republican party in Utah, at its last State convention, gave a decided rebuke to efforts to inject into the State platform a criticism of "Mormons" exercising full political privileges, while the Democratic party in Utah, at its last State convention, committed itself to the virtual disfranchisement of a portion of the "Mormon" people, by declaring against "Mormons" who may hold church positions exercising their constitutional rights to the full privileges of citizenship. The Democratic State platform there adopted applies a religious test to "Mormons" for office in violation of the National Constitution and gives direct encouragement to the fight of the Democracy in Idaho for the disfranchisement of "Mormons."

Will any "Mormon" who heretofore has voted the Democratic ticket do so again in the face of these stubborn facts, which are so plain and positive that no sane man can be blind thereto? Can any "Mormon" who heretofore has supported the Republican ticket be cajoled, threatened, or beguiled into voting the Democratic ticket or any part thereof at this time, in view of the hostile attitude of the Democratic party toward the "Mormon" people?

It is an incontrovertible fact, already demonstrated well beyond the possibility of doubt—no matter how much boasting, sputtering, protesting, and deception may be engaged in to the contrary—that so far as the "Mormon" people are concerned the Democratic party has abandoned whatever high principles it once had and has become the party of intolerant, selfish, cruel, relentless religious persecution, and is a violator of the National Constitution in so far as that great charter of human liberty guarantees freedom to worship God to all citizens, "Mormons" or otherwise, and to exercise the full rights of citizenship now enjoyed. And, further, the policy now being followed by the Democratic party toward the "Mormon" people is a rank and inexcusable betrayal of every trust reposed in the party by any "Mormon" who ever voted a Democratic ticket. By its treachery to the "Mormon" voters, who have honored and trusted it so oft, the Democratic party merits the enmity and execration of every "Mormon" and of every lover of human liberty, political or religious.

Summed up, the facts show conclusively that the Republican party throughout the whole nation is united in defending the rights of the Mormon people as citizens. On the other hand, they also show that the Democratic party throughout the whole nation, with perhaps the exception of the Democrats in Utah, is antagonistic to and arrayed against the Mormon people. In fact, there is no difference in that respect between the so-called "American" party and the Democratic party. Even in Utah, while the Democratic party has not declared for the wholesale disfranchisement of the Mormon people, it has declared practically for the disfranchisement of a certain class of Mormons.

It can be shown conclusively that not only is the Republican party stronger in this State than the Democratic party, but it is also stronger in Salt Lake County, and consequently all good citizens, irrespective of party, should vote the Republican ticket to overthrow the "American" party.

Conservative Democrats readily admit that there are very few of their class left in the Democratic ranks; they also admit that there are now more Gentiles in the Republican party than in the Democratic party.

In the last city election R. P. Morris, the Democratic nominee for mayor, ran considerably ahead of the ticket, and received a large number of Republican votes. The Democratic councilmanic ticket was ahead of the Republican only about 412 votes. This year it is a county election. About one-third of the vote is outside of Salt Lake City. In the last county election, with the "American" ticket in the field, Congressman HOWELL had 1,616 votes in excess of O. W. Powers. It is conceded that the article appearing in the Deseret News the night before election drove Gentile Republicans into the "American" ranks and "Mormon" Republicans into voting the Democratic ticket. The last election returns show that the Republican party, while in the county outside of the city, it is over 1,600 votes ahead.

I have been a life-long Democrat, but for the foregoing reasons I will not give further support to the political party which has shown so much unjust discrimination and bitter enmity toward an unoffending and patriotic people.

A. MILTON MUSER.

This is signed by A. Milton Muser, and published in the Intermountain Republican, a paper which is understood at any rate to be the official organ of the senior Senator from Utah, and it would not have been published, as I have stated, unless with the advice and consent of Joseph F. Smith.

The following resolution, referred to by Mr. Muser, was presented to the Republican State convention September 21, 1906:

Be it further resolved, That the Republican party of the State of Utah hereby declares and affirms that it is opposed to the union of church and state, and that it is unalterably opposed to any high ecclesiast of any denomination whatsoever seeking and asking for political preferment and benefit of civil office, or unduly interfering with politics while he is holding any high ecclesiastical or church position, and for the future, and in order to promote tranquillity, perfect equality, and the best possible progress of the State, the Republican party will use its endeavors to enforce and maintain this principle.

That was offered by a young Mormon, and they immediately asked him when he had apostacized; how long he had been out of the church. They did not even give the poor young Mormon the privilege of allowing the resolution to be voted on. They simply smothered it out with ridicule.

That was the situation of affairs in Utah and in Idaho, as I have tried to convey it.

In Idaho the Republican party is allied with the Mormons. The vote of the State is divided about as follows:

Republicans	28,000
Mormons	17,000
Democrats	18,000
Socialists	5,000
Prohibitionists	2,000
Total	70,000

The Democratic party is making its fight in Idaho against the domination of the polygamous Mormon hierarchy in the politics of the State.

In southeastern Idaho, where the Mormons are in absolute control, there are American county tickets, the same as in Utah, composed of Republican and Democratic Gentiles. It is an unequal fight. The Mormons absolutely dominate the Republican party and elect its ticket. President Roosevelt sent Secretary of War Taft to Idaho to aid the Mormon nominee for governor and to say to the Gentile Republicans of Idaho that the Administration desires the election of the Republican-Mormon ticket.

ASSOCIATED PRESS ACCOUNT OF TAFT GOING WEST.

WASHINGTON, D. C., October 22, 1906.

It was announced to-day that Secretary Taft would speak in Representative WACHTER'S district in Baltimore next Friday night, and that according to a programme arranged jointly by Representative SHERMAN, of the Congressional committee, Senator DICK, of Ohio State committee, and Representative BURTON, of Cleveland, he will speak at Cleveland Saturday, in Mr. BURTON'S district, and at Lancaster and Logan, Ohio, on Monday next.

It has not yet been determined whether he will deliver an address in Speaker CANNON'S district or at Omaha, but he will speak in Idaho in the interest of Governor Gooding on the subject of "law and order."

* * * * * * *

This was October 22, 1906, and I immediately wired the President the following:

Press dispatches say you are sending Secretary Taft to Boise, Idaho, to speak for Governor Gooding, in behalf of law and order, and on account of the character of the campaign being made against him. If this is true, you are entirely misinformed. No law and order campaign is being waged in Idaho.

The sole issue is against the domination of the Mormon Church in our politics.

I assure you that you have been misinformed and that it will be understood that Secretary Taft will be sent here to speak in behalf of Mormonism, as that is the sole issue in the Idaho campaign.

The announcement that Secretary Taft was to come brought joy to the hearts of every polygamist in Utah and Idaho. It may not make any difference to the President of the United States, but it does to me, that every minister in Idaho, without exception—Methodist, Presbyterian, Catholic, Episcopalian—supported our contention. Republican ministers everywhere appeared on the platform and introduced me to the audiences. They are familiar with the conditions there, they know what they are, and every Christian minister—I defy them to name a single exception in Idaho—supported the Democratic party in their last campaign. It may not appeal to President Roosevelt, but for me I would sooner have their support and that of the good women of this land in this fight for principle than to have the support of this polygamous hierarchy.

One million and more petitions came here to this Senate asking that the apostle Senator from Utah be denied his seat. Do you think those good women did not know what they were doing? Who pass for you your child-labor laws, your juvenile-court laws? Who look after your hospitals? Who keep pure the home, the foundation on which this Republic can rest only with security? Were it not for the good women of this land we would wander far from the right. It is through their exertions that all this legislation which makes us an enlightened nation comes to pass. They knew what they were doing. They have their missionaries in Utah and Idaho and Wyoming and that part of the country all the time. They get reports from them every month. They know what are the conditions there, and they appeal to you to help the womanhood of the country and the childhood of the country.

It may make no difference to President Roosevelt that he has lost the respect and support of these great women organizations. He may not care, because he has this great political asset which can return six Senators and soon can return ten to this body. I received this letter, which I will read, signed by high officers of these great women organizations of the country:

DEAR SIR: The women of the country recognize the right to religious liberty, which is a fundamental principle of our Government, but they are fully justified in their claim that the Mormon hierarchy is a polygamous, commercial, and political organization that, because of its cloak of religion, received protection for its unlawful acts.

The desire to secure the solid vote of the Mormons, which Joseph F. Smith can promise to whom he will, has caused the investigation into REED SMOOT'S right to a seat in the Senate to drag on for three years, because in that time Presidential and Congressional elections have been held. It has been a bitter sorrow and disappointment to the women to learn that the terrible conditions revealed in Utah and adjoining States sink into insignificance when a political party needs the Mormon vote. Has the time come when the great Republican party, the party of moral issues, the party formed to free the country of polygamy and the union of church and state, will condone these offenses and support those who are responsible for them?

The investigation has proved to any unbiased individual that to-day in Utah, Idaho, and other States there exists in intensified degree a condition of polygamy and union of church and state which, when Utah was a Territory, caused the President and the Congress to confiscate the property of the Mormon Church and deprive them of the franchise.

Leaders of the women's national organizations have traveled extensively through Utah, Idaho, Oregon, and Washington during the last year, and have heard the claim of the Mormon leaders that President Roosevelt is their friend. And in the last election in Utah a letter was written by Elder A. Milton Musser, historian of the Mormon Church, printed and distributed to every Mormon voter, citing instances to prove the friendship and support of the Republican party for the Mormons and ordering them to vote the Republican ticket; also the inclosed advice from President Joseph F. Smith as to how Mormons should vote.

Last May representatives of women's organizations, numbering in their constituency 10,000,000 women, met at the New Willard, in Washington, and unanimously adopted resolutions urging the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections to report on the Smoot case before the closing of the session. They also called on the President at the White House and placed in his hands a copy of the resolution, assuring him that the women of the country, realizing his interest in the sanctity of the home, believed he would aid in destroying this enemy of the home, the wife, and the mother.

Women in Utah and in Idaho who were standing for the protection of their homes, for the protection of their children, and for the freedom from the weight and thraldom of this un-American power, were, with the women of the nation, dismayed when, by the order of the Chief Executive, Secretary Taft visited Idaho just previous to the election in support of the Republican party, which is dominated in these States by the Mormon hierarchy.

The majority of the women enlisted in this battle for the honor of womanhood, for the legitimacy of childhood, and for freedom, purity, and honor, have been lifelong Republicans, and it is with the grief and shame that a mother feels when a loved child goes wrong that the women of the nation note the attitude of those from whom they had expected help and guidance, but who have wandered far from the principles of Lincoln and Grant in condoning the crimes of the Mormon hierarchy and upholding one of its highest officials as a Senator of the United States.

All honor to the brave men who have placed principle above party, and who by either vote or influence have refused to perpetuate the greatest crime of the century.

To them and to God the people must look for relief from the terrible wrongs to womanhood, to childhood, and to the moral tone of the whole community, which would fill volumes if they were printed.

EXECUTIVE BOARD,
League of Women's National Organizations.
Mrs. FREDERIC SCHOOF, Chairman.
Mrs. MARGARET DYE ELLIS, Secretary.

PHILADELPHIA, PA., December 10, 1906.

I appeal to you, brother Senators, as representatives of American States, to aid us in the continuation of the struggle for American institutions in these States of the American Union. The burden, the hardship, falls on us who live amidst these conditions, as it always has and always must. We ask you not to allow the apostle Senator from Utah to retain a seat in this great body of lawmakers for an enlightened nation. Should you do so and thus vote your approval of Mormonism and your condemnation of our efforts, you will make the fight the harder for us and for them. We think we are entitled to your earnest support. If you will not give this, we demand as our right that the President of the United States cease allowing the power of his great name and office to be invoked and made use of against our efforts.

Mormon domination and American Commonwealths can not exist together under our system of government. One or the other must be destroyed. The American States will survive in our mountain country, and no President or party, however, great or powerful, can make them long continue subservient to priestly rule.

In closing, I warn the Republican party not to reenact the darkest page of its history when they undertook to place the negro in control in the South. It has resulted in a solid white South against you. If you attempt to put in control of the American citizenship of the Rocky Mountain States this Mormon hierarchy you will find your support narrowed in the future to the followers of the Mormon hierarchy. [Manifestations of applause in the galleries.]

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, December 13, 1906.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

HON. ERNEST M. POLLARD.

Mr. POLLARD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer a privileged resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska offers the following resolution as a matter of privilege. The Clerk will report the same.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas on July 18, 1905, ERNEST M. POLLARD was elected to fill the vacancy in the Fifty-ninth Congress caused by the resignation of Hon. E. J. BURKETT; and

Whereas the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives paid

ERNEST M. POLLARD for the period intervening between March 4, 1905, the beginning of the Fifty-ninth Congress, and July 18, 1905, the date of his election thereto; and

Whereas Mr. POLLARD's legal right to receive pay for this period has been questioned and his action in accepting it has been severely criticised by certain parties; and

Whereas section 51 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, under which payment was made, has never been construed by the courts in a case exactly like this: Therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives, That this whole matter be referred to the Judiciary Committee of the House with instructions to investigate the legal questions involved and report its conclusions to this House before the termination of the present Congress.

Mr. POLLARD. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the resolution.

The question was taken; and the resolution was agreed to.

INVESTIGATION OF PRICES OF LUMBER.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up resolution No. 652, and ask unanimous consent for that privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolution No. 652.

Resolved, That the Secretary of Commerce and Labor be, and is hereby, requested to investigate the cause of the high prices of lumber in the various stages of manufacture, and the said investigation shall be conducted with the particular object of ascertaining whether or not these high prices have resulted in whole or in part from any contract, agreement, or combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy in restraint of commerce among the several States and Territories or with foreign countries; also whether the said prices have been manipulated in whole or in part by any corporation, joint stock company, or corporate combination engaged in commerce among the several States or with foreign nations, and if so, to investigate the organization, capitalization, profits, conduct and management of the business of such corporations, companies, or corporate combinations, and make early report of his findings according to law.

To carry out and give effect to the provisions of the resolution the Secretary shall have power to issue subpœnas, administer oaths, examine witnesses, require the production of books and papers, and receive depositions taken before any proper officers in any State in the United States.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands this is a request to discharge the Committee on the Judiciary from the further consideration of the resolution and to consider it in the House at this time. Is there objection?

Mr. DE ARMOND. What resolution is that?

The SPEAKER. The resolution which has just been read. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman a question? I do not object to the consideration of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands there is no objection to the consideration. Does the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MILLER. I do.

Mr. BARTLETT. I desire to know what provision is made in the resolution to pay the expenses of this investigation, or whether there is a fund provided by law for the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to pay the expense of having this investigation made? In other words, it would be useless to pass a resolution directing the investigation to be made, witnesses to be summoned, and testimony taken if money is not provided for it. I did not hear read any provision in the resolution providing money for the investigation.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, in answer to the gentleman's question, if I get it correctly, there is no question about the fund to carry out this investigation, and the House, I think, is exceedingly anxious that an investigation of this kind should be made, at least the country is, and we are exceedingly anxious to get it passed just as soon as possible so that this investigation may be commenced.

Mr. BARTLETT. If the gentleman will permit me to say, I do not object to it. I am as much in favor of an investigation as anyone, and I hope the resolution will be passed. The gentleman misunderstands me. He thinks I am opposing the resolution and I am not. I am merely suggesting to the gentleman that in undertaking to provide for the investigation there ought to be means provided for the purpose of doing it completely. You remember the President returned a like resolution in respect to the oil investigation and the coal investigation to the House with the suggestion they had not provided funds for the purpose of carrying on the investigation, and if this resolution needs such an amendment providing for a fund I think the gentleman ought to provide for it, and for one I will vote for it.

Mr. MILLER. As far as the question of money for the purpose of carrying out the investigation is concerned, if they have not a sufficient fund on hand it will be immediately provided for by an appropriation, and I think the gentleman will agree heartily with me, as far as the subject-matter is concerned, that it ought to be passed, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. As I caught the reading of the resolution it applies only to manufacturers of lumber. Now, I think it should read so as to cover the wholesale and retail dealers also, and if in the first case it does not include them it should be amended so as to include wholesale and retail dealers as well as manufacturers.

Mr. MILLER. In my judgment, Mr. Speaker, the whole field will be covered by the language of this resolution.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I would like to have the resolution read again.

Mr. MILLER. It is the question of the high price of lumber through all the stages of its production, and it is sufficiently broad to cover that entire question.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I do not believe that the language is broad enough to cover the wholesalers and retailers.

Mr. MILLER. I want to say to the gentleman that this resolution was referred by the Judiciary Committee to the Department of Commerce and Labor for its views upon the subject, and they have reported back to that committee.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Has the gentleman any objection to amending the resolution?

Mr. MILLER. I would have no objection to that; no. But I think it is sufficiently broad to include all dealers in lumber.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I ask that for this reason, that many of the mill owners state that the price of lumber has not been raised by them, but that it has been raised entirely by the wholesale dealer and the retail dealer. If they are the guilty ones, we ought to amend the resolution. I ask that the resolution be read again.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MILLER] yield for an inquiry?

Mr. MILLER. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman have any objection to amending his resolution so as to ascertain whether or no the present high price of lumber is due in any degree to the present very high prices that the Government is demanding for stumpage of its timber on the forest reserves?

Mr. MILLER. I will answer that question, Mr. Speaker, and I will say again that in my judgment the resolution is broad enough to cover that whole question.

Mr. GILBERT and Mr. HEPBURN rose.

The SPEAKER. To whom does the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MILLER] yield?

Mr. MILLER. To the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN].

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I want to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that his resolution only refers to the manufacture of lumber in its various stages; that it will have no application whatever to the dealer, either wholesale or retail, after it leaves the manufacturer's hands, and it is the contention on the part of dealers, at least, that the high price of lumber is owing to combinations among the manufacturers, while they in turn say that it results from these combinations among the dealers. Now, it seems to me the resolution ought to be modified. This resolution was sent to the Committee on the Judiciary. I suppose that they failed to report it because they recognized the fact that it was not a subject properly before them. If it had been sent to the proper committee, it would have been reported upon long ago and in proper shape.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, in answer to the gentleman from Iowa I desire to state that the Committee on the Judiciary has not reported this resolution for the reason that they have not been able to hold a meeting of that committee for the purpose of considering this question, and I am informed now by a member of that committee, the chairman of it, that the probabilities are they will not have another meeting until after the holidays. That is why I asked this morning for unanimous consent to call up this resolution.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the resolution be read.

Mr. MILLER. Will the Clerk read the resolution?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MILLER] wish the resolution to be read in his time?

Mr. PAYNE. I hope the gentleman from Kansas will let the resolution be read in his time.

Mr. MILLER. I would like to have the resolution read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution the second time.

The resolution was again read.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Now, if the gentleman will yield a minute, I want to suggest that we add, after the words "various stages of manufacture," the words "purchase and sale," and then you will cover the points which have been raised.

Mr. MILLER. I am willing to accept that amendment—that, after the word "manufacture," in line 3, page 1, the words "and sale" be inserted.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 1, line 3, after the word "manufacture," insert the words "and sale."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend by striking out lines 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7, on page 2, as I find upon examination of the law on the subject that they are not necessary. The Secretary now has ample power under the law as it exists.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2 strike out all of lines 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. Has unanimous consent been given for present consideration?

The SPEAKER. It has.

Mr. MANN. Then I would like a moment's time.

Mr. MILLER. I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I simply wish to call the attention of the House to these resolutions for this reason: A resolution somewhat similar to this one went through the House a year or two ago, introduced by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MARTIN], and, as a result of it, it was held by the Federal courts that the beef trust, so called, could not be prosecuted. No one knows just how far an inquiry of this sort might go, and while I have no objection to a proper resolution upon subjects of this kind, it is a very poor legislative method to pass a resolution involving so much without the consideration of the proper committee of the House.

The Judiciary Committee may have given consideration to this subject, but we have no reports from that committee before the House. If the Secretary of Commerce and Labor should desire in his inquiry, or any of his subordinates without desire, should call upon these people to testify under subpœna, all prosecution of them would be ended. The very purpose of resolutions of this kind should be not to excuse the persons who are guilty, but to punish the persons who are guilty. We already have under the railroad-rate law that was passed at the last session of Congress—under a little amendment which was put in from the best of motives—the probability that the Standard Oil Company and its agents will escape conviction, because of the little harmless amendment inserted in that bill from the best of motives. I think that these matters ought to receive consideration by the committee.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I will yield to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, the fears of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] as to any immunity resulting from this investigation or others like it are not well founded. Of course the courts of the United States have been at variance on the interpretation of similar investigations, but at the last session of Congress we passed a law interpreting all of our statutes relating to such investigations, making it impossible in the future to grant immunity to parties examined in these investigations, and making it apply only to cases where parties are called and compelled to testify against their interest in courts. So far as an investigation of the meat trust is concerned, there was no necessity for getting into the position of that investigation of granting immunity to anyone, because it was not necessary to call officers of the suspected corporations upon subjects of that character. Of course, lawyers, I think, agree all over the country that the interpretation placed on the law by Judge Humphrey, as the result of that investigation, was, perhaps, a stretch of the law and not warranted. At all events, subsequent legislation has settled that question so that we can with propriety direct as a House, as well as the Senate can direct as a separate body, investigations in this class of cases. I think we can with propriety direct investigations of this character without the fear suggested by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will pardon me——

Mr. MILLER. I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. If I remember, the gentleman was of the same impression about his own resolution. He and I discussed it several times before I consented that the House should take it up by unanimous consent. He was equally confident that his resolution could under no circumstances permit the people engage in the claimed conspiracy of the beef trust to get out, while I had suspicion that it might have that result.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, I will call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois to the fact that all subsequent investigations of the Standard Oil, the coal trust, and other combinations have been made under resolutions following precisely the language of the one referred to, and the Department has steered clear of the complications which I think they unwittingly allowed themselves to be drawn into in the beef-trust investigation, which was the first of the kind.

Mr. MANN. It remains to be determined whether they have or not. They have not tried those cases in court yet.

Mr. MARTIN. Very well; but I think we have covered the whole subject now by legislation, so that I think there will be no danger in the future.

Mr. MANN. But I do not think we have.

Mr. MARTIN. At all events, there is nothing in that suggestion that would, I think, make it reasonable that this House should hesitate in its effort to arrive at the facts regarding any of these great combinations which are oppressing the country. Certainly the administrative officers of the Government have had their eyes sufficiently opened now to proceed with due caution in their investigations, and I have no doubt they will do so.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will pardon me, Mr. Speaker, in the last session of Congress, as I stated before, in the railroad rate bill, there was a provision put in the law stating that although there was a repeal of conflicting statutes, that repeal should not affect prosecutions then pending in court, and it was assumed in the House that that would cover all cases of violation of the law previous to that date. Now, the Standard Oil people have been indicted for violations of section 1 of the Elkins law, which it is assumed has been repealed by the interstate-commerce law, and this little harmless provision of law providing that the repeal should not affect prosecutions pending in court is now said itself to that extent to repeal the general provision of the statute providing that a repeal shall not affect any prosecution, and to exempt the Standard Oil people from prosecution for offenses where they were not pending in court at the time of the passage of the railroad rate act, leaving them out from prosecution for all offenses previous to the time of the passage of the railroad rate act. It is just such harmless things that creep into legislation without proper consideration by a committee which defeat the ends of justice and prevent the prosecution of these men engaged in these combinations; and it seems to me a violent presumption to think that a resolution brought in here without consideration by a committee is equally guarded with one considered by the great Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, I think the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] upon the subject of the repeal clause in the railroad rate bill hardly germane to the present discussion. Here is a resolution that now comes in proper form before this House for consideration. It is upon a matter of vital importance. The investigation ought to be had. Anyone familiar with the subject knows that the great advances in lumber over the country during the past five years have been so enormous as to properly attract the attention of the legislative branch of this Government and to demand an investigation. I think the resolution is in the form that we have adopted time and again in substance, and I think we can safely proceed to its passage at this time.

Mr. MILLER. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES].

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, this resolution, whether carefully digested by its author or not—and I take it that it has been—does not cover what might be called the "log trust." It provides for the high prices of lumber in the various stages of manufacture. It seems to me that it may be made a broader and a better resolution if it would apply also to timber and logs and lumber, etc. I suggest something of that sort.

Mr. BANNON. Is not a log in process of manufacture as soon as it is cut from the tree?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I am coming to that. Suppose these great concerns have bought in bulk, as they have done, great counties of trees fit for lumber, and they hold that timber there and put it on the market when they choose, and put up the price when they choose, when it is in the tree, and when it is in the log, and before it is manufactured into lumber—before it is lumber at all. I think if this matter be referred to the Judiciary Committee or to the Committee on Commerce, with directions to report a bill back here in three or four days, we can get a better resolution than this, though I shall vote for this.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. JENKINS].

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, in view of the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], I think perhaps I owe the House an explanation. I would like to call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois to the fact that this resolution was introduced into the House on the 10th of this month. Immediately upon its being received by the Committee on the Judiciary I sent a copy of the resolution to the Department of Commerce and Labor, with a letter. I have not yet had a reply to that communication, but just a few moments ago the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MILLER] submitted to me a letter addressed to myself from the Department of Commerce and Labor with reference to this subject. Now, the gentleman will see from my statement that it has been absolutely impossible for the Committee on the Judiciary to consider this resolution. We did not feel like taking it up until we had heard from the Department of Commerce and Labor. I will now ask the Clerk to read in my time the letter from the Department of Commerce and Labor which was handed to me by the gentleman from Kansas and which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE AND LABOR, BUREAU OF CORPORATIONS,
Washington, December 13, 1906.

Hon. JOHN J. JENKINS,
Chairman Judiciary Committee, House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: By telephone conversation with Congressman MILLER yesterday I understand that both he and you desire expression of opinion from this Bureau upon House resolution No. 652, December 10, 1906, requesting investigation of the lumber industry by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor.

In reply thereto allow me to make a suggestion that lines 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7, on page 2, beginning with the words "to carry out" and ending with the words "United States," be stricken out entirely, for the reason that the organic act of this Department now gives the Commissioner of Corporations power to issue such subpœnas, administer oaths, etc., as set forth in the said five lines. There is, therefore, no need to give this power in the said resolution. Furthermore, the said powers in the organic act and the results of the exercise thereof have been carefully defined by "the act defining immunity of witnesses," etc., approved June 30, 1906, with the purpose of clearly determining all questions of immunity which might arise under the powers given the Commissioner.

Should the said lines referred to remain in the said resolution it is obvious that further questions might arise on this question of immunity.

Very respectfully,

HERBERT KNOX SMITH,
Deputy Commissioner.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I call for a vote on the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. MILLER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

TEMPORARY WITHDRAWAL OF CERTAIN COAL LANDS.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I present for consideration a privileged resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolution No. 643.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, requested to transmit to the House of Representatives a full and complete description of all public lands which have been withdrawn or reserved from entry, filing, or selection since the 1st day of July, 1906, together with a report as to the reasons for the said withdrawals and reservations, and as to the character of the same, and the present status of the lands relative to entry, filing, and selection under the land laws; also a tabulated statement of the areas withdrawn for various purposes in each public-land State and the total areas withdrawn in each State and in all of the public-land States.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

After the word "State," where it first appears in line 11, insert the words "and Territory;" in line 11 strike out the words "in each State and;" and at the end of the bill add the words "and Territories," and as amended that it do pass.

Mr. MONDELL. I ask that the amendments be agreed to.

The question was taken; and the amendments were agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 21574, being the bill providing for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider the bill H. R. 21574.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Speaker, pending the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I ask unanimous consent that an amendment or amendments be considered and be in order to the bill making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government (H. R. 21574) in the Committee of the Whole, increasing the compensation of the Speaker, Members, and Delegates of the House of Representatives, the Vice-President and Senators, and members of the Cabinet.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the request.

The Clerk read as follows:

I ask unanimous consent that an amendment or amendments may be considered and be in order to the bill making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government (H. R. 21574) in the Committee of the Whole, increasing the compensation of the Speaker, Members, and Delegates of the House of Representatives, the Vice-President, Senators, and members of the Cabinet.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GILBERT. Would it be in order to add to that resolution "and clerks in the Departments?" If that is in order, I move that as an amendment.

Mr. LITTAUER. I could not now accept such an amendment. It is an entirely different field of service and has very broad bearings, differing widely from those concerned in this request for unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. LITTAUER. I trust the gentleman from Alabama will withhold his objection to this request for unanimous consent in order that it may be considered in Committee of the Whole, so that we may get an expression of the Committee of the Whole on the subject. The request for unanimous consent will preclude a point of order being made in the committee against the consideration of a subject which has received general approval outside of Congress as well as in it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is my very proposition. If this was a proposition that it should be considered in the House, it would be another matter. If the gentleman will ask unanimous consent to consider the proposition in the House and the House wishes to consider it, while I am against the proposition, I would not object to that.

Mr. LITTAUER. This is an appropriation and would necessarily have to go to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No; I do not look upon it as a proposition to appropriate money; I look upon it as a change of existing law, so far as that is concerned.

Mr. LITTAUER. Which, in effect, requires an appropriation of money.

Mr. MANN. Would not the gentleman agree to an amendment giving consideration in the House, and if the amendment should be adopted to the bill, that that amendment would be considered separately in the House?

Mr. LITTAUER. I not only agree to that, but——

The SPEAKER. The Chair will suggest to the gentleman from New York that it is quite competent for the House by unanimous consent, if it desires so to do, after this bill is reported from the Committee of the Whole House, to agree at this time that the matter about which the gentleman asks unanimous consent shall be considered in the House as an amendment to the bill, if it be reported from the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Now, Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman from New York that so far as I am concerned, if he desires to make his request that this matter may be considered, while I am opposed to the matter and intend to vote against it, I am perfectly willing that the House should consider it in the House; and if he will make his request that this matter shall be considered in the House after the House comes out of the Committee of the Whole on this bill, and will state that he will allow a reasonable time for debate on the question, I shall not object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman modifies his objection.

Mr. LITTAUER. I modify my request to include the condition stated by the gentleman from Alabama.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question was then taken on the motion to go into Committee of the Whole.

The motion was agreed to; and the House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. HEPBURN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 21574.

The Clerk read as follows:

For compensation to the following in the office of the President of the United States: Secretary, $5,000; two assistant secretaries, at $3,000 each; executive clerk, $2,500; executive clerk and disbursing officer, $2,000; seven clerks, at $2,000 each; one clerk of class 4, who shall be a telegrapher; four clerks of class 3; two clerks of class 2; steward, $1,800; chief doorkeeper, $1,800; eight doorkeepers, at $1,200 each; four messengers, at $1,200 each; five messengers, at $900 each; watchman, $900; one fireman; laborer, $720; laborer, $600; in all, $67,740: Provided, That employees of the Executive Departments and other establishments of the executive branch of the Government may be detailed from time to time to the office of the President of the United States for such temporary assistance as may be necessary.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order upon the paragraph, and wish to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill a question. I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill whether there is any record as to the number of employees who are temporarily transferred from the different Departments to the office of the President?

Mr. BINGHAM. If the gentleman will refer to the bill, from line 14 to and including line 18, page 35, that is in existing law.

Mr. MANN. I understand it is in existing law, but that does not authorize it here. I have no objection to the item, but I would like——

Mr. BINGHAM. The view the committee took was that the existing law seemed to be acceptable, and no proposition to change having been submitted, your committee as a rule continues current law.

Mr. MANN. I do not understand that to be the rule.

Mr. LITTAUER. There was no information brought to our committee, at least, as to how much advantage was taken of the privilege.

Mr. MANN. Are any of these people permanently employed up there, do you know?

Mr. LITTAUER. None; of that I am quite confident.

Mr. BINGHAM. There was no statement submitted whatever.

Mr. MANN. I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Rural carrier examining board: For one chief of division, $2,000; one clerk of class 3; two clerks of class 2; three clerks of class 1; three clerks, at $1,000 each; ten clerks, at $900 each, and one assistant messenger; in all, $22,720: Provided, That no detail of clerks or other employees from the Executive Departments or other Government establishments in Washington, D. C., to the Civil Service Commission, for the performance of duty in the District of Columbia, shall be made for or during the fiscal year 1908. The Civil Service Commission shall, however, have power to transfer or detail any of its employees herein provided for to or from its office force, field force, or rural carrier examining board.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on lines 14 to 17, page 37.

Mr. BINGHAM. I will state to the gentleman that is current law.

Mr. MANN. If it is law it does not need to go in here, and if it is not law it is not entitled to go in here.

Mr. LITTAUER. It is current law, and I will give you an explanation of it. The Civil Service Commission has, year after year, asked us to amalgamate three forces together—the office force, the field force, and the rural carrier examining board. We have, however, declared we will not accept these lumpings of clerical assistance, but we want to know what each one has to do. Consequently we divided the force into three branches, and yet there are times when the clerks from one branch—for instance, the rural carrier examining board—must help out the field force or the office force, and in order to give them the privilege of utilizing services not required in one branch in another branch we have added that provision, which obtains in every Department.

Mr. MANN. I beg the gentleman's pardon; I do not think it is a provision that obtains in every Department, and I see no special reason why the Civil Service Commission should be the first to violate the law.

Mr. LITTAUER. I think you are wrong. I think every Department has a right to transfer clerks from one bureau of the Department to another bureau, and it has the express statutory privilege. Here is a small bureau, or department you can call it, with three branches. We specify the force for each one of the three and then say if you have at any time an emergency in any one of those three branches take your additional assistants required from one of the other branches.

Mr. MANN. If you say "in case of an emergency" they can do this, I have no objection; but the fact is, you divide the force into three branches and then provided that they could use the men in any branch for the work in another branch and not pay any attention whatever to the division.

Mr. LITTAUER. But they do pay attention to the division, and come here every year asking us to wipe out the three divisions. They did it this year.

Mr. MANN. I understand that; but I understand also that in effect they do wipe out these divisions which you insist upon preserving and thus permit them to escape from. They do make an escape. If you say in case of an emergency they can make the transfer, very well.

Mr. LITTAUER. There would be no harm at all in saying that. If the gentleman desires to offer an amendment, I surely will not object to it.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman offer it?

Mr. BINGHAM. They will determine what is the emergency.

Mr. MANN. They pay no attention to it practically at all, I am told——

Mr. LITTAUER. Would the gentleman suppose the use of the word "emergency" would make any difference?

Mr. MANN. Oh, yes; it would make a difference.

Mr. LITTAUER. I have no objection, if it will result in better administration. That is the purpose of your committee in submitting this.

Mr. MANN. How would it do to insert "have power in case of emergency to transfer or detail?"

Mr. BINGHAM. There is no objection.

Mr. MANN. I withdraw the point of order, Mr. Chairman, and offer an amendment, to insert, after the word "power," in line 14, the words "in case of emergency."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 37, line 14, after the word "power," insert "in case of emergency."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Secretary of the Treasury shall each year prepare and submit in his annual report to Congress estimates of the public revenue and the public expenditures for the fiscal year current, and also for the fiscal year next ensuing at the time said report is submitted, together with a statement of the receipts and expenditures of the Government for the preceding completed fiscal year.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order upon that paragraph.

Mr. BINGHAM. What does the gentleman wish?

Mr. MANN. I would like to know why it should go in the bill.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Is this new?

Mr. BINGHAM. The chairman of the committee has had some correspondence in connection with this suggested amendment to the current law, and he will explain the character of the information that he desires.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I will state for the information of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], and for the information of the committee, the reason for this provision. Until last year it was the custom of the Secretary of the Treasury, in his annual report, to include not only statements of expenditures, but also an estimate of the amount of revenue the Secretary of the Treasury has reason to believe the Government will receive during the next fiscal year. It is upon this estimate that the amount of the budgets or appropriation bills are largely based. For the fiscal year 1906 the Secretary of the Treasury omitted this estimate from his annual report. In submitting to the House, at the close of the last session, a statement of the aggregate appropriations the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations was unable to obtain from the Treasury Department an estimate of the revenues for the fiscal year 1907 for which Congress made the appropriations.

I personally addressed a letter to the Secretary for the purpose of obtaining an estimate. I did not care to bring it into the House or have the statement go to the country that we had appropriated about $880,000,000 for the fiscal year 1907 without being able to show that the Government was reasonably certain of having sufficient revenue during the year to meet these appropriations. Thereupon I wrote a letter to the Secretary and asked him to give me an estimate of the probable revenue for that year, calling his attention to the fact that his annual report did not, as usual, contain this estimate. The Secretary declined, saying that it would be only a guess, and that he did not care to make a guess on the subject. There is no department of the Government so well equipped to estimate with reasonable certainty the revenues for the coming fiscal year as the Treasury Department. It has therefore been the custom for Congress to rely upon these estimates in preparing the appropriations. In view of the necessity for this information and the fact that it was refused, your committee felt justified in proposing this provision for that purpose. Without this estimate Congress has nothing to guide it in determining whether the aggregate of appropriations will exceed the revenues or not.

Mr. MANN. Has this matter been brought to the attention of the Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. TAWNEY. This provision?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. TAWNEY. It has not. It was brought to his attention by me as chairman of the Committee on Appropriations before the close of last session, when in a letter I requested the Secretary to give the committee an estimate of the revenue and he declined.

Mr. MANN. And in response he stated it was impossible.

Thereupon you propose by law to compel him to do that which he says is impossible.

Mr. TAWNEY. It has not been impossible in the past. It has been the uniform custom for a great many years for the Secretary of the Treasury to submit an estimate of revenue for the coming fiscal year, and the present Secretary himself submitted an estimate in the annual report preceding his annual report for the fiscal year 1906.

Mr. MANN. He says now that those estimates are valueless.

Mr. TAWNEY. They have served as a guide, and it is very important to the general public and to Congress to know whether or not——

Mr. MANN. I would not dispute the word of the eminent chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, although I have never noticed that Congress paid much attention to that estimate in making appropriations.

Mr. TAWNEY. The gentleman from Illinois can not cite us to an instance when Congress deliberately appropriated beyond the estimated revenue. The gentleman must also know that in the preparation of appropriation bills Congress must necessarily have information as to the probable revenues of the Government for the fiscal year for which it makes appropriations.

Now, to what Department of the Government can Congress look for that information if not to the Treasury Department? That Department controls all the machinery for the collection of revenue. It is in touch with the revenues of the Government and is charged with the execution of the revenue laws. Certainly if it is not possible for the Treasury Department to give it, it would be impossible for any other Department to furnish it. The estimate submitted at the last session is an estimate that the chairman himself made, showing a surplus of $40,000,000, and is the only official estimate of revenue for this fiscal year Congress or the country has had. There is no foreign government that does not submit to the legislative department its estimate of the revenues, and upon these estimates the appropriations are based.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Why does the Secretary of the Treasury decline to give this information?

Mr. TAWNEY. Well, the only answer we received was that it would be a mere guess. That is the language, as I now recall.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman disagree with the Secretary of the Treasury upon the matter?

Mr. TAWNEY. I do.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Will this impose additional labor on the Government?

Mr. TAWNEY. Not at all.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Will it cost the Government anything at all?

Mr. TAWNEY. Nothing at all.

Mr. MANN. That is what I want to know about.

Mr. TAWNEY. The Secretary is guessing upon the revenues of the current year from day to day. We are now told by the Treasury Department that the surplus during this fiscal year will amount to in the neighborhood of $55,000,000 or $60,000,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. What the gentleman says is so patent, apparently, that it seems to me that before enacting legislation along these lines to compel a public servant to do this thing which he has been doing in the past, but which he now refuses to do, that we ought to know from him why he has refused.

Mr. TAWNEY. I did say why he has refused.

Mr. MANN. Would the gentleman tell us why?

Mr. TAWNEY. I said he refused because he considered his estimate a mere guess.

Mr. MANN. He refused to give the gentleman the information in response to a private letter?

Mr. TAWNEY. No; it was not a private letter, it was an official letter.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman stated he addressed it.

Mr. TAWNEY. I addressed him as chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MANN. He was not required by law or custom to do so.

Mr. TAWNEY. He was required by custom to submit estimates of the revenues, and I maintain that a fair construction of his duties as defined by law requires him to do so. As to why it was not done this year I do not know. I do not say this or propose this provision in any spirit of criticism or as any reflection upon the Secretary.

Mr. MANN. I do not care whether you are making a reflection or not.

Mr. TAWNEY. I have no doubt that the Secretary will comply, and all Secretaries will comply with this provision hereafter to the best of their ability, and that is all we expect. I do not think Congress ought to be put in the position of being left to depend upon the whim of any future Secretary of the Treasury as to whether he shall give information as to what the revenues of the Government will be for the next fiscal year. Certain it is he can give a reasonably accurate estimate with the information the Treasury Department has at its hand and its facilities for obtaining information.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman assumes here is a matter of interesting information that must be obtained from the Secretary of the Treasury, information that the Secretary has heretofore afforded, and that the Secretary has now refused to give that information, and thereupon the gentleman stops.

Mr. TAWNEY. No, I do not.

Mr. MANN. We ought to know from the Secretary of the Treasury why he has declined to give this information.

Mr. TAWNEY. There is nothing further to do in respect to obtaining that information but to put a provision in here requiring the Treasury Department, as a matter of law, to submit it.

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman ought to ask the Secretary of the Treasury why he declined to give the information.

Mr. BRICK. He did.

Mr. TAWNEY. I can submit the letter to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. I take the gentleman's word for it.

Mr. BRICK. The gentleman stated that the Secretary did not give the information because it would be a mere guess.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Who disputes his explanation?

Mr. MANN. If that be the truth, that this is a mere guess, then it ought not to be enacted into law.

Mr. BONYNGE. The chairman does not agree with him that this is a mere guess.

Mr. TAWNEY. It is not necessarily a mere guess. It has not been so in the past, and I do not think it will be so in the future.

Mr. MANN. Does the chairman think this is necessary?

Mr. TAWNEY. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. MANN. The Clerk will not read until we dispose of the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not understand the gentleman had made any point of order.

Mr. MANN. I reserved it, but I now withdraw the point.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of assistant treasurer at Chicago: For assistant treasurer, $5,000; cashier, $3,000; vault clerk, $1,800; paying teller, $1,800; assorting teller, $1,800; silver and redemption teller, and change teller, at $1,800 each; receiving teller, $1,700; clerk, $1,600; bookkeeper, $1,800; two bookkeepers, at $1,500 each; assistant paying teller, $1,500; four coin, coupon, and currency clerks, at $1,500 each; twenty-six clerks, at $1,200 each; one detective and hall man, $1,100; messenger, $840; stenographer, $900; janitor, $600; and three watchmen, at $720 each; in all, $69,400.

Mr. MANN. I move to strike out the last word. I have called the attention of the committee upon several occasions to the discrepancy in the salaries paid in the offices of the assistant treasurers. Chicago, which does the largest business in volume outside of New York City—and possibly in the number of transactions almost as large a business as New York City, because Chicago has an immense field from the Post-Office Department, which makes daily remittances, much larger than New York City—Chicago is discriminated against even in this bill.

In Boston there are four employees in the subtreasury receiving salaries of $2,000 and upward. In Philadelphia there are three, in St. Louis there are two, in New Orleans there are three, in San Francisco there are six; while in Chicago there is but one.

In addition to that fact, the responsibility which some of these tellers assume is very great. During the last year or two in Chicago, when a new assistant treasurer was appointed, one or two of the tellers, who had taken in money theretofore passed and accepted by the Government in the form in which it was, under the rules and regulations of the Treasury Department, had coin thrown back upon them to the extent of several hundred dollars each. These gentlemen receive the munificent salary of seventeen or eighteen hundred dollars a year. Now, I wish to ask the gentleman if he is not willing to make some increases in this office? If there ever was a time when we could make an increase, it is now. If there ever was a time when it was needed, it is now. With the exception of the one increase that is proposed in the bill and two increases which were made two or three years ago, there has been no increase in the salaries of these employees for many, many years.

Mr. BINGHAM. I submit to the gentleman that there has been no intentional discrimination against Chicago.

Mr. MANN. No; I understand that.

Mr. BINGHAM. So far as the Chicago office is concerned, I have no doubt the gentleman approves of the increase of $500 which we have given. There is no doubt that Chicago is the second subtreasury—next to New York; but during the past ten years there has been a large increase in the force of the Chicago office; perhaps larger than in any other subtreasury in the country.

Mr. MANN. An increase in the force and in the business, but not in the compensation of individuals.

Mr. BINGHAM. An occasional increase in compensation and a large increase in the force, and there has never been, if I remember, what might be called a serious complaint. All the subtreasurers asked increases, and there was no special insistence with regard to this subtreasury; and your committee felt that as the force was ample for the work and that they have been receiving a reasonable compensation, with the one exception which we increased and which we called an exception, it was fair to continue the office under its present ratings and allowances.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will pardon me, he says there has been no insistence before the committee. The subtreasurer in Chicago is forbidden, and the officials of the subtreasury there are forbidden, to appear before your committee, and they are forbidden to appeal to Members of Congress.

Mr. BINGHAM. That is true.

Mr. MANN. They are forbidden to do anything, and there is nothing that can be done except a recommendation through the Department. I take it that that recommendation was made to your committee.

Mr. BINGHAM. In a general way, yes, just as the Department makes many recommendations, but your committee reached the conclusion, after hearing Mr. Keep, who went into the matter with considerable detail, as the gentleman knows if he has read the hearings——

Mr. MANN. I have never seen the hearings on that subject, so I do not know. But I know this, if I may say so to the gentleman—I know there has been a most insistent demand on the part of the retiring assistant treasurer and upon the part of the one who has recently been appointed that these salaries be increased, this recommendation having been made after investigation, and I know they have not been able to obtain and retain good employees in some of these places. There have been a number of changes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. MANN. I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. BINGHAM. I have made all the explanation that it is possible to make. I think it is a fair explanation. The work is being done well. There may be some reasonable criticism as to the compensations, but your committee reached the conclusion that the conditions at the independent treasuries might remain as they were, with the little change made in Chicago, without any injury to the public service.

Mr. MANN. I assure the gentleman that it is injuring the public service in Chicago. They have a row on now, growing out of having these very clerks held responsible for the acceptance of this coin. There has been a row between the Treasury Department and the retiring subtreasurer in reference to that.

Mr. BINGHAM. That is in litigation.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no, it is not, and we will never submit to its going that far; but the Government is requiring a very unjust thing on the part of the subtreasurer, for the reason that these employees were not able out of their salaries to replace the coin which they had on hand, but which the Government would not accept as current funds.

Mr. BINGHAM. The gentleman sees that that would open up a question of which we could not take cognizance, unless the gentleman sees proper to offer independent legislation as to the responsibility whenever in the operation of any financial institution such a question as this should arise.

Mr. MANN. If we hold a clerk responsible for such things, after the coin has once been accepted by the Government, I want to see the clerk paid salary enough so that we may properly hold him responsible. But why should the teller in Chicago receive a salary of $1,800, and tellers in Boston, Philadelphia, St. Louis, and San Francisco, doing not one-tenth of the business, receive salaries of $2,000, $2,200, or $2,500?

Mr. BINGHAM. Oh, yes; they do more than the gentleman says, because Philadelphia comes next to Chicago in the amount of business.

Mr. MANN. I do not mean to say that all of these places do not do one-tenth of the business.

Mr. BINGHAM. The committee have endeavored to do substantial justice.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I suppose there is no arguing with the gentleman, but I move to amend by striking out, in line 11, page 65, the words "one thousand eight hundred" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "two thousand."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 65, line 11, strike out "one thousand eight hundred" and insert "two thousand."

Mr. BINGHAM. I make the point of order against that.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the point of order?

Mr. BINGHAM. I make the point of order that it changes existing law. The authorization of the law is $1,800.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman the statute before him—the present law?

Mr. BINGHAM. The present appropriation law governs the proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. Can the gentleman from Illinois state whether the statute fixes the salary at $2,000? Will the gentleman from Illinois cite the statute, if such a statute exists?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, there is no statute fixing the salary of any of these officers, except the current appropriation act.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the Chair would ask the gentleman what was the amount carried in the last appropriation bill?

Mr. MANN. I have no doubt the gentleman is correct. As I understand, the gentleman from Pennsylvania states that it was the same amount that is in this bill—$1,800.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the point of order is sustained.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, before the Chair finally rules, may I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that under the ruling of the Chair last year the whole item is probably subject to a point of order, because, as I understand, the ruling of the Chair last year was that where there was no authority of law for an office the item was subject to a point of order. If the item in the original instance in this case was subject to a point of order, changing the amount is not subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that this item was appropriated for in the identical language of the last appropriation bill. If that is so, then the point of order is sustained.

Mr. MANN. The ruling last year by the gentleman in the chair at that time was, that although the current appropriation act appropriated for certain clerks at a certain salary, that did not warrant the same item being included in the bill then pending unless it was authorized by statute. That was the ruling last year, resulting in the throwing out of a great number of these officers, clerks, and salaries, to such an extent that the committee were compelled to appeal to the Committee on Rules, which brought in a special rule giving the right to the consideration of these items in the bill. If that ruling was right last year, this item in the original instance was subject to a point of order. I know there has been a lot of holding, and I think the Chair can find authority to hold any way the Chair desires on this matter.

The CHAIRMAN. In view of that suggestion, the Chair will adhere to his ruling. [Laughter.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. SHERMAN having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 6855. An act to amend the act approved August 19, 1890, entitled "An act to adopt regulations for preventing collisions at sea."

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 81, line 3, strike out the words "six hundred and twenty" and insert in lieu thereof "five hundred and sixty."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR.

Office of the Secretary: For compensation of the Secretary of the Interior, $8,000; First Assistant Secretary, $4,500, and for additional compensation while the office is held by the present incumbent, $1,500; Assistant Secretary, $4,500; chief clerk, $2,500, and $500 additional as superintendent of the Patent Office building and other buildings of the Department of the Interior; additional to one member of Board of Pension Appeals, acting as chief of the board, $500; twelve members of a Board of Pension Appeals, to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, at $2,000 each, including three members to be selected by the Secretary of the Interior from the sixteen additional members of the Board of Pension Appeals appropriated for and employed during the fiscal year 1907; three additional members of said Board of Pension Appeals, to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior and to be selected from the force of the Pension Office, at $2,000 each; special land inspector, connected with the administration of the public-land service, to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior and to be subject to his direction, $2,500; five special inspectors, Department of the Interior, to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior and to be subject to his direction, at $2,500 each; clerk in charge of documents, $2,100; custodian, who shall give bond in such sum as the Secretary of the Interior may determine, $2,100; seven clerks, chiefs of division, at $2,250 each, one of whom shall be disbursing clerk; four clerks, at $2,000 each; private secretary to the Secretary of the Interior, $2,500; sixteen clerks of class 4; sixteen clerks of class 3; twenty-five clerks of class 2; thirty-six clerks of class 1, two of whom shall be stenographers or typewriters; returns office clerk, $1,200; female clerk, to be designated by the President, to sign land patents, $1,200; six clerks, at $1,000 each; one clerk, $900; twelve copyists; two copyists or typewriters, at $900 each; switchboard telephone operator; nine messengers; seven assistant messengers; eighteen laborers; two skilled mechanics, one at $900 and one at $720; two carpenters, at $900 each; plumber, $900; electrician, $1,000; one laborer, $600; six laborers, at $480 each; one packer, $660; two conductors of elevator, at $720 each; four charwomen; captain of the watch, $1,200; forty watchmen; additional to two watchmen acting as lieutenants of watchmen, at $120 each; engineer, $1,200; assistant engineer, $1,000; seven firemen; one clerk, to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, to sign, under the direction of the Secretary, in his name and for him, his approval of all tribal deeds to allottees and deeds for town lots made and executed according to law for any of the Five Civilized Tribes of Indians in the Indian Territory, $1,200; in all, $327,690.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out after the word "each," in line 9, page 106 of the bill, the following:

"Including three members to be selected by the Secretary of the Interior from the sixteen additional members of the Board of Pension Appeals, appropriated for and employed during the fiscal year 1907; three additional members of said Board of Pension Appeals to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior and to be selected from the force of the Pension Office, at $2,000 each," and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"Sixteen additional members of the Board of Pension Appeals, to be selected and appointed by the Secretary of the Interior from persons not now employed in the Pension Office, and without compliance with the conditions prescribed by the act entitled 'An act to regulate and improve the civil service,' approved January 16, 1883, for the fiscal year 1908, at $2,000 each; and vacancies occurring in this force of sixteen additional members of the Board of Pension Appeals during the fiscal year 1908 shall not be filled."

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order that the proposed amendment is a change of existing law.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, the amendment which I have submitted is identical, with the exception of one word, with the current appropriation bill. It is a continuance of the board as created three or four years ago and as carried year after year in the appropriation bill. The only change is of a single word, which is this: In the present appropriation bill it provides that vacancies occurring during the fiscal year of 1907 shall not be refilled. This amendment provides that vacancies occurring in the year 1908 shall not be filled. The provisions are identical, except the word "eight" instead of the word "seven."

Mr. BINGHAM. Yes; and that is the radical change in the law.

Mr. DALZELL. No; it is the purpose to continue the law.

Mr. BINGHAM. In other words, you continue the board which the law says shall expire.

Mr. SHERMAN. No; the law says vacancies occurring during the year shall not be filled, and I say that vacancies occurring during the coming year shall not be filled. We do not ask any other change.

Mr. LITTAUER. The law also adds that at the end of 1907 said employment shall cease.

Mr. BINGHAM. In other words, you continue the current law another year. The current law distinctly sets forth that it shall conclude at the end of 1907. Gentlemen understand how reluctantly I do this, because I am a soldier myself.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, the situation is that the law originally provided for the appointment of what is called the "permanent board of appeals," consisting of twelve members. Later on there was legislation increasing that membership by authorizing twenty temporaries, and that provision was carried on from year to year, and last year the current appropriation bill provided for sixteen members only of the temporary members of the board, and provided that at the end of the fiscal year their employment should cease. Now, the committee has reported an appropriation for three of that sixteen, and that is a part of the bill, and no point of order was made against it, so that it is in the bill, but it is new legislation. The committee now reports an appropriation for three members of a temporary board of appeals for which there is no law. The effect of the proposed amendment is to increase the number from three to sixteen. I assume that where the committee brings in legislation that is subject to a point of order, if no point be made the provision is amendable.

Mr. BINGHAM. That original provision was subject to a point of order.

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes; and it is amendable.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. If an amendment is in order to increase the number to four, it certainly is in order to increase it to sixteen. That is the situation of this question as it is now presented.

Mr. LITTAUER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes.

Mr. LITTAUER. If it be in order to increase the number from three to sixteen, is it in order to increase it to sixteen with the various additions added to the amendment?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Those provisions are pure limitations. We may increase the force with limitations, providing how the additional members shall be paid and how they shall be appointed. I think those provisions are proper limitations. Now, I insist, since the committee has made provision for three for which there is no authority in law, it opens the door for any sort of a germane amendment. It is a new subject, and we may increase the number from three to sixteen and may fix terms and limitations that are germane. It is a new subject of legislation.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to discuss the point of order further than to emphasize what the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] has said, that it has always been held that where a provision is brought in which is subject to a point of order and no point of order is raised against it, an amendment perfecting that provision is in order.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to occupy the time of the committee, except to emphasize what the gentleman from Indiana has said.

The CHAIRMAN. It is the other side that the Chair desires to hear from.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Chairman, the amendment offered by my colleague from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] did not, as I understand it, attempt to amend that part of the paragraph where provision is made for the additional three members to the permanent force, but did seek to reinstate the language of the present current law, wherein a provision was added that "at the end of which year such employment shall cease." I can not appreciate the point made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] that in the method in which this amendment is presented it does not contravene the rule against new legislation. It appears to me to be an entirely different set of pension-appeal examiners, one temporary and the other permanent.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the Chair to this fact, that if the committee can add three it can add six or nine or sixteen. If three are in order, the whole sixteen are in order.

Mr. BINGHAM. All of which would be subject to a point of order.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Would have been, yes.

Mr. BINGHAM. Yes; would have been.

The CHAIRMAN. If a point of order had been made against the text of the bill the Chair would have sustained that point of order, but no such point of order was made. That being so, it is clear to the Chair that any amendment that is germane to that matter is competent for the committee to consider. The point of order is therefore overruled. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Chairman, before that question is taken it seems to me that the Committee of the Whole should at least be placed in possession of the facts in connection with this temporary board of pension appeals. The committee will remember that a board of nine members was originally established and was then increased to twelve and then, I believe some three years ago, an additional force of twenty temporary appointees was placed there at a time when the number of appeals accumulated in the office of the Secretary of the Interior numbered about 20,000. The work had gone on, I believe, for two or three years when last year we were confronted with the fact that the number of these appeals had been reduced from 20,000 to about 3,000. We then amended the law, or the provision for the law, so that vacancies that then existed could not be filled, and that no further vacancies could be filled during the current year. Moreover, we added the provision that the force itself should be entirely discontinued at the end of the current year—that is, the temporary force. The original nine, with the added three, are there under a permanent order. This is one of the temporary forces added to clean up work in a great Department, to do justice to the old soldier in order that his claims of every kind and character might have final and proper consideration before a great board of pension appeals. Unfortunately the only way to get such a board is to give temporary employment. The employment was given, of course, without civil service examination, and the result is that, as far as my experience has gone, whenever you get such a force in you can never get it out, and the only way to do is to amalgamate it with the regular force.

Now, the facts in the case are that we have had about twenty-eight of these pension-appeal examiners, and they passed upon one case of appeal a day, just one appeal during the seven or seven and a half hours' work which we have here, and bear in mind that these appeals come to them after having passed through, I believe, three or four prior examinations in the Pension Office. The appeals come all briefed, and they include some appeals in reference to pension attorneys' fees, perhaps not a great number, but quite a good number of them.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. LITTAUER. I do.

Mr. KEIFER. I understood the gentleman to say these members of the pension-appeal board dispose of but one appeal a day.

Mr. LITTAUER. Just one.

Mr. KEIFER. Just one. The record shows that twenty-eight members have disposed of an average of 824 per month.

Mr. LITTAUER. No; 867.

Mr. KEIFER. Well, I am speaking of an average for a particular five months. How do you make that out?

Mr. LITTAUER. During the last seven months, commencing February, 1906, during that period 6,059 cases have been disposed of, averaging 867 each month. Divide the twenty-eight into the 867 and you get—well, one is not exactly right, because there are only twenty-six working days, but in twenty-six working days thirty-one of these appeal cases are disposed of by each examiner.

Mr. OVERSTREET. How many appeals are now pending? How nearly up is this board?

Mr. SHERMAN. Seventeen hundred and twelve.

Mr. LITTAUER. I will get to that. A year ago we were advised that there were 3,000 cases yet undetermined and that at that time the force was catching up at quite a rapid rate, so we attempted last year to eliminate this board, but in order to give ample force to continue the work all places which were filled at that time were continued to the number——

Mr. TAWNEY. Will my colleague permit an interruption?

Mr. LITTAUER. Yes.

Mr. TAWNEY. Is it not a fact the limitation upon the life of the board carried in the current law was placed there upon the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. LITTAUER. On the express recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior, reenforced by the recommendation of the at that time Commissioner of Pensions. All of them advised us that board could well cease and end at the end of the current fiscal year.

Mr. KEIFER. I would like to interrupt the gentleman again.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York yield?

Mr. LITTAUER. I do.

Mr. KEIFER. I understand that both the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations and the gentleman on the floor say that this reduction was made at the instance of the Secretary of the Interior last year. I beg leave to say that the Secretary of the Interior qualified all that original recommendation both before the Committee on Appropriations and in the House and Senate, and stated if there was an increase in the appeals it would not be sufficient.

Mr. LITTAUER. When was that qualification made?

Mr. KEIFER. Made in the RECORD. The chairman read it the other day.

Mr. LITTAUER. Now, the RECORD shows that during the years this pension board has been at work, the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, 13,719 cases were disposed of. The next year, with the same force, 10,496 cases received final attention. The next year it jumped up again to 13,715, and the last year, ending June 30 last, when this board had the full number of thirty-two members, there were 10,173 cases disposed of, a reduction of 3,542 from the previous year.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Kansas?

Mr. LITTAUER. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. What number of cases are now pending for consideration by the board of appeals?

Mr. LITTAUER. We are advised here, October 1, 1906, 1,712 cases. That is about two months' work, and your committee, considering all the circumstances of this——

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Does that make provision for cases subsequently appealed to the board?

Mr. LITTAUER. I have given you simply a statement of the number of cases before the board on that day—that is, October the 1st. The cases appealed during the month of September were of course in that.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Has the gentleman from New York any information as to the number of cases that were pending before the commission a year ago?

Mr. LITTAUER. A year ago there were 3,000—just about 3,050, if my memory serves me right.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. At that ratio it would take a full year, at least, to catch up with the work?

Mr. LITTAUER. It depends altogether, of course, on the number of new cases that come along. It used to take two or three years to have one of these appeals attended to. It now takes less than two or three months. I maintain that if the appeals were doubled up from what they are to-day the old soldier's interest would be promptly attended to. I believe the last advice I had was that 7 per cent of these appeals are reversed.

Mr. KEIFER. Nine.

Mr. LITTAUER. My last information, from a very reliable source, was that it was 7, although I must admit that the Secretary of the Interior in here says that he thinks it was 15; latterly we got information that it was 9. But whether it be 9 or 7, those are the only individuals who can in any way suffer any harm from this appeal of two or three months.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. But if the gentleman will permit me, when a man makes an appeal it is important to him that he have a decision on it one way or the other.

Mr. LITTAUER. That is unquestionably so, and the decision he no doubt would like to have that very minute, but most of the appeals take more than two months to be disposed of.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me this question resolves itself into whether or not this temporary force shall be continued a sufficient length of time to bring the work up current. The board is now over 1,400 cases behind. On the statement of Assistant Secretary Wilson the appeals run from 800 to 900 a month. This board with the present force will take care of just about that number. It has been reduced by resignations and otherwise by four members. When it had the full number it took care of about 1,000 cases a month. Now it takes care of between 800 and 900. The appeals have constantly increased since appellants find they can get a comparatively early decision from the court. There is no reason to think that that condition of things will not obtain in the future; that the number of appeals will at least remain where it is now. That being the case, it is necessary to have the full number if you would give a prompt decision to these men, to many of whom delay means death before the decision is made. I say to you, gentlemen, that we can well afford to give the veterans the benefit of any doubt for twelve months more. That is the limitation put upon the membership of the court by the pending amendment.

Put these trained men at work twelve months more and give them an opportunity, at least, to bring the appeals down current with the applications made. What harm can come of it? Suppose you do not do it? Then, on the statement of the Assistant Secretary of the Interior, your appeals will continue to increase month by month until sooner or later you will have to go over this same course of procedure and employ not a trained body of experts, but a new body of men, to take up the work where these men leave off. The time has come when we can not afford to dally with interests vital to many of these men for the pittance involved in this amendment. Let us pass it, and let these men who now take their appeal be responded to promptly, as they responded promptly when the nation appealed to them to save its life. [Applause.]

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Will the gentleman allow a question before he takes his seat?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. GARDNER] yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER]?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Certainly.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I have statistics, obtained from some source, and I want to know if they were submitted to the committee. They show that last year, 1905, for five months from July 1, there were 2,658 appeals, at the rate of 531 per month. The same month this year, beginning July 1 last, there were 4,120 appeals taken, at the rate of 824 a month.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. That is substantially in the hearings.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That was in the hearings?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Substantially.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. And on the basis of the statistics last year this recommendation contained in the current bill was incorporated, providing that the tenure ceased on the 1st of July; and the increased number of appeals, I understand, is one of the chief reasons why the gentleman insists upon keeping the whole board in operation.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. If the gentleman will allow me to read. Mr. Wilson, Assistant Secretary of the Interior, says:

But the appeals are coming in between 800 and 900 a month now.

The gentleman will find that on page 227.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Does he recommend the retention of the entire board this year?

Mr. KEIFER. He says they could only dispose of a thousand cases when they had four more members than they have now. He says repeatedly, in substance, that they can not dispose of the appeals if you reduce the board, because of the accumulation of appeals, and he urges the retention of the full board.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, my honored colleague makes the suggestion that the only people who would be harmed by the provisions of the bill in doing away with this special board are the appellants. I know so well, Mr. Chairman, that my honored colleague is desirous of serving in every legitimate way the old soldiers that I do not believe he wants that statement to remain unqualified, especially when we remember that there is no body of men in this country that Congress is more desirous of serving than this same body; there is nobody that they are more desirous to save from any harm whatever.

Now, my colleague suggests that last year the Secretary said that this board could be done away with. He substantially said that upon the recommendation of the Secretary a year ago they inserted the provision that the board should cease to exist at the end of this fiscal year. In other words, the position of the committee then was to take its stand upon the recommendation of the Secretary; whereas this year, when the Secretary, the Assistant Secretary, and the Commissioner all unite in recommending that this board be continued, they propose not to follow that recommendation. It is very easy, when the recommendations of the Secretary are in accordance with our ideas to appeal to the recommendation to sustain our position, but when it is adverse, why we override it.

My colleague says, and says erroneously, that there is but one appeal decided a day. It is not quite correct, but the average is less than two. But, Mr. Chairman, do we wish to have these appeals hurriedly passed upon, without doing justice to the appellant and to the Government. The report and the hearings before the committee, and the statement of the Secretary, show that varied and numerous legal questions, as well as questions of fact, arise in these cases—questions relating to the marriage laws of the various States, etc. Certainly it is not the desire of Congress, in the work of passing upon these appeals, to be so hurried as to do injustice either to the appellant or the Government of the United States.

Now, before this board was created there were 16,000 cases unheard, and it took more than two years for an appeal to be heard, and I am making that statement from the hearings before the Committee on Appropriations. Two years ago there were 3,000 cases pending at the end of the year, and the board was continued for another year. On the 1st of October last there were 1,700 cases pending, and taking an average from this report from the hearing before the committee there will come in, as has been stated, an increase from month to month, but taking the average last given here there will be 9,606 new cases to be disposed of, and there were 1,712 pending on the 1st day of October; so that there will be 11,318 cases to dispose of during the next fiscal year, and the present board disposed of 10,173. So that if the average of new appeals is not increased, there will still be at the end of the next fiscal year cases pending that the board will not have been able to consider even if it is maintained at its present number.

Mr. Chairman, where the interests of the old soldier and the interests of the Government are so vital as they are in this case it does seem to me that in justice to the Government and in justice to them that we ought to continue this board, in accordance with the recommendation of all the people who know about it and make report and appear before the committee and make statements of fact. We ought to continue this board for at least one more year. [Loud applause.]

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, if I know myself, I have not the slightest disposition to do an injustice to the old soldier; but how any intelligent man can vote for this amendment, after the clear and comprehensive statement made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LITTAUER], I can not understand. From the remarks that have been made in support of this amendment one might conclude that there was a disposition here on the part of somebody not to serve the old soldier, but, on the contrary, to do an act of injustice to the old soldier. Is this true? As a matter of fact, and every man here knows it, on the statute books are found the most liberal, yes, the most generous, pension laws that have ever been enacted by any country during the history of the civilized world. We have a horde of clerks in the Pension Bureau—all of whom are favorable to the old soldier—to construe these pension laws when he files his application under them. After these generous laws have been construed by clerks who are, as I have said, biased in favor of the old soldier, if perchance their action is adverse to the claim of the old soldier he has the right to appeal to a Board of Review, and on that Board there is not one single individual hostile to the old soldier. If, again, this Board's decision is again adverse to the old soldier, he has the further right to appeal to the Board of Rereview, as it is termed; and if here the decision is adverse he can carry his case to the Commissioner of Pensions, and from the Commissioner of Pensions he can finally appeal to the Secretary of the Interior. At each of these points you afford him, if he can show an act of injustice has been done, the opportunity to have it righted. And, yet, Mr. Chairman, we are importuned to be cautious for fear that an injustice will be done the old soldier.

There is no necessity for this Board of Appeals now, and, as for that matter, there was no need for it at the time, a few years ago, when the original item was embodied in the appropriation bill. It never should have been in here, and if now stricken out the only ones hurt by it will be certain favorites who are now holding the places. You may be sure no injustice will be done any soldier by unnecessarily delaying action on his claim for pension or increase of pension.

Mr. Chairman, I charge—and there may be some men on this floor who will deny it, but I assert it as a fact, and no man on the Appropriations Committee will deny it—originally the places created by this item was rank patronage, nothing but patronage, intended to serve Members of Congress rather than to serve the old soldier. And now, when the recommendation has been made to discontinue this in the interests of economy, a motion is made here to embody it in the permanent law. And, as a matter of fact, gentlemen, I know full well that this amendment will be voted up. You will adopt it; and as a matter of fact it would have been adopted just as easily if the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] had moved to put in thirty-two instead of sixteen persons on this board.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I am sure the gentleman from Texas does not wish to make a misstatement.

Mr. BURLESON. No; I never do if I know myself.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I say I am sure of it. Hence the gentleman will allow me to correct him when he says the purpose of this amendment is to enact this additional force into permanent law. It is simply for one year, to enable the work to be brought up.

Mr. BURLESON. And the gentleman, who has been upon the Committee on Appropriations for many years, knows—yes, out of the storehouse of his experience there can be had a certain knowledge—that when once an item finds place in an appropriation bill it is nearly impossible to get the item out.

But, Mr. Chairman, I want to address myself for one moment to the necessity for this Board. There are 1,700 cases now pending on appeal and about 800 new appeals every month. The information that comes to us is that this Board disposes of about 800 cases a month. No wonder they do not bring the business abreast of current work. Here we have the sixteen members of this Board, each disposing of about one case a day, or, to be perfectly accurate, one and five twenty-sixths, or one and two-thirteenths cases each day. Of course it is not to their interest to work themselves out of a fat job. Yet, Mr. Chairman, every lawyer of intelligence here knows that these cases come to this Board thoroughly briefed, and the most complicated of them ought to be easily disposed of in one hour's time. It would be curious, Mr. Chairman, if we could ascertain just where the various men who hold these places and who are to be appointed come from. I doubt not a flood of light would be turned upon this discussion, and really we could then understand matters just as they are.

I stand here to confirm every word that has been uttered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LITTAUER], and I stand here to assert that there is absolutely no necessity for the continuation of this Board one day longer, much less convert it into a permanent Board by adopting this amendment. They could all be abolished without any fear of doing the old soldiers an act of injustice.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman who has just taken his seat says that he stands here to confirm every word uttered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LITTAUER]. That gentleman says that the records show that the board, continued as is proposed by the committee, would amply dispose of the pension-appeal cases. I beg to say that that statement can not be confirmed, and I want to say, in the hearing of the gentleman from New York, that he received from the Interior Department a letter, which he never presented to the committee and never referred to here, which shows that that statement is absolutely untrue. Does the gentleman dispute that?

Mr. LITTAUER. If the gentleman will permit me——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. KEIFER. Yes. Do you dispute that? I have the letter here.

Mr. LITTAUER. If the gentleman will permit me, the question as to the correctness of the statement that the Board as composed would amply dispose of the pension-appeal cases is simply an inference. The letter was a personal letter, reenforcing somewhat the testimony which the Assistant Secretary gave as printed in the hearings. It was not an official communication. In my rehearsal of the facts in connection with this matter before the full committee I read to the committee every single figure that was in that letter, and the gentleman from Ohio sat there, perhaps listening and perhaps not.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I beg to say that the letter was never read there, or the gentleman would not have made the statement just made. That letter shows that for the months of July, August, September, October, and November, 1906, the appeals filed were 4,120, and the appeals disposed of were 3,984, less by about 200 than the appeals filed, without going to the old cases in arrears at all. Does that justify the statement that a board that would dispose of three-fifths as many as have been disposed of in the past five months could keep up promptly?

Mr. LITTAUER. I should like to ask the gentleman a question. Can he explain to me why this same Board in the year ending June 30, 1906, disposed of 10,173 cases, while in the previous year, with the same number of men on the Board, it disposed of 13,715?

Mr. KEIFER. The question contains an error. The same Board did not exist before this fiscal year by a great way. The Board before this time you refer to consisted of thirty-two instead of twenty-eight, added to by two men detailed from the Attorney-General's office and a man from the Land Office to help them, thus adding three more to the efficiency of the Board.

Mr. LITTAUER. The gentleman wants to state the facts correctly?

Mr. KEIFER. The facts I gave in my speech a few days ago. You had an opportunity to show by the statement of the Assistant Secretary of the Interior that it would not be possible for you to cut the Board down as is proposed and ever get in sight of clearing up the pension appeals. We would run behind in one year about 4,000 at least. We had also on the 1st day of December arrears, according to this letter of December 6 to the gentleman from New York, of 1,776 appeals. Now, somebody says the appealed cases come briefed. Surely that is a very nice statement. If you are asking for a case to come briefed against the old soldier who appeals, and then ask the person who is reviewing to decide it on the brief that is made up to reject his claim, well and good. But it has to be rebriefed by some member of the Board and then taken to another portion of the twenty-eight, and finally be reviewed before the whole Board. It is not one man sitting as an appeal board, but you have to rebrief it, and the larger the record the greater the labor. That is the way justice is often done to these old soldiers. Now, there is nothing anywhere in the record that justifies the statement that the Board continued as last year, with twelve permanent and sixteen additional members, will be able to keep up with the filed appealed cases when thirteen of the members are dropped, and we will certainly make no mistake if we leave it as it was the last year.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 114, line 23, strike out the words "two hundred and sixty-five" and insert in lieu thereof the words "three hundred;" in line 24 strike out the words "three hundred and thirty-five" and insert in lieu thereof the words "three hundred and seventy;" in line 25 strike out the words "two hundred" and insert the words "one hundred and sixty-five." On page 115, line 1, strike out the word "ninety-four" and insert the word "sixty-nine;" and in lines 12 and 13 strike out the words "six hundred and seventy-eight thousand seven hundred and fifty" and insert the words "seven hundred and three thousand two hundred and fifty."

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, the bill provides for thirty-five men of class 1 and thirty-five men of class 2——

Mr. LITTAUER. If I may be allowed, the Commissioner advised us that we could reduce the number of clerks in the service, and this is in the line of his recommendation.

Mr. MANN. I thought this was an increase.

Mr. BINGHAM. No; it is a decrease.

Mr. LITTAUER. It is the elimination of seventy clerks. The committee reported to eliminate thirty-five at $1,400 and thirty-five at $1,200. The purpose of the amendment is to eliminate thirty-five out of the $1,000 class and thirty-five out of the $900 class instead of as at first proposed.

The amendment was considered and agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

No vacancy now existing in the clerical or other classified service of the Pension Office, or which may occur after March 1, 1907, and prior to July 1, 1908, shall be filled by original appointment or by transfer from any other office or bureau of the Department of the Interior. Nor shall any transfers from said Pension Office existing March 1, 1907, be returned to said Office.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following committee amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 14, on page 115, strike out the words "or other classified," and in line 17 strike out the word "eight" and insert in lieu thereof the word "seven."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 118, in lines 2 and 3, strike out "machinist, $1,600;" in line 8 strike out "fifty-seven" and insert "sixty-two," and after the word "clerk" insert "including five heretofore designated model attendants;" in line 10 strike out "one hundred and seven" and insert "one hundred and six;" in line 11, after the word "drawings," insert "ten clerks heretofore designated model attendants, at $800 each," and strike out "thirty-one" and insert "thirty;" in line 14 strike out "fifty" and insert "forty-eight;" and in lines 16 and 17 strike out "fifty-six thousand eight hundred and eighty" and insert in lieu thereof "sixty-five thousand seven hundred."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendments offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken; and the amendments were agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk, and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 15, on page 143, insert:

"For compensation of not more than $10 per day and actual necessary traveling expenses of special agents to investigate trade conditions abroad, with the object of promoting the foreign commerce of the United States, $50,000, not more than $20,000 of which shall be used in the investigation of the markets for cotton products, and the results of such investigation shall be reported to Congress."

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Unless objection is made, I shall ask for a vote on that amendment.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer an amendment in the nature of a substitute to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia, which I send to the desk, and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For compensation at not more than $10 per day and actual necessary traveling expenses of special agents to investigate trade conditions abroad, with the object of promoting the foreign commerce of the United States, $750,000, not more than $25,000 of which shall be used in the investigation of the markets for any one of the following articles:

Cotton and manufactures thereof, wool and manufactures thereof, leather and manufactures thereof, boots and shoes, wood and manufactures thereof, glass and manufactures thereof, iron and manufactures thereof, flax and manufactures thereof, steel and manufactures thereof, copper and manufactures thereof, automobiles, sewing machines, typewriters, firearms, hardware, cutlery, agricultural implements, corn, hay, wheat, potatoes, barley, tobacco, sugar, rice, cattle, eggs, swine, beets, onions; and the reports of such special agents shall be published by Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the substitute offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. Is the debate upon the substitute amendment first?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard briefly in favor of that amendment. The usual appropriation was left out by the committee this year, of some $50,000——

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to raise the point of order on the substitute.

Several MEMBERS. That is too late.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it is too late, debate having been passed.

Mr. SULLIVAN. In the last bill $50,000 was appropriated for the investigation of foreign markets, with a view of increasing the commerce of the United States. In the previous bill $30,000 was carried, so that $80,000 has been authorized and probably spent for the investigation of these markets. In order that the House may not think that all this has been without fruit, I hold up for your inspection all of the reports which have been made so far, and which represent the $80,000 which has been expended. Here is the $80,000 worth. I offer that as an exhibit, in order to indicate to the House how many more reports we might get, excellently written and in much greater bulk, if we should appropriate what I ask for, namely, $750,000. And to show that there is an absolute need of appropriating this money, I wish to call the attention of the Members to the statement made by Mr. Carson, of the Department of Commerce and Labor. He speaks of the great and dense ignorance of the American manufacturer concerning the conditions of trade in Europe and the rest of the world.

That is illustrated by this remark:

It is to exploit those facts and to inform our people as to the wants and requirements of foreign markets that our efforts are being directed. When made acquainted with these conditions our manufacturers and merchants will not send skates to the Tropics and fur goods to Jamaica.

Now, I suppose there are some merchants and manufacturers in the United States who know what the temperature of the Tropics is, but they never had a realizing sense of the facts until they were incorporated in an official statement. We all know that unofficial statements concerning trade conditions, such as are gathered by merchants and their agents, are of absolutely no value to men who have goods to sell, and that the only fact worth considering is the fact that is stated in a solemn document prepared under the auspices of one of the officials of the United States. So that hereafter as one result of the publication of these reports, which have cost $80,000 already, we will understand officially that there is no ice in the Tropics upon which people of that country may skate and there is no necessity for fur cloaks and boas. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. Is it necessary to have ice always in order to skate?

Mr. SULLIVAN. I do not know what the conditions in the Tropics are, but I assure the gentleman it is not necessary in Chicago.

Mr. MANN. We know that.

Mr. SULLIVAN. It is a worthy purpose, Mr. Chairman, and if the money of the country is going to be spent, as I think it will be, there is no better way than to develop the foreign commerce of this country. For a great many years, under the influence of protective tariffs, the attention of our producers, of our farmers, and manufacturers was concentrated almost exclusively upon the home market. Now, having control of the home market in such manner as to call for such investigations as have been propounded here to-day—for instance, the investigation of the lumber trust—it now becomes necessary to turn our eyes away from local conditions and see what we may sell in the rest of the world. It is a subject that will take a long time to investigate, as the answer of Mr. Carson shows. He was asked by Mr. LITTAUER, of the committee:

How many years will it take to complete this investigation?

Mr. CARSON. You will find in these reports [handing to members of the committee printed reports] the kind of work we are doing.

Then Mr. LITTAUER proceeded:

Mr. Carson, here you have special agents whose object is the extension of the foreign commerce of the United States. Of course the field is almost unlimited, is it not?

Mr. CARSON. Yes; it is without limit.

So we have the assurance that if this beneficent work is continued in a manner befitting the dignity and glory of this great American nation that it will last for all time and consume a considerable portion of the public revenues. I for one should much prefer to see the money of the country spent in the development of our foreign commerce than spent in building a great navy or maintaining a great standing army. I should prefer to see much of it spent in the development of our rivers and harbors, and in the same line of reasoning considerable money could be well spent in the development of our foreign commerce.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes longer.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that his time be extended for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Now, I know that some Member who objects to the expenditure of such a large sum as three-quarters of a million dollars for this excellent purpose may say that these special agents are not of any value to the country. The contradiction is found here. Here are the reports. They speak for themselves. They are excellently written, some of them by skilled newspaper men, who have found a great deal of material worth reporting and who have compiled it in a most excellent fashion. I know that some men will say these men ought to be experts in particular lines, and no others should be appointed, but if you have experts in the manufacture of cotton and other articles you will not have such beautiful and finished literary productions as you will when you send newspaper men abroad to do this work, and that is something which should merit the consideration of the House.

I know that some men will object still further and say that much of the information gathered by these special agents, for which I trust we will appropriate $750,000 more, is material that could be just as well collected by the members of our consular service, and they will argue that the consular service has recently been improved, or is about to be improved, as a result of the excellent legislation of last year. I grant that. I believe it is a fact, accepted by all, that when special agents do go abroad the first thing they do is to consult the resident consul in the particular district which they are exploring and get from him all the information he has upon the subject. But the fact still remains that these consuls can not make reports of such literary excellence as our special agents, and for that reason I think this work ought to be continued.

Now, then, I do not believe that cotton should be singled out for the expenditure of a large sum of money, and I have extended the list so that it includes thirty articles, all of them produced in the United States and equally entitled to the protection of the American flag and to an appropriation. No one can say upon this floor with any degree of confidence that we ought to spend the money of the country for the development of the market for cotton or boots and shoes exclusively. A Member has suggested, after hearing my list read, that I showed a great lack of local pride in failing to insert in my list the item of Boston baked beans. [Laughter.] He said that that was an article which should be sent abroad, and which undoubtedly would improve conditions in the world generally outside of the United States and in the city of Boston in particular. But in order that I might not be accused of any selfish local pride, I omitted that important article from my list and devoted my attention to some things equally meritorious.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman tell the committee how much money the Government of the United States has been spending in this magnificent work?

Mr. SULLIVAN. Thirty thousand dollars in the bill the year before last and $50,000 last year.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. What would you call this agent that you speak of? A drummer?

Mr. SULLIVAN. I would call him the "advance agent of prosperity." [Laughter.] He is sent abroad in order to ascertain conditions——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. All the drummers are that. I never saw a drummer in my life that did not think that prosperity was ahead of him or just behind him.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. They are called "special agents" in the bill.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Special agents of whom? Some private firm?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I would like five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. SULLIVAN] asks for five minutes more. Is there objection.

There was no objection.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee rose.

Mr. SULLIVAN. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Does this gentleman represent the Government of the United States as such or some private firm?

Mr. SULLIVAN. The gentleman represents the Government of the United States in general and the Treasury of the United States in particular. The information which he collects is, of course, published to the world, and our manufacturers get the benefit of it. I have not observed, as a result of these investigations, that our commerce has increased materially; but the work is still young. It is still only an infant industry, and it ought to get proper encouragement. In process of time it will unquestionably show the merits of the enterprise.

Now, I have asked twenty-five thousand for boots and shoes, which are articles of great importance all the world over. The people of the world are entitled to know the merits of American-made boots and shoes. And so on through wood and its manufactures, and sewing machines, typewriters, firearms, hardware, cutlery, and also a great many products of the farm. I find, for example, that corn leads the list in the last year's production. Corn is an article of even greater value in the domestic economy of the United States than cotton. I find that the production of corn is twelve hundred and sixteen millions according to the last report. Then, too, hay is ahead of cotton, the value being six hundred and five millions. Cotton comes third, with five hundred and seventy-five millions, and wheat follows a close fourth, with five hundred and twenty-five millions, and oats, two hundred and eighty-two millions, and so on. I have put all of these worthy and deserving articles in the list because I believe they are entitled to consideration equally with cotton. I would not neglect other articles. Take the American hog, for example. He is finding it extremely difficult to enter the markets of Europe, particularly of Germany. All sorts of discriminating laws are made against him. What could be better than to have expert agents of the United States go to Germany and find out how conditions might be improved, so as to facilitate the entrance—I might say, grease the passage—of the American hog, so that the sale of hog products might be greater in Germany than it is to-day. [Laughter.] Then there are other articles of the farm. Take beets, for example. Why should not the American beet be extolled abroad by our agents?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. They are paying three millions now to send it abroad.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Let us pay more. If it is a good thing, we can not have too much of it. Then take the onion. There is a patient and humble American vegetable just as much entitled, in my judgment, to the protection of the flag and as much entitled to an appropriation as is cotton. What patriot is there who can not feel the rush of blood to his face and moisture to his eyes when he speaks of the American onion? [Laughter.] Would it not sweeten Europe, Asia, and other parts of the world in its passage around the globe? What more patriotic mission could there be than to send a special agent abroad with the American flag in his right hand and the American onion in his left hand? [Laughter.]

Mr. STANLEY. What about the hen?

Mr. SULLIVAN. Yes; what about the hen? I thank the gentleman for his suggestion. I find that the Secretary of Agriculture has stated in a solemn document that "the farmer's hen has become a worthy companion to his cow. The annual production of eggs is now a score of billions." There is the egg industry. See that we send an agent abroad to find a market for our eggs, and even for our decayed eggs. Why, it was rumored not long ago that they were treated with formaldehyde, put in barrels, and sent to China.

I remember some years ago an American actor, speaking of eyewater, said that he could buy it at 50 cents a barrel and sell it in China at a dollar a bottle, and that there were "millions in it." There are millions in this also. So our decayed-egg industry should be fostered. Why not find a legitimate outlet for the decayed eggs, instead of allowing them to remain a sort of fluid criticism upon American dramatic art? [Laughter.] Who can not see the picture of the Orient waiting with outstretched arms and, perhaps, bowed head, calling for the introduction of the decayed eggs of the United States? I might extend the list indefinitely, but I assure gentlemen this amendment ought to pass, in the interest of American industries. There is not one of these articles which could be called unpatriotic; not one of them but which is entitled to an appropriation as much as cotton and other articles which are specifically enumerated. Let these agents be appointed; let the appropriation go on, and after a while, under the civilizing influence of our beets, our onions, and our decayed eggs, we will not find it necessary longer to appropriate for great navies; we will have conquered the world with our products; and therefore I beg a respectful consideration by this House for this amendment. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I think, Mr. Chairman, from first to last, the remarks of my colleague on the committee have been quite unkind, in attempting to ridicule this amendment of mine off the floor of the House. Ridicule is not argument. It may be in harmony with his practice before petty juries in the court-room, but is not worth anything on the floor of this House.

Mr. Chairman, over half of the articles he mentions are already exploited abroad by special appropriations. Beef, mutton, butter, corn and corn bread, hen and hen fruit, and all that, have been cared for by the Secretary of Agriculture to a very great extent, and a product of this country which for the last five years—three out of five—has paid the balance in export trade against the United States is cotton. It has been settled by cotton, and the money furnished to prevent a financial panic in the United States, yet he compares that product to the juice from rotten eggs [laughter]—another Massachusetts product [laughter]—and Boston beans.

Mr. SULLIVAN. I would share its benefit with the whole world; I was not so selfish as the gentleman.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Now, Mr. Chairman, the committee, in the preparation of this bill, saw proper to put in an appropriation for, or recommendation for, $30,000 this year. Now, the gentleman can still, if the limit is put back in the bill and the amendment prevails, can still go to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor with this list and have them all attended to.

Mr. SULLIVAN. There would not be enough money.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. This law was $30,000 last year; the current appropriation is $50,000. But $20,000 was added by an amendment in the Senate covering cotton products; and I am going to show you who are interested in cotton products, and you ought to take care of it. All I have asked is a reinstatement of the current law in the bill. Now, why should that amendment of mine be attacked as if it was a scheme, if you wish to call it a scheme, as the gentleman from Boston seems to think it is. It is not giving a fair chance to the tax payer of the United States as to whether it is proper to be expended in this way or not. The gentleman holds up in his hand a great body of reports of the special agents, and does not show how the expenditure of $80,000 has benefited this country.

I say that if you will read these reports you will see that our special agents, sent abroad to enlarge and broaden the trade of this country, have been very efficient and useful.

Mr. LITTAUER. Will the gentleman particularize?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Another Boston man. [Laughter.] Now, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, if I had more than ten or fifteen minutes I would take these reports and particularize, but the gentleman from New York knew that no man could do it under the five-minute rule when he put the proposition up to me. I say this appropriation ought to be continued, so as to give this scheme, if you call it a scheme, a fair deal. I stand in my place on the floor of this House and declare that these reports sustain the argument I am making, without particularizing, and I leave it with the gentleman from New York, if he can get the time, to particularize.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I ask unanimous consent for ten minutes in order to make me even up with the Boston party.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that his time be extended ten minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Now, let us see about the necessity. I shall have to be brief about it. We produce 70 per cent of the raw cotton of the world. England produces 64 per cent of the cotton fabrics of the world. I have not the time to dwell on that. Let me repeat it, and you take it home with you. We produce in the United States 70 per cent of all the raw cotton of the world. England produces 64 per cent of all the cotton goods of the world. England exports annually $447,657,600 of cotton fabrics. The United States, that produces 70 per cent of the raw cotton, sends abroad $55,189,700 in cotton goods; $55,000,000 against $447,000,000. Is it not about time that Asia and Africa knew that we have cotton and cotton mills in this country, and can manufacture and sell cotton goods cheaper than England? That is the object of this amendment.

Listen! In 1905 England sold to Asia $202,212,600 worth of cotton goods. The United States sold in Asia only $36,988,200 worth of manufactured cotton. There were $36,000,000 of our cotton fabrics going to Asia against $202,000,000 of English goods going to Asia. How did they get that trade? By doing just what I propose in this amendment. That is how they got it, they went after it like the nigger went after the Christmas turkey. He got it because he went after it.

Again, Africa took from England last year $29,456,100 in cotton goods, and she took from us $428,200. There is a difference of $29,000,000 that Africa took from England more than she took from us. South America, right at our doors, took from England last year $32,002,800, and took from us $3,476,500, a difference of $28,000,000 that England sold right at our doors more than we sold of manufactured cotton goods. Canada and Mexico took from England five times as much cotton goods as they took from the United States in 1905. Think of it. Mexico on our south Canada on our north, and both on our borders, took five times as much manufactured cotton from England as from the United States. Let any man look at these figures, which are all official, and he will see that when we have one crop worth from five to six hundred million dollars, and only a small per cent of it manufactured within the limits of the United States and 64 per cent of it manufactured in England—if any man looking at this fact will tell me that it is not time for the United States to get a part of that trade or all of it, then I am mistaken in the man. He must be from Boston. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, when I offered that amendment I intended to insert three words between "cotton" and the word "products," and those words were "and cotton-seed;" but knowing the amendments the gentlemen had to propose, and knowing them to be outside of the current law, I refrained, because it would open the gates to the gentleman from Boston, and to every other gentleman, to put into the current law foolish, ridiculous amendments such as my friend from Boston has proposed here to-day. I ask for nothing except the current law.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. May I ask the gentleman a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Georgia yield to the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I do.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Does not your amendment provide specifically for the investigation of trade conditions and the extension of the trade of the United States in other products besides cotton and its manufactures?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I want to say that there is $30,000 that absolutely covers the very articles mentioned by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. That is the point, and only $20,000 of the $50,000 goes for the investigation and extension of the cotton trade in foreign markets.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I desire in the time allowed me to give my hearty indorsement to the motion of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LIVINGSTON]. The effort, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. SULLIVAN] makes in regard to this question in opposition to the desired appropriation is to use the shaft of ridicule. That always reacts against a man who attempts to use it on a subject as grave and of such magnitude as this. The gentleman from Massachusetts certainly does not know, and if he does know he can not appreciate it, that for this one product, for this one staple of cotton, Europe pays us annually more than all the gold developed and mined annually in the world. It is true that this enormous amount for one staple goes into the lap of the South.

And yet the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. SULLIVAN] stands here in the presence of this House and facetiously and flippantly compares this gigantic article of the world's commerce with "rotten eggs" and "onions." Does he know, Mr. Chairman, when he talks in this spirit of idle ridicule, that every day, including Sundays and holidays, Great Britain for our raw cotton is paying the cotton producer of the United States more than $1,000,000? And yet his purpose, in an effort to display his native wit, is to underestimate and belittle, if you please, this great southern product that is destined in the development of the South to clothe the people of all the world who wear clothes and are civilized. I have thought, among Democrats and Republicans, regardless of place of residence, the sentiment prevailed that we should expand and extend our trade with foreign countries.

No man on the floor of this House is more in favor of such a policy than I am. Why not prepare to meet the inevitable demands of the world for cotton cloth? We are bound to have an outlet for this great and valuable crop. The Eastern States as well as the Southern States are alike interested in the manufacture of cotton. It is true the South produces quite 80 per cent of the raw cotton that supplies the world, and the South, to the amazement of the world, is now manufacturing about one-half of the cloth manufactured in the United States. Great sections of the world await the new exportation and the extension of our cotton-fabric trade.

There stands China, with more than 450,000,000 of people, awaiting to-day the cotton cloth and clothing which is the joint product of the mills of the South and East. We see that Great Britain buys from us raw cotton, manufacturing it, and by tactful methods in foreign countries governs that great trade throughout the world that the United States ought to-day to control and will control in the near future if we will be broad enough to give our cotton a fair chance. There stands Japan, a great, growing, and aspiring country that has recently entered on the stage of the great nations of the world, with 45,000,000 of people who can use our cotton. Great Britain is extending the tentacles of her trade greed and will soon have in her grasp the cotton-cloth interests and demands of that people. It is the proper time for us to seek this developing trade in Japan. If we lose it, the completion of the Panama Canal will lose many of its commercial advantages for the South. Let us understand the proposition submitted to us and then apply the wit and humor in the remarks made by the gentleman from Massachusetts. It is this: The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LIVINGSTON] moves to reinsert in the bill the provision that calls for an appropriation of $50,000 "to investigate trade conditions abroad," to promote our foreign commerce, but only $20,000 of this amount shall be used to investigate foreign markets in the interest of cotton products. It appears that the $30,000 appropriation ought to be sufficient to investigate foreign markets in the interest of "rotten eggs and onions."

Why, Mr. Chairman, there can be no comparison with any one single product that is made in the United States to this great one of the product of cotton and its manufacture. I insist, Mr. Chairman, not in any spirit of sectionalism, not in any spirit except that which is broad and patriotic, that we ought to investigate matters of this kind, for such investigations will add to the commercial growth of our Republic. We ought to send skilled and trained men to these markets that we can develop—men who can tell us what the existing conditions are, what the customs are, and what kind and character of cotton cloths we ought to send to that country and what kind would suit the tastes of those people, so that it will increase and advance our trade there. I insist that the provision offered by the gentleman from Georgia should be reinserted in this bill. [Applause.]

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, of course the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. SULLIVAN] will be voted down, because it was offered for the purpose of being voted down. But I do sincerely hope the members of this committee will not treat the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LIVINGSTON] with ridicule. It is entitled to serious consideration, and when you come to vote upon it, and you will do so, if you vote down a substitute which will later be offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LITTAUER] it is my purpose to offer an amendment to the amendment, adding after the words "cotton products" the words "and cotton-seed products."

The amendment as amended would then read as follows:

For compensation, at not more than $10 per day and actual necessary traveling expenses, of special agents to investigate trade conditions abroad, with the object of promoting the foreign commerce of the United States, $50,000, not more than $20,000 of which shall be used in the investigation of markets for cotton products and cotton-seed products, and the results of such investigation shall be reported to Congress.

I can give reasons why I think the amendment as amended should go into this bill, and these reasons are not at all inconsistent with the views expressed by the gentleman from Massachusetts. I concur generally in the propositions laid down by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. SULLIVAN] that it is the duty of the consular officers to develop the trade of the United States. I recognize that the service of each of our consular officers, regardless of the State from which he is appointed, belongs alike to all the States, but at the same time I submit in all fairness that each section should be given a just and fair proportion of these appointments, in order that we may have those in our consular service who are thoroughly familiar with the resources and industries of the various sections of our country.

I also contend that these consular officers from the different sections should be stationed in those countries with which the citizens of the particular section have established trade relations or where there is a hope of developing or extending their trade. 'Tis true a consular officer is a commercial agent whose duty it is to advance the commercial interests of the country he represents and of the individual citizen of the country he represents, but to do so we all will admit he must have a particular knowledge of the industry which he endeavors to promote, and it is for that very reason that I urge upon the committee to put this item in this bill. Now, why?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURLESON. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Agreeing with the gentleman as to the appropriation, I would like to ask him this question: How is it possible for the special agents appointed to differentiate between the work they do for cotton, cotton seed, and cotton fabrics and the work they do for other items, each one being engaged in a country by itself, observing the trade relations of that country, and making a general report upon the trade of that country?

Mr. BURLESON. I suppose agents will be appointed who are thoroughly familiar with the cotton-seed oil industry and who know something about where additional markets for the same could probably be found. It is to secure such services, which can not be rendered by our present consular officers, that I contend for the continuance of this appropriation. Mr. Chairman, that is the very reason why this item ought to go into this bill.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I will just state to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that there were two men specially appointed for cotton, and they did not mix up with anything else.

Mr. BURLESON. I do not want my time consumed by further interruption, because my time is limited and I have several suggestions which I desire to offer this committee in support of this item. As a matter of fact—and I do not say this now in a partisan sense; I desire to emphasize the assurance that I am not stating what I now propose to state in a partisan sense—as a matter of fact, there is not to-day a consular officer in the service of the United States who knows anything whatever about the manufacture of cotton-seed products, who is located where there is even a remote chance to widen a market for same or aid in extending its uses or assist in increasing a demand for same. The truth is we have for the entire eleven Southern States, the cotton and cotton-seed oil producing States, only fourteen consular officers—fourteen for that entire section, while Massachusetts alone has nineteen.

And, Mr. Chairman, the fourteen consular officers who have been selected from the cotton States have been sent to obscure points in Central or South America, or Bergen, Norway, or some other point with which the great agricultural South has no trade relations. I will admit that it is the duty of our consular officer who hails from Massachusetts (many of whom are stationed in Europe, where the cotton and cotton-seed oil interests are important) to further the commercial interest of the South and the commercial interests of the individual citizens of that section; but, Mr. Chairman, this they can not properly do. They might, as far as cotton products are concerned, but I assert they can not so do with reference to cotton-seed products, for they are wanting in knowledge of the industry.

I do not mean to reflect upon our consular officers. Of course they represent all parts and all interests of the United States. I believe they are the best in the world, but those in Europe, where this great interest is involved, have no knowledge of cotton-seed products, and consequently can not represent its merits. New York can oppose this, but it is not becoming in her Representatives to do so, because New York has thirty-seven of her citizens abroad as consular officers to represent the commercial interests of that State, to exploit the manufactured wares of that great Commonwealth, and they do it, and do it well, and I am glad of it; but why should she now oppose this item which affects the great staple crop of the South?

Mr. Chairman, can I be excused if I take one moment to speak of the value of the great staple to be affected by this amendment? It is undoubtedly true that cotton is the most important crop grown in all this great country. But for this crop, instead of being one of the leading, if not the leading, creditor countries of the world, we would, when the balance of the world's trade is struck, find ourselves each year on the wrong side of the ledger. This great crop furnishes full 90 per cent of the balance of trade in our favor. The hoard of gold now piled high in the vaults of our Treasury bears silent witness to the service rendered by cotton in bringing this precious metal from foreign shores.

Mr. Chairman, millions of dollars are appropriated each year for the support of our consular service, and, as I have shown, of the 300 consular officers all the South has only 14, and these are located where they can be of but little service, and now, when the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LIVINGSTON] by this amendment asks for the pitiful sum of $20,000 to exploit a by-product of its great crop, of which no consular officer, located where its interests are affected, now in the service of the United States knows one single thing, he is met with ridicule—with ridicule by a gentleman who hails from Massachusetts, a State that has in our consular service five more representatives than are to be found in the entire eleven States interested in this product.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. BURLESON. Certainly. I have no objection, if my time can be extended to enable me to conclude what I desire to say on this subject.

Mr. NORRIS. I want to ask the gentleman if these officials coming from Massachusetts and New York, or any of them, were appointed to represent any particular industry?

Mr. BURLESON. Not at all. On the contrary, I disclaimed that they were there to represent particularly the wares of New York, but at the same time, being from New York, I say that they are thoroughly familiar with the wares of New York and thus splendidly equipped to promote her commercial interests.

Mr. NORRIS. Then why should we appoint anyone to represent any particular industry, cotton or any other?

Mr. BURLESON. I have not so contended, as a general proposition, and if the gentleman had given attention to what I have stated he would not have consumed my time by asking such a question or interjecting such a statement. I have clearly announced that it is the duty of our consular officers to represent every section, and every interest of every section, of the United States, and I have also said they were doing it as well as they could. But, Mr. Chairman, our consuls located in Europe do not have a proper knowledge of this industry because of conditions I have described, and for that reason we are asking that $20,000 be set apart to exploit this particular industry, and we found our contention upon the broad basis of right. We have a right to ask it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BURLESON. I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to proceed for a few moments longer.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, this is a peculiar industry—the cotton-seed-oil industry. No consular officer living beyond the limits of the South can possibly have that knowledge of it which will enable him to properly represent its merits. It has heretofore found its principal, if not its sole, market in Europe, or rather, I should say, in certain countries in Europe—England, France, Germany, Italy, and Austria-Hungary. We have no consular officer there with even fair knowledge of it. This is one reason why I contend that this item should go into this bill.

This industry now has $73,000,000 invested in it and 715 different plants engaged in its manufacture. Last year the product was excluded from Austria by a prohibitive tax. It has been practically excluded from Germany, and now France threatens to exclude it. Recent cablegrams from Paris clearly indicate a purpose on the part of the customs committee of the Chamber of Deputies to increase the tariff charge on cotton seed and cotton-seed oil to so high a figure that it would amount to exclusion. So imminent is this danger that the ambassador from this country to France, Mr. McCormick, has made strong representations against the proposed increase.

Mr. Chairman, as is well known to us all, a very advantageous reciprocity treaty which had been negotiated with France by Mr. Kasson, under the provisions of the Dingley Act, was pigeonholed at the other end of the Capitol. That treaty, it is believed, would have proven especially advantageous to the cotton producer. In fact, it is claimed that it would have been worth millions of dollars to those interested in that great staple. But, Mr. Chairman, we did not get it, and we all know we will not get a reciprocity treaty with France. The particular treaty was sidetracked, so it is said, because it happened to affect very slightly certain knitted goods manufactured in Massachusetts. Such being the case, regardless of the enormous benefit to be conferred on the millions who produce cotton and cotton seed, a distinguished Senator from Massachusetts saw that the treaty was not ratified.

I am not making any complaint about it. That matter is passed, but I do believe it my duty to insist that because the interests of this product are being sidetracked in this way that we are entitled to ask of the Congress the pittance carried in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia.

It is now our only hope of accomplishing anything for this industry, for not only have we failed in the past to secure relief through reciprocity, but there is no hope of doing anything along that line in the future.

The reciprocity bureau of the State Department has been abandoned, and evidently there is no purpose to attempt anything further in that direction.

I submit in this connection a part of the hearings on this bill before your Appropriation Committee and you can determine for yourself the chances for action from that quarter. I read from the statement made by the honorable Secretary of State:

LACK OF EXPERT ASSISTANCE.

Secretary ROOT. There is particularly a lack of force in what we call the bureau of trade relations. You will remember that there was a reciprocity bureau, and that when I talked with you a year ago we talked about the expenses of the reciprocity bureau, of which Mr. Kasson had been the head, and of which Mr. Coleman was secretary and practical chief under Mr. Kasson. That is gone now. That expense had been paid out of an emergency fund, and we abandoned that in the process of reforming our salaries, with general consent.

There is a great amount of work to be done—work that we have got to have done in the State Department. It is part of a pretty wide subject, and I do not know that I ought to take up your time with it, but it may be worth while for me to say a few words. We are very lame and very undeveloped in our governmental organization in respect to expert assistance. We have just sent over to Germany, for the purpose of reaching an understanding upon facts and an understanding of the relative ideas of the two countries on the subject of the tariff, three experts, and I had to go around and pick them up and get them as a matter of special favor from the Treasury Department and the Department of Commerce, and we have added a consul-general—Mr. Mason—who has gone over to Berlin from Paris to give them the benefit of his assistance. They met in Berlin a force of nine experts connected with the foreign office, whose entire and continuous business is to keep the Government of Germany up to date all the time upon every commercial question.

Mr. LITTAUER. You have not a like force in your Department?

Secretary ROOT. There is no such force here.

Mr. BURLESON. Is there any necessity for such a force? Germany is constantly engaged in negotiating reciprocity treaties with various countries. That is the very character of business they are engaged in. They are the experts about whom Secretary Root speaks.

Secretary ROOT. We are exporting $1,750,000,000 worth of goods, and all of those except those going to Great Britain herself are going to countries that have tariffs imposed upon our goods, and there is no country in the world that so much needs intelligent and expert knowledge on all tariff questions as this country now, at this very time.

Mr. LITTAUER. Tariff questions from the standpoint of those countries we are dealing with?

Secretary ROOT. Yes.

Mr. BURLESON. To do what, Mr. Secretary?

Secretary ROOT. To enable us, in the first place, to make the necessary representations to those countries which will prevent their imposing disadvantages upon our trade——

Mr. LIVINGSTON. And crippling it?

Secretary ROOT. Yes; crippling our trade. Changes are being proposed all the time all over—changes in France, changes in Germany, changes in Brazil, changes everywhere in the tariff. Our commercial competitors are trying to get changes made that will help them and hurt us all the time. We have got to look out for it every day in the week, and somebody has got to know something about the subject.

Mr. TAWNEY. To what extent, if at all, has the Treasury Department performed this service in the past?

Secretary ROOT. I do not suppose to any considerable extent. It has been left to the State Department, which did not have any experts who were familiar with the subject. I have only answered a single question about trying to prevent injury. Another thing is to try to get changes made in their tariffs that will benefit us.

We have just got, incidental to a little cultivation of kindly feeling with South America, a reduction of the Brazilian duties on our flour. They gave us a 20 per cent differential, a rate 20 per cent lower to us on our flour than on the flour imported from other countries.

Mr. BURLESON. Can we obtain favors of that character without granting similar concessions?

Secretary ROOT. We have just done it.

Mr. BURLESON. What character of favor?

Secretary ROOT. A reduction of 20 per cent in the duty on flour with Brazil.

Mr. BURLESON. Without granting any concessions ourselves?

Secretary ROOT. Yes.

Mr. TAWNEY. Is it not fair to say that coffee, the chief and almost sole importation of that country, Brazil, comes to this country free? That is the reason we are able to make negotiations of that kind.

Secretary ROOT. Of course. But an understanding of that situation—that is a simple situation—an understanding of it is necessary on our part if we are to have such a concession on their part. We have now, under the third section of the Dingley Act, authority to reduce the duties on distilled spirits, argols, and wines coming from foreign countries, for a consideration, and propositions for that are always on the tapis here. We are making such arrangements from time to time. We have got to know. Other countries are making proposals to us for reciprocity treaties, just as Germany has a proposal pending now. We can not throw a proposition of that kind out of the window.

Mr. BURLESON. I will admit the crying necessity of these experts if you are going to engage in that policy.

Secretary ROOT. Whatever the policy may be, we have got to engage in the policy of treating foreign countries with consideration and courtesy, and when they come to us and say, "We want to make a reciprocity treaty" and "The tariff arrangements with us are not fair," we have got to listen to them and discuss the subject with them, and we have got to have somebody who knows something about it.

Mr. BURLESON. It does not take any expert knowledge to give them a polite answer and to say that it is not the policy of the United States to do that. Is not that the situation?

Secretary ROOT. It is not a situation that the Secretary of State is entitled to announce. We have got to deal with each situation by itself as it occurs.

Mr. Chairman, I have had many requests from those interested in this industry for legislation of the character proposed in this amendment. I believe that it is not alone to the interest of those engaged in the manufacture of cotton-seed oil, many of whom reside in my district, but I am sure it is in the interest of every man who grows cotton.

For a number of years the cotton planter has not received what I would regard as a fair price per ton for his cotton seed. It has been thought that this might have been brought about by a common understanding or secret agreement entered into by the cotton-seed oil people, but it may be the fact that markets abroad are being closed against the cotton-seed oil that has made it impossible for the manufacturer of cotton-seed oil to pay a higher price for his raw material. If this be true, and by this small sum relief can be afforded, undoubtedly it should be allowed.

Twenty thousand dollars is all that is asked. I have tried to show you why we should have these special agents. I do not believe that our consular agents can properly serve those interested in this industry, and when I say that I do not mean it in any sense as a criticism of them. I say it in the face of the condition that confronts us, and every man here knows that it confronts us. I will not now discuss why we have not more consular agents from the South or the reasons why they are assigned to duty at obscure places. That is neither here nor there. I am not making any complaint about that at this time, but I do say if you want to do right, and accord even-handed justice, you will not deny this $20,000 when millions are carried in the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill for the support of consular officers who look after the trade in other sections of the country. [Applause.]

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I will detain the House only a short time. I shall not make any extended remarks, but I simply want to say that I agree most heartily with what the gentleman from Texas has said, that this effort to widen the markets of the United States for the sale of cotton goods is not a proper subject of ridicule on the part of the gentleman from the great Commonwealth of Massachusetts or any other Member. We to-day in the South are competing with Massachusetts and New England in the manufacture of cotton goods. The cotton growers of the South have also become cotton spinners.

North Carolina ranks as the third State of the Union in the manufacture of cotton goods. Massachusetts comes first, South Carolina second, and the great State of North Carolina, which I have the honor in part to represent, comes third in the manufacture of cotton goods. The climate, water power, and labor in my State all unite to make the State a great manufacturing State. This amendment simply proposes, gentlemen of the House, to investigate trade conditions generally as to every article of manufacture and every product of this country sold in foreign markets. It proposes that there shall be an investigation as to trade conditions in cotton manufactures with a view to widening the markets of the United States for cotton and cotton manufactures. It appropriates $50,000 for the employment of special agents to do this work, of which sum $20,000 only is to be expended with a view of widening our foreign markets for cotton manufactures. I believe that would be money wisely expended, and differ wholly with the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Is this sum not insignificant compared with the value of this great product of the South; this great money crop of the South? And as the gentleman from Texas has well said, there is linked with cotton and cotton manufactures also the great cotton-seed oil industry, which has grown, as I have shown in my former speech in the House, from a few hundred thousand dollars in value and investment to millions of dollars in value. We want to devise some means to get new and wider foreign markets for that great industry of the South. What was once a waste product which brought no money to the South has grown into a great industry with millions of dollars invested.

Mr. LITTAUER. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Certainly.

Mr. LITTAUER. Was this waste product turned into millions of dollars of profit to the people of the South by any sort of reports of this character obtained through this appropriation?

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. No. It was due to the energy of the people of the South and the fact that they possessed this raw product; but of course they get suggestions from reports and investigations as to the best markets and means of increasing the price and widening the markets for the product. I will say to the gentleman from New York as the gentleman from Texas has well said, and as I have shown in my former speeches, inasmuch as we have been unable to get reciprocity treaties we want at least to have some method or means by which we can widen the markets of the South and the United States for this cotton-seed oil product as well as our cotton manufactures. It means much to that great section of our reunited country—the Southland.

Mr. LITTAUER. Can you point to any single item in the reports already made from the expenditure of the $30,000 for the year ending the 30th of July last or the supplemental $50,000 that is now being expended the promotion of which is in any way attributable to that appropriation?

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Well, I am not familiar with the reports, but, in a general way, I should say that the expenditure of this money—the sending of special agents abroad for the purpose of investigating trade conditions to extend the markets of the United States for all its manufactures and products, especially for cotton manufactures, throwing all possible light upon the subject—must necessarily tend to promote the widening of our markets, enabling us to know where and how to carry on our trade to the best advantage. We have been told one advantage of holding the Philippines is that they may be a base for our trade in cotton manufactures in the Orient.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I desire to put in the RECORD resolutions adopted by the Southern States Commissioners of Agriculture and Agricultural Workers sent me to-day by Doctor Kilgore, of the North Carolina department of agriculture. I am heartily in favor of the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina desires to print in the RECORD the matter to which he has referred. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The matter above referred to is as follows:

RESOLUTION.

Whereas cotton is the principal money crop of the South; that this will continue to be so for years to come is a matter about which there can be no difference of opinion. We note with a degree of great satisfaction that the United States Congress at its last session appropriated a small sum to be used in the commendable work of extending the market in foreign fields: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That we, the Southern States Commissioners of Agriculture and Agricultural Workers, in eighth annual session convened in the city of Jacksonville, Fla., take advantage of this, the first opportunity, to express our appreciation of the recognition given our greatest crop, and heartily commend the good work undertaken for the benefit of the cotton planter and the manufacturer, and urge our southern Congressmen and Senators to use every effort to secure adequate appropriations for the active continuation of this work.

Respectfully submitted.

H. E. BLAKESLEE, Commissioner for Mississippi,
T. H. HUDSON, Commissioner for Georgia,
TAITE BUTLER, Veterinarian for North Carolina,
Committee.

Adopted at adjourned session held at Tampa, Fla., Wednesday, November 21, 1906.

E. J. WATSON, President.

Attest:
B. W. KILGORE,
Secretary-Treasurer.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, my colleague [Mr. LIVINGSTON] has offered the following amendment:

For compensation, at not more than $10 per day and actual necessary traveling expenses, of special agents to investigate trade conditions abroad, with the object of promoting the foreign commerce of the United States, $50,000, not more than $20,000 of which shall be used in the investigation of markets for cotton products; and the results of such investigation shall be reported to Congress.

I had prepared to offer the same amendment, and it is in the language of the current law as contained in the appropriation bill for the present fiscal year. It has been of great benefit and valuable results have been obtained from it, and I hope it will be continued.

Under this appropriation investigations have been made by experts abroad, especially in China and other foreign countries, whose people use, to a great extent, cotton goods for clothing and other domestic purposes, and the results are contained and have been made known to us by the Chief of the Bureau of Manufactures, and they are, and will continue to be, of great benefit to our people, especially to the producers of cotton and its products. The sum proposed is so insignificant in comparison with the benefits that have been received, and will continue to be received, that it is surprising that anyone should oppose it.

The Chief of the Bureau of Manufactures, in his report, says:

WORK OF SPECIAL AGENTS.

Under the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act for the year 1906 the sum of $30,000 was appropriated for an investigation of trade conditions abroad. Under this authority four special agents were appointed, one of whom was assigned to Canada, Mexico, and Cuba; one to Central and South America, and two to China and Japan. These officers not only furnished the country with valuable reports describing fully trade conditions and pointing out opportunities that invited American competition, but supplied other information of a practical character conveying object lessons to manufacturers, especially those of cotton goods, that has been productive of good results, and which has received the highest commendation from many of those whose interests were thus served. Under the appropriation act for the year 1907 the sum of $50,000 is appropriated for continuing the investigation of trade conditions abroad, of which sum $20,000 is provided for an inquiry into the markets for cotton products. Under this general authority investigation of foreign markets is being continued. Two experts in the manufacture of cotton goods, who were recommended very generally by manufacturers of such goods throughout the country, were appointed and have been engaged in that special work since July 1, 1906. Investigation by men trained in particular fields of activity, whose mental equipment has been supplemented by practical application, possessing in addition to these basic qualifications zeal to prosecute and ability to describe results of their investigations, can not fail to be highly valuable to the country and advantageous to the special interests that are served. Numerous letters have reached the Bureau from representative men in a number of the leading industries urging that investigation be made of markets for the promotion of their products through the agency of experts, as in the case of manufactures of cotton. It is recommended that the attention of the Congress be invited to this matter, and that provision be made for extending investigations abroad in special fields.

Referring to the markets for cotton products, he says:

EXTENT OF VALUE OF COTTON-CLOTH MARKETS.

The cotton piece-goods trade of China is one of large extent and is constantly growing. For the year 1905 the value of such cloths exported to China and Hongkong by Great Britain was $49,625,000, a large proportion of which was composed of printed goods. For the year ended June 30, 1905, the value of cotton piece goods exported to China from the United States was $27,761,000, out of a total exportation for the year of $41,320,000, and for the fiscal year 1906 we sold to China $29,641,200 of cotton cloths out of a total for the year of $43,182,000. It will be observed that the exports of cotton cloths from Great Britain to China alone for 1905 were greater than those of the United States to all countries for that period. The figures of the cotton trade of Great Britain and the United States with South America show a much greater disparity than the figures for China. The entire value of shipments of cotton piece goods from the United States to South America for the year ended June 30, 1906, was $3,246,567, while the shipments of Great Britain for the six months ended June 30, 1906, were valued at nearly $18,000,000 and for the ten months ended October, 1906, at nearly $32,000,000. To Argentine alone Great Britain in the six months ended with June, 1906, sold about $7,000,000 worth of cotton piece goods, or twice as much as the United States sold for the entire fiscal year ended June 30, 1906, to all the countries of South America.

There seems to be no reason why the United States should not dispose of a large quantity of cotton printed goods and increase the sale of plain goods in the Orient, and reports of all observers agree that this can be done if our manufacturers will consult the conditions of the market, the requirements of the trade, the methods of doing business, and the tastes and desires of the people, and adjust their business to those conditions. The samples of printed goods sent by the special agents of the Department from China, accompanied by elaborate descriptions and explanations, were a revelation to our manufacturers and clearly established that these goods can be produced in the United States and sold in China in successful competition with those of European manufacturers.

The special agents of the Department of Commerce and Labor appointed to carry out the provisions of the present law, for which this appropriation was made by Congress, in a report which has been published, and which I have, show that there is a growing demand for cotton and cotton goods in both north and south China, and that the American manufacturer can find an increasing market there, provided he can be informed in a well-defined way of the needs of the market. Not only is the foreign trade in cotton and cotton manufactures of great importance, but the cotton-seed industry and the products of cotton seed, most of which in former years was thrown away, have become one of the greatest industries in the country, especially in the South, where cotton is raised, until now products of the value of $100,000,000 a year are produced from cotton seed, of which thirty million and odd dollars was exported this year, increasing from $13,000,000 in 1897 to $31,000,000 and over in 1906.

It may well be said that the cotton industry—the production of raw cotton and the manufactured products from the raw material and other by-products—is not only the greatest and most valuable industry in the United States, but in the world. This statement can not be answered by ridicule or comparison of the great staple product of the South, which produces this great wealth for the country and the world, with other insignificant products of the United States, as the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. SULLIVAN] has undertaken to do. Two-thirds of the raw material of cotton raised by the Southern States, which is the cotton-producing country of the world, is exported, to be converted by England, Germany, France, and other nations, into manufactured goods for the clothing of the world. But more than that, this great staple crop of the South has brought into the United States untold millions of foreign gold, and through it has not only made the South prosperous, but the entire country. In 1905 the value of raw cotton exported and the by-products of cotton, other than goods manufactured from cotton, brought into the United States $380,000,000 of the $400,000,000 of excess of exports over imports for that year. This great staple agricultural product of the South produces annually all of this excess except about $20,000,000. In five years the cotton crop and its by-products from seed amounted in value to $2,974,000,000, which was $400,000,000 more than the entire output of gold and silver of the world for those years. So that this small sum asked for by this amendment is to be expended not simply to aid the farmers and manufacturers of the South, but to aid the entire United States, which but for this great staple product of our farms would not to-day enjoy the prosperity that it does.

Mr. Chairman, I hold in my hand the reports, not those made by one of our consular agents, but of the special agents appointed under the appropriation made last year to make these investigations, and I hold in my hand the summarized report of the Chief of the Bureau of Manufactures upon that subject, from which I have quoted. We are informed of the competition we are to meet and how we are to meet it. These investigations have been made both in northern and southern China and India and South America. The people of the South who are engaged in producing this great wealth of our country have outstripped our brethren of the North in the manufacture of cotton goods, because, from manufacturing only a small portion thirty years ago, we now manufacture more raw cotton in the South than in the Northern or Eastern States. And for this great staple product of ours, which is turned into cloth for the clothing of the world, we simply ask that the small sum of $20,000 shall be appropriated in order that we may be informed where this trade can best be found and the conditions existing, so we can compete with the world.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. LITTAUER] asked the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. THOMAS] if there was any proof or any statement that these investigations had been of any benefit. I have in my possession a telegram signed by many manufacturers of cotton-seed oil in my district, and they have appealed to me asking me to see that this appropriation shall be had, because it has been of inestimable benefit to them and to the manufacturers of cotton-seed oil. I make this statement on information furnished by gentlemen who are engaged in the manufacture of at least $100,000,000 worth of this product a year.

Mr. Chairman, this product, the cotton of the South, not only brings wealth to the South, as it has done, but it has brought wealth to the entire people of the United States. For more than three or four years the value of the product has increased from $540,000,000 until the product this year will amount to $650,000,000 and more, not for the manufactured product, but for the raw material. No other product of this country can compare with it except the great corn crop.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I would like just a minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] asks unanimous consent to continue his remarks for one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I started to say this great crop of ours is greater in value than all of the other crops of the country except corn, and the most remarkable thing is that with that crop, amounting to $650,000,000 a year, the raw material is not consumed at home like that other great agricultural product which exceeds it in value, but two-thirds of it is shipped and brings into this country every year hundreds of millions of dollars of foreign gold to create and increase our prosperity, not simply of its producers, but of the entire country. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the substitute offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. SULLIVAN].

The question was taken; and the substitute was rejected.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following substitute to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LIVINGSTON].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. LITTAUER] offers a substitute, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

For compensation and actual necessary traveling expenses of special agents to investigate trade conditions abroad, with the object of promoting foreign commerce of the United States, $30,000, and the results of such investigation shall be reported to Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the substitute.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Chairman, the difference between the provision I have offered and the provision offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LIVINGSTON] is that, in the first place, it eliminates the specific compensation to be paid to a special agent. I believe the gentleman's provision calls for compensation at the rate of $10 a day, and, secondly, my substitute omits the words "twenty thousand dollars" as the specified sum to be used in the investigation of markets for cotton products, and, further, I propose to reduce the total amount appropriated from $50,000 to $30,000. I am in complete sympathy with the end that is sought to be attained with this appropriation.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Then, Mr. Chairman, why does the gentleman cut out cotton, when he knows——

Mr. LITTAUER. If the gentleman will give me but two minutes I will try and explain my position. I want to develop the commerce of the United States in every possible way. I am a manufacturer, even a manufacturer of cotton goods. I have read these reports one after the other, for I have been on the Appropriation Committee which has suggested to the House this legislation from its origin. We submitted it originally through the urgent appeals of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, to the effect that if he could but have a sum so as to send agents into one country and another, he could report to Congress facts that would enable our manufacturers to extend their trade in a very large way. The result of that first $30,000 of expenditure was that a professor of the faculty of the University of California was appointed one of the agents. He visited the countries of South and Central America with two other agents. One of them, I believe, was assistant commissioner at the Paris Exposition, and I believe the other one a newspaper writer, who visited various countries, and sent us back these reports, which gentlemen can obtain and read.

Now, gentlemen, you can not develop the trade of the United States by statistics; you can not develop the trade of the United States by having a newspaper writer send you an attractive description of various conditions of any particular trade in a country, neither can you do it by gathering from guidebooks and trade journals certain peculiarities of trade. If you want to develop the trade of the United States in any particular way, send some competent manufacturer abroad; keep him abroad long enough that he can go into the details of production and distribution that will enable the home manufacturer to understand in detail what he must do to compete with his competitors in that market. I do not believe that the expenditure of the $80,000 already appropriated will ever bring back $80,000 to the United States. We are all intensely interested in the cotton industry and hope to see it extended year after year, as it has in the last half dozen years begun to be extended in the South, until it conquers a large part of the trade of manufactured cotton goods throughout the world. But you can not do it in this way; you can not do it by attractive reports of newspaper men sent around the world. Nor can you aid the cotton-seed people to find a market in this way. If the cotton-seed oil industry, trust or otherwise, wants to extend its trade, it has competent men, who thoroughly understand the details of that business; and if this country does not furnish a large enough market for their oil they will send men throughout the world and use every shrewd business method to extend their trade, and they will get results that will inure to their profit.

Now, the appropriation last year as it passed the House was amended by an addition of $20,000 to be specially devoted to cotton. I know nothing about whether it has resulted in any good or not. This year we have been appealed to by various manufacturers, by manufacturers of machines and machine tools, by boot and shoe manufacturers, and by many other trades to extend specifically appropriation to cover their particular articles. By the way, there is a report on the boot and shoe trade in England. I do not believe that report is worth—I was going to say 10 cents. I do not believe there is a fact in it—and I personally deal with leather and leather goods, so that I know something about it—that will ever enable an extra pair of shoes to be sent out of the country or keep a man in this country a day longer at work. I believe that this entire appropriation will lead to no good result. There is a great deal of sentiment connected with the question, and a great deal of sentiment connected with the $20,000 with respect to cotton goods. When the United States will no longer provide the best, most profitable, and most ample market for our manufactures, the energetic, enterprising manufacturers of our country will themselves find the way to extend their trade and conquer the markets of the world.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The question is on the substitute amendment of the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken; and the chairman announced that he was in doubt.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 88, noes 70.

Mr. HEFLIN. Tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. LITTAUER] and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LIVINGSTON] will take their places as tellers.

The committee again divided; and tellers reported—ayes 86, noes 77.

So the substitute amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is upon agreeing to the amendment as amended.

The question was taken; and the amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. BINGHAM. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker, having resumed the chair, Mr. HEPBURN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 21574, and had come to no resolution thereon.

STANDARD OF ORTHOGRAPHY.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following House resolution, and I ask that the report be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following House resolution, and also that the report thereon be printed in the RECORD.

The Clerk read as follows:

HOUSE RESOLUTION 663.

Resolved That it is the sense of the House of Representatives that hereafter, in printing reports, documents, or other publications authorized by law, ordered by Congress or either branch thereof, or emanating from the Executive Departments, their bureaus or branches, and independent offices of the Government, the Government Printing Office should observe and adhere to the standard of orthography prescribed in generally accepted dictionaries of the English language.

The report is as follows:

In reporting favorably the accompanying resolution the Committee on Printing has been governed by the following considerations:

In the various reprints of the Constitution of the United States adherence to the original spelling is found in the majority of instances.

The spelling in the original statutes reflects the forms of spelling in vogue at the time of their enactment.

The various codifications of the statutes reflect the spelling in vogue at the time of the adoption of such codifications.

The last codification adopted was in 1878. The Statutes at Large now number fourteen volumes, covering a period of twenty-eight years. Each volume reflects the spelling in vogue at the time of the enactment of the statutes embraced therein.

A new codification is about to be presented to Congress. Until Congress shall see fit to order the printing of this proposed codification of the statutes, embracing all the enactments of the law-making power of the Government now in force, in some form of spelling other than that generally accepted by the people, it would appear to be the part of wisdom for the Government in all its branches, in the interest of simplicity and economy, to adhere to a uniform system of spelling, and this system should be the one already most generally recognized and accepted by the people.

If Congress shall adhere to the form of spelling already in vogue as applied to the statutes, it would appear anomalous to employ some other form as applied to all of the preliminary stages of legislation, including the proceedings of Congress, up to the point where these proceedings are crystallized into law, and at this point order a change in the spelling of the perfected legislation to preserve harmony in the orthography of the national statutes.

The Executive order under which many public documents have already been printed was issued on the 27th day of August, 1906, and has now been in force for more than three months. It has been extensively exploited, and the public has had ample opportunity to digest the arguments presented in its favor.

Without taking issue as to the relative merits of any form of spelling, it is evident that public sentiment as reflected in the newspapers, magazines, and other publications has not been favorable to the proposed innovation embraced in the Executive order of August 27.

It is, therefore, a condition and not a theory with which Congress has to deal. It is not believed that the attitude of the general public would be materially changed if the Government in all its branches were to adopt the form of spelling prescribed in the Executive order referred to, and only confusion and expense would result without any commensurate advantage, even if the new form of spelling were deemed preferable. Moreover, Congress has no assurance, even if it should leave present conditions undisturbed, that the next succeeding Administration would not revoke the present order. Much of the matter embraced in the publications of the Government is preserved in the form of stereotyped or electrotyped plates, representing enormous values to the Government in the saving of labor and other expense. All of these plates would be rendered worthless in a moment by an order in a succeeding Administration revoking the Executive order of August 27 last.

The sentiment in Congress is such that it must be taken without question that in the printing done for Congress the standard dictionaries will continue to be the accepted authority. If some other form of spelling is to apply to the Executive Departments, it means a dual form of spelling in the Government printing.

Much of the printing that is done for Congress is reproduced in executive documents. Much of the printing that is done for the Executive Departments is reproduced in Congressional publications. If the Government is to have two forms of spelling, this will necessarily mean double composition, double stereotyping and electrotyping, double proof reading, and other incidental expense. It will mean a double force of proof readers, for it is inconceivable that a proof reader could be required to adapt himself to more than one system of spelling with the expectation of rendering efficient service.

In justice to Government officials, it may be said, an order which dictates a particular form of orthography, involving a departure from the recognized standard in popular use, imposes upon the head of an Executive Department, as well as upon all of his subordinates, a policy that may well be considered in many instances offensive.

In the opinion of the committee, any departure from the recognized standards of orthography can not with safety, satisfaction, or economy be taken until Congress and the Executive shall agree upon the adoption of other orthographic methods.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. GILLETT. Will the gentleman yield to me a minute?

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. I will.

Mr. GILLETT. I want to say one word, because if this resolution goes through by unanimous consent without explanation it might look as if everybody who believed in the simplified spelling had changed his mind overnight. While I am perfectly content with this resolution, it is not because I have in the slightest changed my opinion; but I recognized yesterday that this House prefers the spelling now approved by the standard dictionaries. I believe it is very proper and economical that all Government documents should follow the same system of spelling. I do not believe some of us should have our speeches printed in one system and others in another, or that the Executive documents should be printed in one form and the documents of the House of Representatives in another. I should prefer that all documents should be printed with the new spelling, but inasmuch as they should all be uniform, and I am obviously in the minority, I bow to the will of the majority and approve the adoption of this resolution.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday I referred to the origin of the law identifying or pointing out the English language as the language of England, from which, as I claim, we inherit the language that we have in this country.

I now ask unanimous consent to extend these remarks in the RECORD, to the extent of publishing the law under which the official language of the people of England was changed from the Norman-French to the English of to-day.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio to extend his remarks?

There was no objection.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The statute in question was passed in 1362, in the reign of King Edward III, and is as follows:

CAP. XV.—Pleas shall be pleaded in the English tongue, and inrolled in Latin.

Item, because it is often showed to the King by the prelates, dukes, earls, barons, and all the commonalty of the great mischiefs which have happened to divers of the realm, because the laws, customs, and statutes of this realm be not commonly holden and kept in the same realm, for that they be pleaded, shewed, and judged in the French tongue, which is much unknown in the said realm, so that the people which do implead, or be impleaded, in the King's court, and in the courts of other, have no knowledge nor understanding of that which is said for them or against them by their serjeants and other pleaders; (2) and that reasonably the said laws and customs the rather shall be perceived and known, and better understood in the tongue used in the said realm, and by so much every man of the said realm may the better govern himself without offending of the law, and the better keep, save, and defend his heritage and possessions; (3) and in divers regions and countries, where the King, the nobles, and other of the said realm have been, good governance and full right is done to every person, because that their laws and customs be learned and used in the tongue of the country; (4) the King, desiring the good governance and tranquillity of his people, and to put out and eschew the harms and mischiefs which do or may happen in this behalf by the occasions aforesaid, hath ordained and established by the assent aforesaid, that all pleas which shall be pleaded in any courts whatsoever, before any of his justices whatsoever, or in his other places, or before any of his other ministers whatsoever, or in the courts and places of any other lords whatsoever within the realm, shall be pleaded, shewed, defended, answered, debated, and judged in the English tongue and that they be entered and inrolled in Latin; (5) and that the laws and customs of the same realm, terms, and processes, be holden and kept as they be and have been before this time; (6) and that by the ancient terms and forms of the declarations no man be prejudiced, so that the matter of the action be fully shewed in the declaration and in the writ. (7) And it is accorded by the assent aforesaid that this ordinance and statute of pleading begin and hold place at the fifteenth of St. Hillary next coming.

Thus it will be seen that the English language became ours first, by the statute itself here cited, and second, by our inheritance. While it may be true that we do not in terms in the United States adopt the common law of England in all our matters of legislation, it is equally true that the pioneers who came to Jamestown believed that they brought with them the common law of England as their guide, and for all these years since the reign of Edward III, more than five hundred years, the English language as specified in the dictionaries of the language has been the true language of the English speaking people. It would seem, therefore, that the standards which have built up the language are the proper guides to the present condition, and that the changes must come more gradually, as they have been coming, and which will no doubt in the long run continue to modify the orthography of the language to a full and satisfactory result.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I desire the privilege of extending my remarks on the amendment to the appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker, I also ask the same privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas makes the same request. Is there objection to either request?

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. I also make the same request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. THOMAS] also makes the same request. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, December 14, 1906.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. SPERRY, by unanimous consent, was given leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, papers in the case of William C. Manning (H. R. 1857, Fifty-eighth Congress), no adverse report having been made thereon.

PENSION DAY.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that bills on the Private Calendar in order to-day shall be in order to-morrow immediately after the approval of the Journal.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that bills on the Private Calendar in order to-day shall be in order to-morrow immediately after the approval of the Journal. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL BILL.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 21574, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. HEPBURN in the chair.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

SEC. 2. The pay of telephone switchboard operators, assistant messengers, firemen, watchmen, laborers, and charwomen provided for in this act, except those employed in mints and assay offices, unless otherwise specially stated, shall be as follows: For telephone switchboard operators, assistant messengers, firemen, and watchmen, at the rate of $720 per annum each; for laborers, at the rate of $660 per annum each; assistant telephone switchboard operators, at the rate of $600 each, and for charwomen, at the rate of $240 per annum each.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order to section 2 in order to make an inquiry. Does this section increase or decrease the compensation of these employees, or simply classify them?

Mr. BINGHAM. It does not in any way increase or decrease the compensation, but it is for the purpose of preventing the continual repetition throughout the bill.

Mr. MANN. I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. Only such books, periodicals, and pamphlets shall be purchased out of any appropriation made in this or any other act for the use of any library or office or officer as are strictly essential to the technical and professional work of the particular Department, Bureau, office, or officer authorized to use such library or collection of books; and all books, periodicals, and pamphlets which now form a part of or belong to any library or office collection of books and which are not strictly essential to the technical and professional work of the particular Department, Bureau, or office shall be transferred on or before January 1, 1908, to the Library of Congress, except that books of fiction and belles lettres shall be transferred to the Free Public Library of the District of Columbia, and all expenses of making this transfer, not otherwise sufficiently provided for, shall be paid from appropriations made for contingent expenses of the several Executive Departments or other Government establishments to which this section shall apply.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order upon this section.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer an amendment to that section.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I will reserve the point of order until an explanation can be made.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, in the preparation of the appropriation bill the fact appeared that there is in every Department of the Government and in some of the bureaus of some of the Departments miscellaneous libraries, libraries of fiction and belles-lettres, libraries wholly and entirely foreign to the administration or technical work of these Departments. These several Departments receive appropriations annually for the purchase of books without reference to the kind of books they are authorized to purchase, the theory of Congress being that certain books were essential in connection with the work of these Departments and that only such books were being purchased. But the fact is, Mr. Chairman, that these appropriations have been expended in the purchase of novels and other books of a literary and miscellaneous character, until some of these libraries have become extensive circulating libraries.

The Keep Commission some time ago appointed a subcommittee to investigate the extent and character of the libraries in the different Departments, to ascertain the character of the books, and also whether or not the maintenance of these libraries to the extent they now exist and are being maintained were essential to the public service and the administration of the Departments.

The chairman of the subcommittee when before the Committee on Appropriations gave our committee the information upon which this recommendation is based, and informed us that this provision is in line with the recommendation of the subcommittee made to the Keep Commission on this subject, and that the Keep Commission would later embody this recommendation in its final report to the President. It appears from the testimony of this committee that in the Interior Department the fiction and belles-lettres library alone occupies room in that Department three times the size of the largest room occupied by the Committee on Appropriations here in the Capitol. No man would pretend to say that standard or current novels, or any work of fiction, is necessary in the work of the Department. That being so, why should we maintain them? Why should we not vacate this room and make it available for the legitimate work of the Department. Every Department of the Government is crowded because of the want of space. Congress is constantly asked to appropriate money for the rent of new buildings, or to appropriate money for the erection of new buildings to accommodate the Departments. So urgent has this demand for space become that the Committee on Appropriations last session presented to the House, and the House adopted, a resolution directing the Secretary of the Treasury to ascertain the number of square feet of space occupied by old files in different Departments, files that have become useless or are no longer of service in the work of the Department, with a view to ascertaining how much space can be obtained for the use of the Department by removing these files and thus increase the available space for legitimate purposes. The Treasury Department is now making that investigation.

This provision is for the double purpose of securing additional space and of putting a stop to the purchase of books that do not pertain to or are of no essential use in the Departments and the bureaus in the transaction of their legitimate business. Some of these libraries are circulating libraries solely for the use of the Department clerks. I am unable to see how any Member of Congress can justify the maintenance of a circulating library in the workshops of the several Departments of the Government in Washington or anywhere else.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. TAWNEY. Just one word more. In addition to that, we are maintaining a free circulating library of sufficient size to accommodate the people of this city, independent of these Departmental libraries.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. No, Mr. Chairman, I am in full sympathy with the purpose of this section, if it is accurately explained by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY], and I have no doubt that it has been. The criticism that I desire to make of the provision is that it is altogether too strict. It prohibits the purchase by any office or officer under this or any other act, so that it applies to all Departments of the Government, of books, periodicals, etc., except such as are strictly essential. That means such as can not be dispensed with. There are a good many publications that may contain valuable information, valuable suggestions respecting methods of reform, of improvement, that I believe it would be proper for the departmental officers to purchase and have access to, but this provision shuts that out. It seems to me that if you would strike that clause out, "are strictly essential," and insert something like this, "such books as have relation to the technical work of a Department."

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say to the gentleman from Indiana that the gentleman in charge of the bill [Mr. BINGHAM] has sent to the Clerk's desk the amendment which the gentleman from Indiana proposes.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That is all right.

Mr. BINGHAM. We have included the words "administrative, and scientific," following "technical and professional work."

Mr. CRUMPACKER. This would practically prevent the purchase of any books that bear on the professional work of the Departments.

Mr. TAWNEY. This was prepared, I may say, by the librarian in charge of the Supreme Court library, who is chairman of the subcommittee of the Keep Commission that made the investigation I have referred to, and after further consideration he suggested the amendment which the gentleman in charge of the bill will now propose. I trust that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] will not insist on his point of order, because I think this provision is absolutely in the interest of good administration as well as economy. There is another phase to this question, to which I will refer briefly. It is the opportunity the presence of these libraries afford for the failure to give that attention to their duties which the Government has a right to expect from the clerks. It may not be true, and I do not state it as a fact, but members of the committee have it upon reliable authority that the convenience of these libraries in the Departments and the facility with which the clerks can in the morning go to the library and get a book, take it to their desks, prompts them occasionally, if the book is more interesting than their work, to engage in reading the book rather than in the discharge of their duty. This information influenced the committee to some extent in thus trying to put a stop to this practice, which we are informed obtains to some extent in certain Departments. The adoption of this provision will also release a large amount of space in the Department buildings and relieve the Government from the expense of caring for these libraries, these extensive miscellaneous and fiction libraries, now being maintained therein.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, I agree fully with the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] in regard to this abuse that has grown up in the bureaus and Departments of the Government, and, in addition to the facts that he so clearly stated, I desire to call the attention of the House to the fact that out of one appropriation one of the Departments of this Government expended $10,000 for novels, and that appropriation was made for the construction of battle ships. How it ever passed the auditor, under what sort of a name or what sort of a purchase, I do not know.

Mr. TAWNEY. That is a fact.

Mr. BINGHAM. I would state to the gentleman that that appropriation to which he refers was called to the attention of the committee in Congress some six or eight years ago, and there was a prohibition inserted in the succeeding bill. There has been no use of the fund to which he refers—the increase of the Navy—from that time to this for that purpose.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I do sincerely hope that the point of order will not be insisted on as against this item. There is no question but that a great abuse has arisen in nearly every Department of this Government in connection with these so-called "libraries." They are filled with novels, works of current fiction, books which have no relation whatever to the particular work being done. In fact, the practice of establishing libraries has grown to such an extent that now a library is being conducted in connection with every one of the high schools in this city. To show the gentleman from Illinois to what extent this abuse has grown, I direct attention to the fact that in some, if not all, of the high school libraries last year there was expended many dollars for the purchase of magazines and periodicals—hundreds of dollars for current magazines and periodicals—for the alleged use of the pupils of these schools. I will further give him a sample of the character of books ordered by those in authority for these high schools.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BURLESON. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Do I understand the gentleman thinks, under that expressed provision of law, there would be any authority to purchase periodicals or magazines——

Mr. BURLESON. Unless they related to the work of the particular Departments, I do not think they would have authority to purchase them.

Mr. MANN. Technical periodicals are one thing, but Scribner's and Harper's are not technical magazines. Now, would there be any authority on the part of any Government official under this to purchase a magazine or newspaper which was not technical or scientific?

Mr. BURLESON. If there was an article in a particular magazine that related to the work being done by a particular department—technical work—they could purchase it; otherwise they could not and ought not to be permitted to purchase it. Now, I want to call the attention of the committee to the character of books bought for these libraries, and the same abuse has been practiced in the departments that obtains in the high schools. What do you think of the authorities purchasing Little Boy Blue for a library that is conducted in connection with the high school and which it is claimed is needed as a reference library? The Fairies' Lullaby, Pudd'nhead Wilson, Four Feet, Two Feet, and No Feet, The Swallows' Flight; in fact, some ridiculous publications are purchased to be placed in these high school libraries. And there are more ridiculous purchases made in connection with libraries that are now being maintained in the various departments. Thousands of volumes of modern fiction bought with public money and carried in these libraries. The truth is many of these libraries have become mere circulating libraries, and there can be and ought not to be any attempted justification of their continuance.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make the point of order? The Chair is ready to rule upon this proposition if the point of order is made.

Mr. MANN. I understand, but having reserved the point of order I think I ought to say a word in defense of myself. I shall at the proper time insist upon the point of order. The provision in the bill is not well considered, although it has been considered by very able gentlemen. It is contradictory to the bill itself. The bill authorizes an appropriation, for instance, for the purchase of books and periodicals in the State Department, which can make no use of technical or professional works. It authorizes the purchase of books and periodicals in various Departments which make no use of so-called "technical" or "scientific" works. I do not know whether Webster's Dictionary would be considered a technical work for the special and professional work of a particular Department, and perhaps the gentleman thinks that since we have had a new order of orthography it is not necessary to have dictionaries. I do not agree with him.

Mr. TAWNEY. We have not now the new order of orthography.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Minnesota?

Mr. MANN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I would state to the gentleman from Illinois that this provision does not limit the Department necessarily to scientific works pertaining to the Department. The gentleman refers to the State Department. There is a great deal of literature published, historical and current literature, bearing upon questions pertaining to our foreign relations——

Mr. MANN. Which they ought to have.

Mr. TAWNEY. Which they ought to have and which under this provision——

Mr. MANN. And which they could not buy unless they violate the law.

Mr. TAWNEY. They could buy it.

Mr. MANN. Here is the reading of the language of the proposed amendment, "Only such books, etc., shall be purchased, etc., as are strictly essential"——

Mr. TAWNEY. Wait a moment——

Mr. MANN. I am reading the provisions of the bill, if the gentleman will pardon me, "strictly essential to the technical and professional work of the particular Department." Why, under that provision you could not buy a directory for the use of the Congress of the United States.

Mr. TAWNEY. Now, if the gentleman will permit me, and I think he wants to be fair on this proposition——

Mr. MANN. The gentleman knows that.

Mr. TAWNEY. Before the gentleman reserved the point of order, the gentleman in charge of the bill sent to the Clerk's desk a committee amendment so that it would read "administrative, scientific, professional, and technical." Now, that would admit of the purchase of books essential to the administration of the Department and prevent the maintenance of large circulating libraries in these various Departments. That is the object of this provision. It is not proposed to curtail the Department in the purchase of anything which is essential to the administration of the Department itself.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the amendment proposed now by the committee, which I have heard for the first time, and which the members of this committee have heard for the first time——

Mr. TAWNEY. It is the second time, because I stated it to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] a few moments ago when answering his inquiry.

Mr. MANN. But I have not heard it.

Mr. BINGHAM. The gentleman's point of order cut me off.

Mr. MANN. Certainly, "the gentleman from Illinois" is wise enough not to permit the gentleman to offer an amendment which would absolutely cut out the point of order.

Mr. BINGHAM. It was not for that purpose.

Mr. MANN. It would have that effect, whatever the purpose was. The amendment now proposed shows that when the committee offered the original proposition they had not duly considered it. They now propose to change, admitting that the original proposition is wrong. It may be that the committee has given due consideration to the subject now, but it is evident they had not given it due consideration before. As for myself I have not been able to give due consideration to the subject since, just now for the first time hearing the amendment read, and before this goes into a law I want the opportunity to duly consider it, and I therefore insist upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to line 9, on page 19, and to line 2, on page 12, for the purpose of offering an amendment.

Mr. BINGHAM. We have no objection.

Mr. SHERMAN. Those are two about which I talked to the chairman of the subcommittee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] asks unanimous consent to return to line 9, on page 19, and to line 2, on page 12. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I would like to have the amendment reported for information.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I send to the Clerk's desk the amendment that I propose to offer if the request is granted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 19, line 9, strike out "two" and insert "four."

Mr. SHERMAN. I will explain to the gentleman, if I may be permitted, Mr. Chairman, that this is the only one of the employees especially provided for that has not been increased to $1,400, and it affects the doorkeeper at this door, Mr. Jennison, who has been here for sixteen years, and this amendment puts him on an equality with the others.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to introduce an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN]?

Mr. MANN. There is only one amendment, as I understand, that has been explained so far, and he will offer two or three.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the second amendment?

Mr. SHERMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] will offer the other amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. MADDEN. I would ask the Clerk to report the amendment which I have just handed up.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 12, line 2, after the words "Journal clerk," strike out "and" and insert "four thousand dollars."

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, this amendment provides that the Journal clerk's salary shall be raised from $3,600 to $4,000, and is only in keeping with the services which, I believe, that official renders.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York, which the Clerk will now report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 9, page 19, strike out "two" and insert "four."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 12, line 2, after the words "journal clerk," strike out the word "and" and insert "four thousand dollars."

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 23 for the purpose of moving to strike out the provision which was inserted day before yesterday in respect to spelling, or the orthography used in printing public documents. The action of the House yesterday, just before adjournment, in adopting the resolution presented by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS], and as the papers announced this morning it is the purpose of the President to to-day issue an order revoking his former order issued some time ago with respect to simplified spelling, leaving the matter of the orthography in which public documents shall be printed under authority of law to remain just as it has been in the past, it is entirely unnecessary that this limitation should remain in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to return to page 23 for the purpose of giving him an opportunity to move to strike out line 20 and the following lines of the page. Is there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. TAWNEY. I now move to strike out the words indicated by the Chair—the limitation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lieu of the paragraph stricken out insert:

"No money appropriated in this act shall be used in connection with printing documents authorized by law or ordered by Congress or either branch thereof unless the same shall conform to the orthography recognized and used by generally accepted dictionaries of the English language."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent for the consideration of the amendment, on a motion to strike out the language just read. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The question was taken; and the motion to strike out was agreed to.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk be authorized to correct the totals in the bill where there are errors from the action of the committee in the last few moments.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the Clerk may correct any erroneous totals in the bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BINGHAM. I now move, Mr. Chairman, that the bill with amendments be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HEPBURN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 21574) and had directed him to report the bill to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be adopted, and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. BINGHAM. I now move the previous question on the amendments to the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote asked on any of the amendments? If not, the vote will be taken in gross.

No separate vote was demanded.

The question was taken; and the amendments were agreed to in gross.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Speaker, in accordance with the unanimous consent granted yesterday, I now offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On and after the 4th of March, 1907, the compensation of the Speaker of the House of Representatives and Vice-President shall be at the rate of $12,000 per annum.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Speaker, I do not believe——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Before the gentleman starts into a discussion of the question, can we agree on a division of the time?

Mr. LITTAUER. I have no disposition to limit debate.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then the gentleman will agree that the opponents of the amendment shall be recognized before he moves the previous question?

Mr. LITTAUER. So far as I am concerned.

Mr. Speaker, I have no comment whatever to make on the amendment I have offered. Everyone recognizes the dignity of the position of Speaker of this House, recognizes that the duties are arduous, and that the pay is altogether unequal to the position. No Speaker can live and pay his expenses out of the $8,000 now appropriated. As far back as fifty years ago, in 1856, Congress appropriated twice the amount of salary to the Speaker as to Members of this House. It appears to me that this amendment, at least, ought to be adopted unanimously.

Mr. BURLESON. Will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. LITTAUER. Certainly.

Mr. BURLESON. Can the gentleman give the House information as to what compensation is allowed the speaker of the House of Commons?

Mr. LITTAUER. The Speaker of the House of Commons is allowed a salary of $25,000 a year and a magnificent gothic residence. At the end of his term of service he is usually made a peer and given a further pension of $20,000 a year. The speaker of the French Chamber of Deputies, again, is given a palace to live in, $15,000 a year, and a regiment of soldiers [laughter], and the drum corps plays every time he takes his seat. [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to any further increase of salaries for legislative and executive officers. I do believe that the salaries of some of the minor clerks in the Government must necessarily be increased on account of the increased cost of living, but this does not apply to the higher governmental officer. I am opposed and have always been opposed to increasing the salaries of Members of the House or Senators.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield to an inquiry?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Did not the gentleman favor the proposition and speak in favor of the raising of the salaries of the Federal judges here not long ago?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not know that I did.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I know you did, for I heard you. [Laughter.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I was in favor of paying the Federal judges additional salary, but that is a very different proposition from paying a legislative salary.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. You also voted to pay for the offices they used. I pay for my own office and you pay for yours. We are Members of Congress. Are the judges any better than we are?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes; I think they are.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Well, I never saw a judge who I thought was any better than you or myself. [Laughter and applause.] We are all equals under the law and under the Stars and Stripes, and I want to keep it that way.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, when I said that probably some of the judges were better than ourselves I was referring to myself and the average Member of Congress, but of course not to my friend from Tennessee.

Mr. Speaker, there is a reason why a judge should receive a greater salary that a Member of Congress, or a member of the legislative branch of the Government. The Federal judges are appointed for life. Eminent lawyers are able to earn very large incomes in their private law practice, and if you want the strongest and ablest men on the bench you have got to pay them commensurate salaries. But that is not true as to the man who occupies a legislative position.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Not until I finish what I have to say.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. There is no legislative body in the world that pays its members as much as the Members of the Congress of the United States are paid. It is looked on as an honor for a man to represent his government in its legislative branch, and it is not expected that he should represent the people for the monetary consideration. It is expected in all legislative bodies that he should represent them for the honor that he receives, not as a permanent avocation in life, but as a temporary proposition, and it is so in the American Congress. I do not believe that the average Member of Congress serves as much as two terms. He does not come here to make his living, as the judge goes to the Federal bench, to stay there for a lifetime and support himself from his salary and lay aside something for his family. It is true there are some few men in this body and in the Senate whose constituents have honored them by keeping them here for nearly a lifetime, but that is the exception to the rule. The average man comes here for only a short time. He does not come here to make money, and he should not come here to make money. He can not make money out of the salary that is paid, and he should not make money in his legislative capacity by using his office for that purpose. Now, I claim that the only reason for giving a salary at all to a member of a legislative body is that a poor man may come here and represent his constituents, whether he has independent means or not, and I do not think any man can deny the proposition that any man in the United States, no matter how poor he is, can come here with his family and live comfortably on the salary that is paid to a Member of Congress. I do not contend that he can live here and keep pace with the modern society of Washington. And if we should make the salary $7,500, he could not live here with his whole family at the best hotel and keep carriages, horses, and automobiles, and keep pace with modern society in Washington, and that is not expected.

Mr. HUGHES. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. HUGHES. Will the gentleman state to us what his monthly expenses are during the time he is here in Washington?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, I am willing to state that. I can not state accurately, but when I am in Washington it takes about all my salary to live. It does not take all of my salary to support me when I am at home. If the gentleman wants a candid answer, I have given it to him.

Mr. LITTAUER. I have no desire to limit any debate in connection with the amendments I shall offer. But I think it is a wrong precedent. If we start out by increasing salaries now—and I am discussing this question from this standpoint because I believe if this resolution goes to the Senate it will not be limited to the Speaker of the House and the President of the Senate and the Cabinet officers as it is when presented here today; but when it goes to the Senate it will be amended in the Senate and cover the salaries of the members of the Senate and of the House and will come back here in that shape, and if it comes back here in that shape it will come in a conference report, where it will be impossible for this House to meet the question singly and alone. Therefore I think we might as well consider it from this point now.

As to gentlemen who think they are not getting enough salary and think that the salary ought to be increased and are willing to take the responsibility to vote themselves more salary, I have no personal criticism to make. But I want to say to the House that, so far as I am concerned and my constituency is concerned, I do not believe that the constituency that I represent would uphold me in putting into my pocket now or for the future an increased salary, and therefore I intend to vote against this proposition when it comes before the House.

The gentleman from Alabama understands that this amendment only applies to the Speaker of the House and the Vice-President?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes, I understand; but when it comes back from the Senate it will come back with Members of the House and the Senate included.

Mr. LITTAUER. Well, it is only fair to say to the gentleman that I will offer other amendments later, one covering the salary of the Members of the House of Representatives.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, I anticipated what I knew would ultimately come. But I wanted to present now this question to the House.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to vote for even a larger salary for the Vice-President and Speaker of the House.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Alabama yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I understood the gentleman from Alabama had closed.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to ascertain about the time, and whether the gentleman from Alabama yielded the floor.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield the floor so that the gentleman can be recognized in his own right.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York is recognized in his own right.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I said that I should be glad to vote a much larger salary to the Vice-President and to the Speaker of the House. The proposed $12,000 salaries are not, in my judgment, sufficiently large for the offices. For the information of the House, I desire to call attention to the fact that five officials, other than judicial officers, in the city of New York, receive salaries larger than those proposed here, while a number of others receive compensation equal to the sum named in the pending amendment. The mayor of the city of New York receives a salary of $15,000 a year; the comptroller, the city's chief financial officer, $15,000, and the corporation counsel, the chief law officer of the city, $15,000. The sheriff of New York County receives $12,000 and one-half of the fees of his office, which aggregate a considerable sum, and the sheriff of the county of Kings receives $15,000. Both counties are within the city. The district attorney of New York is paid $12,000; three members of a water-supply commission, $12,000 each, and the city chamberlain, $12,500.

I can not believe, Mr. Speaker, that there is a single Member of this House who does not realize that the Vice-President of the United States and the Speaker of this House occupy positions of greater dignity, larger responsibility, and greater importance to the people than any of those mentioned. The compensation of these two officials should be such as to enable them to live in that style or manner befitting the dignity of their honorable places. This country is rich and can well afford to pay such salaries to its officials as will enable them to meet the requirements in their mode of living universally demanded by the people.

In my opinion, the amount proposed for their compensation is not sufficient. It is with much reluctance that I refrain from testing the sense of the House upon the question of fixing these salaries at a sum at least equal to the chief officials of one of the municipalities of the country. I withhold the amendment merely because, after consultation with those Members who have had the pending amendment under consideration for some time, it is deemed best to ask only for the amount proposed.

I understand that there will be presented other amendments increasing the compensation of members of the Cabinet from $8,000 to $12,000 and the compensation of Members of Congress from $5,000 to $7,500 a year. I shall vote for both amendments.

The compensation of Members of this House should be such as would enable them to maintain themselves and their families while in Washington in a mode of life as comfortable as that to which they are accustomed at their homes. I do not mean in the style of men of great or even large wealth. I refer to those men of limited means who live neither extravagantly nor luxuriously, but only in a manner that is respectable and at the same time befitting their positions as Members of this House. They can not do so upon the salary of $5,000 a year without practicing economies that they should not be compelled to practice.

In the large cities of the country it is undoubtedly true that the cost of living is much greater than in other sections, and the demands upon the purse of Members are somewhat more burdensome. Knowing the conditions that a Representative from a large city has to meet, I know that the increase in salaries about to be proposed is reasonable and proper. I have hastily prepared a list of more than 150 officials of the city of New York, which I shall insert in the RECORD, who receive salaries of $5,000 or more a year. The list by no means exhausts the number. Familiar as I am, after eight years' service in this House, with the responsibilities and duties of a Representative; knowing as I do the duties and responsibilities of many of the officials whom I shall enumerate, I assert with conviction that the salaries paid to Members of Congress are not at all commensurate with their duties, responsibilities, and the burdens which their official positions impose upon them. Convinced that the salaries should be increased, I shall support the amendment when offered. I am ready to vote what I believe to be a fair, proper, and decent compensation to those serving in the executive, judicial, and in the legislative departments of the Government. I shall vote for the amendments gladly and willingly, and I should do so even if I knew that the price of such a vote would be the termination of my career in this House. [Applause.]

Mr. MACON. Mr. Speaker, I certainly have no personal objection to increasing the salaries of the members of the Cabinet, the Vice-President, the Speaker, or the other Members of the Senate and House, and sir, if there were not other interests of the country that are much more in need of national aid than the distinguished officials that I have just enumerated, and the condition of the Treasury justified it, I am free to say that by reason of the growing demands that are being made upon them because of the great increase of the cost of living I would vote for these amendments that are now being offered to this bill to increase their salaries. But, sir, that condition does not exist, and hence I am unalterably opposed to the increase of the salary of anyone that is now in the employ of the National Government in any capacity, with the single exception, perhaps, of the poorly paid rural mail carriers. The people of this country are clamoring for river and harbor improvement from one end of it to the other, and yet when they ask Congress to appropriate money for that purpose they are politely informed that the Treasury is in such a depleted condition that their projects, no matter how pressing and worthy, must wait until we get more money. They have had that old story poured into their ears for years, and they have believed that it was perhaps true, but right in the face of that pauperized answer to their requests we are met with a proposition to increase our own salaries 50 per cent. The river and harbor interests of the country have suffered for many long years, and the result of our neglect of them has caused the people of the country to be fairly robbed of millions of dollars per year because our waterways were not in a condition to furnish them with a water rate that would force the railroads to be reasonable and just in their charges. As long as that condition exists, as long as our finances are so low that we can not afford to appropriate sufficient funds to carry out the worthy river and harbor projects of the country so as to give the toiling masses better and cheaper transportation facilities, we ought to blush to even think of increasing our own pay. I mention the river and harbor interests specifically, because, with me, the improvement of our rivers and harbors and the construction of proper and necessary canals is the great economic question of our time and should not be longer delayed. Sir, I will not vote one cent for the increase of salaries of public officials at this time, but I will gladly vote for an appropriation of $100,000,000 for river and harbor improvement at any moment of this session of Congress.

Mr. Speaker, there are many other interests in our country that are much more in need of national aid than are our public officials, but the short time allotted to me in this discussion will not permit me to enumerate them. I will, therefore, content myself by asserting that they exist, and that any man of sense and justice can find them if he will try just a little. I know that each and every Member of this House can do so if he will take a trip over his district.

Ah, Mr. Speaker, the greatest evil connected with the legislation of our day and generation is to be found in the fact that our legislators are too prone to legislate "to give to him that hath and to take from him that hath not even that which he hath."

I deplore the inhuman spirit that prompts it and condemn the acts of all who practice it.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. UNDERWOOD) there were—ayes 214, noes 51.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama demands the yeas and nays. As many as are in favor of ordering the yeas and nays will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Twenty-two gentlemen have arisen, not a sufficient number, and the yeas and nays are refused.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following additional amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

New section to stand as section 7:

"On and after March 4, 1907, the compensation of heads of Executive Departments, who are members of the President's Cabinet, shall be at the rate of $12,000 per annum."

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Speaker, I have no desire to make any extended comment on the submission of this amendment. The members of the President's Cabinet for nearly fifty years have received a compensation of $8,000 per year. A dollar does not go as far to-day in the city of Washington as it did when this compensation was established. The requirements in official life, and in social life, warrant us at least in increasing this salary to $12,000. Even this increase is not an attempt to make the salary adequate to services rendered, for no moderate salary would make such compensation. It has been suggested to me that while money does not go as far to-day in the city of Washington as it did fifty years ago it goes somewhat faster. Just to add a little bit to the interest of the question, I desire to call the attention of the House to the fact that in the Philadelphia Enquirer of Friday morning, December 14, is the picture of the president of the American Baseball League, and a notice to the effect that his salary has just been increased from $10,000 to $15,000 per year. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. LITTAUER. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. I suppose the gentleman is aware that there is no place in the statutes where there is any recognition of the President's Cabinet. The gentleman in his amendment provides for an increase of salary for the heads of Departments who constitute the President's Cabinet. There is no definition in law as to what constitutes the President's Cabinet. Would it not be wiser to designate the nine secretaries—the heads of the various Departments—who, in fact, constitute the Cabinet?

Mr. LITTAUER. The language of the amendment carries that out—heads of Departments who are members of the President's Cabinet.

Mr. MANN. For instance, there is the head of the Department of Labor. So far as the law is concerned, there is nothing in the statutes to indicate whether he is a member of the Cabinet or not, because the statute does not recognize the Cabinet. The law has been invariably to fix the salary of the Secretary of State, or the Secretary of the Treasury, etc., at such an amount.

Mr. LITTAUER. I have no pride in this language, but if the gentleman will permit me to suggest, the head of the Department of Labor, as he designates him, should be called the head of the Bureau of Labor.

Mr. MANN. Well, I beg the gentleman's pardon; the law says that there shall be a Department of Labor with a Commissioner at the head of it. The Bureau of Commerce and Labor calls it a bureau, but that is in violation of the statute.

Mr. LITTAUER. I am quite willing to accept any amendment which will carry out this intent, which is that the compensation of heads of Executive Departments, who are members of the President's Cabinet, shall be compensated at this salary. I do not believe such designation can ever be misunderstood.

Mr. DALZELL. Why have any doubt about it?

Mr. LITTAUER. There is none, to my mind.

Mr. MANN. Why not designate the nine Secretaries who are now members of the so-called "Cabinet?"

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York yield to his colleague?

Mr. LITTAUER. I do.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I would like to ask my colleague from New York whether or not he has any more resolutions?

Mr. LITTAUER. I decidedly have, and one that deals with salaries of Members of Congress and Senators. [Applause.]

Mr. DRISCOLL. Is that the only additional one?

Mr. LITTAUER. That will be the only additional one it is my present purpose to offer, and the only one that unanimous consent, under which we are now acting, authorizes.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 204, noes 60.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The question was again taken; and 33 gentlemen arising in favor thereof, not a sufficient number, the yeas and nays were refused. [Applause.]

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Speaker, I offer a final amendment. [Laughter and applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The compensation of Senators, Representatives in Congress, and Delegates from Territories shall be at the rate of $7,500 per annum, which compensation shall be in lieu of all other pay and allowance except actual individual traveling expenses from their homes to the seat of Government and return, by the most direct route of usual travel, once for each session of the House to which such Senator, Member, or Delegate belongs, to be certified to under his hand to the disbursing officer and filed as a voucher.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Speaker, first a word of explanation as to the amendment.

Mr. KEIFER rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. LITTAUER. Certainly.

Mr. KEIFER. I desire, Mr. Speaker, to ask the gentleman whether the purpose of this amendment is to take away, in case the salary is increased to $7,500, all pay for clerks as well?

Mr. LITTAUER. Decidedly not. I was about to state that the purpose of this amendment is to raise the salary of Senators, Representatives, and Delegates from $5,000 a year to $7,500 a year and not to interfere with the clerical service allowed nor the stationery allowance made, but only to wipe out the present provision in reference to mileage and in place thereof to pay actual expenses in traveling to and from each session of Congress.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, the statement of the gentleman from New York is quite clear as to his purpose. I would like to have the amendment read so that we may pass upon the effect of it ourselves, as there seems to be some doubt among the Members.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. KEIFER and Mr. LIVINGSTON rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield further to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. LITTAUER. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. KEIFER. I do not want to be captious, but as I understand the language as read I think the purpose of the mover is made different from that which he states he intends, and I think where there is so much doubt it would be better to put it in shape so that we will not misunderstand the matter.

Mr. LITTAUER. I think that I can correct any misapprehension there may be here by submitting an amendment in a new form rather than in the one read from the desk.

I would offer a new amendment to read, "Which compensation shall be in lieu of all mileage," thereby taking out of the amendment other pay and allowance.

Mr. LACEY. I would like to ask the gentleman another question. I call his attention to the fact that this is merely not an appropriation, but the enactment of a law. The gentleman does not fix the date when this goes into operation. Consequently he would change the law as to compensation from the date of the approval of this act, which might be next week. Consequently he changes the compensation and strikes out the mileage of the present Congress.

Mr. LITTAUER. It was my purpose to call the attention of the House to that very matter, and my purpose to leave the time in which this shall become effective to be determined by the House.

Mr. LACEY. If this amendment was adopted in its present form, it would be immediately operative.

Mr. LITTAUER. I believe as a part of the legislative, executive, and judicial bill it would not be operative until the 1st of July next.

Mr. LACEY. This is not a part of the legislative bill. It becomes a law. The appropriation would not be operative, but any law we put in this bill is immediately operative as soon as approved.

Mr. LITTAUER. I think the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] is correct.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the gentleman have the right to withdraw under the rules the amendment he offered, and submit the other one.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Speaker, I ask permission to withdraw the amendment and offer the following.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The compensation of Senators, Representatives in Congress, and Delegates from Territores shall be at the rate of $7,500 per annum, which compensation shall be in lieu of all mileage except actual individual traveling expenses from their homes to the seat of government and return by the most direct route of usual travel, once for each session of the House to which such Senator, Member, or Delegate belongs, to be certified to under his hand to the disbursing officer and filed as a voucher.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That the compensation named in this amendment shall not be paid each Senator and Member prior to March 4, 1909.

Mr. PAYNE. I want to suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] that the amendment would be better if it came in at the beginning—that "on and after March 4, 1909," the compensation shall be as follows, and so forth.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. I have no pride in my amendment, except——

Mr. PAYNE. I suggest that to the gentleman.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. I have no pride whatever in the form of the amendment. I am perfectly willing that the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] shall phrase it as he sees fit, provided its purpose is not altered.

Mr. PAYNE. I suggest to the gentleman, then, that he insert, after the word "that," at the commencement of the amendment offered by the gentleman, "on and after the 4th of March."

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. On and after March 4, 1909.

Mr. MUDD rose.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. MUDD. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to be captious as to language.

The SPEAKER. The amendment, as the Chair understands, is now being modified, and will be reported as soon as modified. Therefore the Chair would ask that the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MUDD] suspend a moment until the amendment as modified is reported. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

On and after March 4, 1909, the compensation of Senators, Representatives in Congress, and Delegates from Territories shall be at the rate of $7,500 per annum, which compensation shall be in lieu of all mileage except actual individual traveling expenses from their homes to the seat of government and return by the most direct route of usual travel, once for each session of the House to which such Senator, Member, or Delegate belongs, to be certified to under his hand to the disbursing officer and filed as a voucher.

Mr. MUDD. Mr. Speaker, just a word. I do not wish to be captious as to language, but if you use the language "on and after," you will pay the increased salary for the February of the Sixtieth Congress. It would seem to be a small matter, but it makes some difference. If we say "on and after" the 4th day of March, 1909, we will make the increase apply to a part of the Sixtieth Congress, which it is not the purpose of those of us who favor this postponement of the operation of the law to do.

Mr. TAWNEY. Does the gentleman mean to say that the Sixtieth Congress will expire on the 4th of March, 1909? It expires on the 3d of March.

Mr. MUDD. If that be conceded, the language as it now stands will be correct. I only want to make sure that we do not provide that the increase of salary shall take effect during the Sixtieth Congress.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask recognition.

Mr. LITTAUER. I yield to a question; I do not care to yield the floor.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I wanted to address myself to this resolution.

Mr. LITTAUER. I yield such time as the gentleman may desire.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I only care to take five minutes.

Mr. LITTAUER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I have heretofore stated my objection to this resolution, my objection to increasing the salary of the membership of this House, and I have nothing more to say in regard to that question, except to reply to the remarks of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], wherein he cited the salaries of certain officials in New York City to evidence the reason why our salary should be increased. The cost of living varies in different parts of the United States. The cost of renting a small home in New York City would be as much as the cost of renting a very handsome house in my town. The cost of provisions, the cost of clothing, the cost of everything in a big city like New York is much greater than it would be in a large portion of this country. It is very much greater than in the city of Washington. And there is no comparison of salary which is just and fair along those lines. The gentleman may as well compare the salary of the officers in Alabama or some other State in the Union. The governor of Alabama only receives $5,000 a year; the judges of the supreme court only $4,000 a year; the circuit judges $3,000 a year, and, I believe, the secretary of State only $2,500 a year. It is not a question of comparison. I think the people of the United States are willing to pay their Representatives in Congress a fair and reasonable salary to compensate for their coming to Washington, but it is not expected that a salary should be paid that a man can make money on or get rich on. I do not think there is anyone who can deny the fact that a man who lives within reasonable lines can live on the salary now paid Members of Congress, and, so far as I am concerned, I do not believe my constituency would justify me in voting for more.

Mr. LITTAUER. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BOUTELL].

Mr. BOUTELL. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this proposition to increase the compensation of Members and Senators from five to seven thousand five hundred dollars, but at the same time I was very glad to vote to increase the compensation of the Speaker, the Vice-President, and members of the Cabinet. I think, however, that upon reflection we will see that their position presents a case entirely different from that of the Members of this House. The public duties of these officials, to say nothing of the social demands made upon the Speaker, the Vice-President, and members of the Cabinet, are such as to entitle them to an increase of compensation. With the Members of Congress, however, it seems to me that the case is entirely different. If we were to attempt to make the compensation of the Members of this House adequate to the income which many of them renounced in coming here, the amount should be much larger than $7,500. If those who favor this proposed increase do so as an effort to make the pay of Members at all adequate to the earning capacity of Members, it seems to me they are looking at membership in this House from an entirely wrong point of view. This House, Mr. Speaker, considering the character of the relations which Members of it bear to the people, and in view of the power and influence of this Republic, is easily the greatest legislative body that ever assembled. Membership in this House is the greatest honor ever conferred upon a man by a free electorate. The compensation, therefore, such as it is, should be regarded almost in full, if not entirely as an honorarium. I am opposed to the increase in the pay of the secretaries of Members provided for in this bill, for there are many employees of the Government now receiving inadequate pay, such as the post-office clerks, who, I think, are entitled to the first consideration, and I am opposed to this increase in the pay of Members on the theory of making it equal to the income which even the average Members of this House renounced in coming here.

My view of the matter is this: That by any attempt to make membership of this House desirable on account of the money reward you thereby diminish the honor of service in this eminent body. By increasing the pay you lessen the distinction. I feel sure as I look around me here that there are many Members in this great body who at large personal sacrifice to themselves would make an effort to come here even if there were no compensation at all. I see before me business and professional men, many of whom I know personally, have renounced incomes several times the sum of $7,500 for the privilege and the honor of serving their constituencies as Members of this body.

Mr. SIMS. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. BOUTELL. I have only a few moments, but I yield with pleasure for a question.

Mr. SIMS. In order to increase the honor, suppose you knock all the salary out?

Mr. BOUTELL. I am free to say, in reply to the gentleman from Tennessee, that while it is as hard for me to get along on the $5,000 as it is for most of the Members, even if the present compensation were taken away, I should make a desperate effort by pinching and skimping and greater economy to still retain my membership in this House, so great do I regard the honor. [Applause.]

But, as I look upon it, you diminish the honor by attempting to make the money payment any adequate or full compensation for the Members of this House. And so, regarding the question in this light, while I was very glad to give my assent to the other increases, I am not willing to join in an effort to make the pecuniary compensation of Members equal to the earning capacity of the average Members of this House.

I like to feel that the money payment to the Members is still, in the larger sense, an honorarium, and that membership in this House is to be regarded more as an honor than as a means of deriving an income. Therefore I shall vote against this proposition. [Applause.]

Mr. DUNWELL. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. BOUTELL. I regret that my time is up.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. LITTAUER. I yield to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK]. How much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. About five minutes.

Mr. LITTAUER. I yield to the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I desire to refer to this question from the standpoint of a poor Member of Congress. Poverty is not a crime, nor ought it be a deterrent to official place under the Government. The time has come, Mr. Speaker, when men are leaving the service of their country, retiring to private life, solely because the salary which they receive in their official positions is inadequate to maintain them, and they see in the future years ahead poverty for their children and want in their old age. I believe in dealing with this question from the standpoint of right. Are the salaries inadequate? Are they commensurate with the station and the duty to be performed? If they are not, then they ought to be increased, no matter if others would come here from our districts and gladly accept the position for less pay.

I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that I come from a district that I know will stand by me in this increase of salary. My people are in favor of decent pay for these positions. While it is true, as the gentleman from Illinois has said, that it is a high and honorable place, the Government of the United States ought not to require the services of any citizen without pay commensurate to the services performed. And, Mr. Speaker, I believe there are not ten men on this floor who, in private conversation, will not say, "The salary is inadequate, the increase is right," but, some say, "I can not afford to vote for it." [Applause.] If the time ever comes while I am a Member of this House that I look upon any proposition as being right, and yet I am afraid to vote for it, I will tender my resignation and go home. [Applause.] I intend, as long as I am here, to vote my convictions as my limited ability will give me the light. And you all know that it is utterly impossible to maintain a family in the city of Washington, with all of your other expenses, on the present salary. Mr. Speaker, some gentlemen leave their families at home because they are not able to bring them here. I would not come here for a Senatorship if I had to remain for six or seven months separated from the wife of my bosom and the children of my loins. [Applause.] The Government does not require it. The newspapers of the country, representing public sentiment, are demanding this increase, and they are branding us with not having the courage to vote for it. If it is right Mr. Speaker, that this increase should take effect in the Congress to begin on March 4, 1909, it is right that it should take effect in the Congress to begin on March 4, 1907. [Applause.] And I intend, if this amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] is voted down, to offer an amendment fixing the taking effect of this law at the beginning of the next session of Congress. [Applause.] That is the time when it ought to take effect, and the sentiment "I can not vote for it because I am increasing my own salary" is a mere subterfuge, by which you can not deceive the American people. They know that the vast majority of the Members of this House consider that the salary is inadequate and that it ought to be increased. You can not fool them. They know that you want it, and they know that some gentlemen here will vote against it, while at the selfsame moment their hearts are silently sending up prayers to the good Lord that it may pass. [Laughter.]

In my State, Mr. Speaker, we have a constitution adopted in 1885. That constitution provides for biennial sessions of the legislature. It provides that members of the legislature shall not receive more than $6 per day, and 10 cents a mile in going and returning from the capital. During the twenty-one years that that constitution has been in force—and every session fixes its own pay—propositions have been offered at $3 a day, $4 a day, $5 a day, and not a single legislature has ever met that they did not wind up by fixing it at the maximum—$6 a day and 10 cents a mile. We increased last year the salary of the governor from $3,500 to $5,000, and built a mansion for him to live in. We have increased the salaries of the judges and the State attorneys, and all down the line, because our people recognize the great increase in the cost of living that has been brought about by this era of marvelous prosperity.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Certainly.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. With $7,500 and the mileage taken out and the actual expenses given for 386 Members of the House, will that be practically any more expense to the Government in the way of a tax than the present salary of $5,000?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I have no doubt that it will not be.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. That is so, for I have figured it out.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, it is true that a seat in this great legislative body is a great and distinguished honor, well worthy the ambition of any citizen of the Republic; but if you fix the compensation so low that a man of moderate means can not, in justice to his family, remain here, you absolutely close the "door of hope" to every poor man in all the land, and you deliver the law-making power into the hands of the rich and powerful. So great is the honor of being a Member of this House that men have, in the past, sacrificed their personal interests to remain here; they are sacrificing their personal interests to-day, and as long as the laudable ambition to serve one's country finds lodgment in the breast of the American citizen, sacrifices to reach here and to remain will continue to be made. But, Mr. Speaker, all this is no argument against an increase of salary for the membership of this body. I represent upon this floor as enlightened, intelligent, and progressive a constituency as exists anywhere throughout the broad domain of this great Republic, and I am quite sure that my people do not wish me to pursue a course that would close the door to a seat in the Congress in the face of the poorest man who lives within the borders of the great district which I have the distinguished honor at the present time to represent. While I may be criticised from certain quarters for the position I am now taking—and, indeed, I expect it—yet I am happy in the assurance, Mr. Speaker, that the reign of the demagogue is at an end in the State of Florida, and our people can no longer be misled by the senseless ranting of the "sand-lot" orator. Florida has her face set toward the morning of this new day of progress and is endeavoring to keep step with the music of our wonderful national prosperity. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BOUTELL], for whose opinions I have the very highest respect, suggests that the matter of compensation should not be considered, and that even if there was no salary at all gentlemen would make a desperate effort to retain their seats in this body. Mr. Speaker, none but the wealthy could afford to do that, and if such provision of law should obtain you would soon witness in this free Republic a House of Representatives composed entirely of very rich individuals, some of whom may have made their fortunes by their own activities, some of whom may have inherited it, and some of whom may have married it, but every one of them, in all probability, far removed from the common people of our land.

Mr. Speaker, I am opposed absolutely to the payment of salaries of Members by indirection. For God's sake let us answer the great daily papers, who are challenging our courage. You know that the salary is inadequate; you say it is inadequate; you say that this is not wrong. Then I appeal to you to go upon the record by your votes before all the country. [Applause.]

I will print as a part of my remarks the following clippings:

[Washington Times, December 8, 1906.]

INCREASING SALARIES.

It will be a wonder if the Congressional movement for a reasonable increase in Government salaries doesn't somewhere go down on a rock of bigotry or demagoguery. Salaries are notoriously inadequate in Government service. But it will be surprising if Congress proves it has courage enough to do the right thing and increase them.

It would be better if salaries of Congressmen and Senators had not been brought in for consideration at the same session with other salaries. Congress could have granted, for instance, increases of pay in the Army and Navy without fear. Then, later on, Congressmen and Senators could have been given their due. As it is, additions to other salaries will look like a sop to distract attention from the 50 per cent addition to Congressional salaries.

There is no objection to the $7,500 salary for Congressmen and Senators. They ought to have it. But they ought to have the courage to vote it to themselves because it is right. They ought not to sneak it in under the shelter of a general salary-increasing movement. Things have changed since the time when, a generation ago, Congress increased its own salaries, and there was a chorus of protest which culminated in the retirement to private life on that one issue of most of the Members of the lower House and a number of Senators.

The country is now rich instead of poor; it has grown away from the notion that personal debts are an essential preliminary to high thinking.

[The Washington Post, Wednesday, December 12, 1906.]

LET SALARIES BE RAISED.

The House of Representatives has an excellent opportunity at this time to prove its courage and candor. It believes that the salaries of Representatives and Senators should be increased to $7,500, to keep pace with the increased cost of living. But there may be some members who are afraid to act, and there may be others who, in the hope of currying favor at home as economists, will make a point of order against the increase.

If the amendment is ruled out on a point of order, the House should have the courage to pass a bill making the increase of salary. Its course would be commended by the people. There is no question of the inadequacy of Congressional pay. There may be question, however, of the frankness and courage of Representatives if they falter and dodge on this subject. The whole world despises a man who is afraid to stand up for his own rights.

While the House is raising the pay of its own Members, it should, of course, take cognizance of the underpaid Government clerks whose only hope of relief is from Congress. The Congressmen can help themselves, and if they increase their pay 50 per cent there will be no complaint. But if they ignore other Government employees while helping themselves, their action may be adversely criticised.

The time has come when salaries should be increased. Can not Congress attack this subject with breadth of view and candor and courage?

[The Washington Post, Sunday, December 9, 1906.]

INCREASE OF SALARIES.

The House of Representatives feels the sting of prosperity. Like all other salaried people, the Members of the House discover that it is difficult to make both ends meet with the price of living steadily increasing. It is accordingly proposed that an amendment shall be offered to the legislative appropriation bill increasing the salaries of Representatives to $7,500 a year. This is a reasonable readjustment, which will meet with the approval of the country. If the House agrees to the amendment, it is presumed that the Senate will insert a similar amendment, increasing the salary of Senators to the same figure.

While Congress is considering the salary question what a splendid opportunity is offered to do justice to clerks of the Government. The employees in the Executive Departments are in the same position as the poor Congressmen. They, too, are stretched on the rack of low salaries and high prices. Their salaries have not been adjusted for many years, during which time the cost of living has enormously increased. They were recently required to do extra work every day at the same old pay, but beyond this trifling attention no notice has been bestowed upon them by Congress. Working for a pittance, as most of them are, a little relief would be far more important to them than to Congressmen. The people of the country are not unjust taskmasters. If they could express themselves upon this subject, it is certain that they would direct Congress to readjust the pay of Government employees to conform to conditions created by prosperity.

The Members of Congress propose to increase their pay 50 per cent. It is not too much. But can they do it with a clear conscience if at the same time they refuse to increase the pay of Government clerks, who are infinitely worse off and to whom an increase of even 10 per cent would be a Godsend? There is no necessity for labored investigations upon which to base such action. The clerks are in classes, and a brief paragraph would be sufficient to cover the matter. The salaries of clerks, in other words, can be increased as easily as the salaries of Congressmen.

Now is the time, gentlemen of Congress, to recognize the fact that prosperity brings its obligations.

[Philadelphia Inquirer, December 8, 1906.]

MORE PAY FOR CONGRESSMEN.

This is the time for Members of Congress to vote themselves a respectable compensation for their services. Already several bills have been introduced looking to the payment of $7,500 a year, while the salaries of the Speaker and the Vice-President are proportionately advanced. There is no sense in evading the necessities of the case any longer, and it is evidently much better for Congress to take action now rather than after the already elected body meets for the Sixtieth Congress.

The bill ought to be entitled "A bill to permit a poor man to run for Congress." The present sum of $5,000 a year would be reasonable enough if it meant that the Member had that amount to devote to his personal expenses. The fact is that most of the Members are called upon to pay large election expenses. They can not escape them, and probably in all contested districts one year's compensation actually goes for those expenses which the law recognizes as proper. This is only a part of the cost of representing a district.

In Washington the cost of living is high enough—so high that Senator Hoar, one of the best men who ever sat at Washington, lived for almost forty years in a boarding house. He was fortunate in representing a constituency which did not require a great deal of patting on the head. But there are few Members to-day who do not have to go down in their pockets almost daily to pay the fares of constituents or to help out those who are in trouble and are stranded in Washington.

In 1874 Congress raised the salary to $7,500, but committed the mistake of making it retroactive. The present Congress can give the coming Members of the next Congress the added compensation with the assurance that the people will gladly submit. They want to have a law that will not make it essential to select men of accumulated fortune. We desire good men and we wish them to be as independent as possible.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Speaker, I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. SULLIVAN].

Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois addressed an argument to the House which appeals with great force to many of its Members. I believe that some Members will vote in the belief that his argument is decisive; and yet I venture to assert that it is based upon a wrong premise.

One has only to look at the statute which created the salary of Members in the beginning to realize that it was fixed upon the idea of the value of service and not as an honorarium; that it was fixed to enable Members to live decently in Washington and enjoy the ordinary comforts of life. Otherwise such a salary as $5,000 a year would not have been fixed in 1866, when $5,000 was more than $10,000 is to-day.

Therefore it seems to me that the idea of service being rendered for an honorarium must be dismissed from the case, and we must act on the idea of service being rewarded with adequate compensation.

Now, if we proceed upon the theory propounded by the gentleman from Illinois, to be logical we should abolish all salaries, for then the patriotism and honor of the service would not be diminished by a single dollar. Then we would serve, as members of the British Parliament do, without any compensation whatever. And yet, what do we find as the result of that system across the water? You might take the case of the Irish members of Parliament. There are about 100 Nationalists in that house, and they receive no salary; but men of their blood upon this side of the Atlantic are constantly called upon to contribute money to enable these Nationalist members to live. They are the very flower of the Irish race; they give up professions and other splendid careers to serve their country in a Parliament where questions of patriotism are more frequently raised than in the American Congress. These men sacrifice splendid careers for patriotism pure and simple. They are interested in one question only, and that is home rule for the land of their birth. And yet men of their own country and men of their blood in other lands realize that this is a material, bread and butter world after all, and that if you wish to possess a soul you must link it with a body, the body must be fed, the body must be clothed, and the body must be housed. So it becomes a practical question, the very identical question which was presented to the men of 1866 when $5,000 was fixed as a salary proper to be paid to the Members of Congress.

The same question arises to-day. What is adequate compensation for the Members of Congress? Will anyone contend that $5,000 to-day is sufficient to pay the expenses of living and all the other expenses which a man must incur as soon as he accepts this office? No reasonable man who has lived in this city will make that assertion to-day. What, then, is the duty of the House? To raise the salary to such a level as will afford a decent living to its Members and attract the best and the ablest men to its service. There are two classes of men who will vote on this proposition. One class will vote upon the line of reasoning laid down by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BOUTELL], namely, that this service is so honorable that it ought not to be diminished by an increase of salary. But there is another class of men, I venture to say, who, from the instinct of self-preservation, will vote against this increase. Mediocrity, Mr. Speaker, has always found its greatest defense in small compensation. So long as salaries are low mediocrity is safe, and a certain number of gentlemen in this House, in order to preserve their places, will not vote to raise salaries, because they know that an increase of salary will invite to competition with themselves men better qualified to serve in the Congress of the United States. [Laughter and applause.] There are lawyers whose only means of living is found in the fact that bar associations have not framed rules and statutes have not been enacted which fix uniform rates for the trial of cases in court. Suppose a statute were to pass giving to attorneys $500 for the trial of each case. There are gentlemen who would never try another case in the course of their lives. The cases would then be tried by the ablest members at the bar. The protection of these poor members is found in the small compensation for which they are ready to serve. I believe that will be a potent argument when addressed to some Members of this House; and right in that connection let me say that everyone knows now that the greatest advantage which a district can have is found not always in the natural ability of its Member, but in the experience which that Member acquires. Even after the space of two terms one finds that he can accomplish with great facility what he would find it extremely difficult, if not impossible, to accomplish in his first term.

He acquires the means of knowing the various channels and avenues of legislation. He knows whether it is going to be legislative economy or legislative waste for him to attempt a certain line of work, and his district gets the value of that experience. But by the time the Member has acquired that experience his family has increased in number, his expenses have increased in proportion, and then he meets a practical problem—"Can I afford to stay here any longer?" Every instinct demands that he should stay. There are Members of this House who are going out now because they can not afford to stay any longer. If they could afford to stay and provide bread and clothing and decent housing for their families, they would stay here and become useful Members—useful alike to their country and to their districts. But the great value of the experience which they would acquire is entirely lost by reason of the inadequacy of the compensation, which results in forcing them out. Now, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BOUTELL] has said that we can not afford to inaugurate a scheme based upon the capacity of Members. Of course not. Capacity is different according to the Members. There are no two men in the whole world absolutely equal in point of capacity. There are Members of this House who, if paid the actual value of their services, would receive not five, but twenty-five thousand dollars a year. There are other Members of this House who, if paid by the same standard of measurement, would not receive, in my judgment, more than $1,000 a year. [Laughter and applause.] But we can not frame a law based upon the capacity of individual Members. We must make the law hard and inelastic, and therefore the only thing to do is to raise the salary to that reasonable level which will allow all men at least an opportunity to exist, and thus give to some of our ablest, though needy, Members a means of keeping the wolf from the door. Then their natural ambition and patriotism will compel them to stay here and sacrifice the larger pecuniary rewards which unquestionably they could reap in private service.

Now, take the condition of city districts, and I urge that particularly upon the attention of the House. I say, Mr. Speaker, that unless salaries are raised you will have in a few years but two classes of men coming from the great cities of this great country to represent their people in the Congress of the United States. One will be the rich and leisure class. The other will be the professional politician who has worked his devious way up from ward heeler to councilman, from councilman to alderman, from alderman to local representative, and thence to Congressman of the United States. Yet you will find that such a man very frequently has no visible means of support, and is a creature who lives by his wits and by his wits alone. Nevertheless if the compensation is not increased the great cities of this country will be represented by those two classes, and those two classes exclusively. Is that an inviting prospect for the Members of this House? Will you have your great cities represented by the idle rich who came here—most of them for mere pastime, some of them I grant to give the country the benefit of their splendid talents and their leisure—but some of whom also come here in order to be relieved of the ennui which inflicts itself upon them every day of their lives. Will you be pleased with the prospect of having your great cities represented by the idle rich and by the cheap professional politician? The middleman by this standard of compensation will be excluded because he must provide decently for himself and for his family. His first duty, I insist, is to his family. Unless this compensation can be raised that middle class must be excluded from the privilege of occupying a place in the Congress of the United States.

I address these remarks to the House in the hope that the Members will be governed by practical considerations—by the same considerations which would influence the proprietor of a factory or the manager of a railroad who sought to provide decent service for the public. If these considerations are given effect, I am confident that the proposition of the gentleman from New York will be passed here by an overwhelming vote. [Loud applause.]

Mr. LITTAUER. How much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. Twenty minutes.

Mr. LITTAUER. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. LAMAR].

Mr. LAMAR. Mr. Speaker, I shall vote against the proposed increase of the salaries of Members of this House either for the Sixtieth Congress or for the Sixty-first Congress. If it were to go into effect for the Sixtieth Congress it would be Members of this House practically voting upon raising their own salaries, for many Members of this House are Members of the Sixtieth Congress. I shall debate it squarely upon the proposition of raising the salary at all. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to any man upon the floor of this House entertaining a very large or a very small estimate of his own abilities. I neither belong to the rich class, nor do I know anything of the conditions of ward politics so accurately set out by the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. SULLIVAN]. I come from an agricultural district, where, although I am a lawyer by profession and have been honored with the high office in my State of attorney-general, I could not make exceeding $5,000 in the little town in which I live by my profession. This House is constituted practically of three classes of membership—one very rich, who do not need any raise of salaries at all; another class, who represent railway and other corporations in addition to being Members of this House, and do not need any raise of salary at all; and the other class are those who can not make more than $5,000 a year in the communities in which they live. The people in my district, I do not believe, would tolerate my voting for any increase of the salaries of Members of Congress. To-day the lumber men, the vegetable men, tobacco men, fruit men, and farmers generally in the district I represent are pressed and injured by extortionate railway rates and charges. And this House of Representatives, neither Democrats nor Republicans, has not passed an adequate law to protect the interests of the people who sent me here, and I will not cast a vote to raise either my own salary or the salary of Members of this House collectively when this House has declined to pass a fair, just, and adequate statute that will protect the interests of which I speak.

Mr. Speaker, some of the railways in my district are capitalized at two, three, and four times their value. Every article shipped out of my county, every article shipped out of my district, every article shipped into my county, every article shipped into my district, is unjustly taxed by the gross, fraudulent device of overcapitalization of the railroads. Whether $7,500 per annum be an adequate compensation for Members or not, I place one serious objection to it upon the ground that this House, without regard to party, did not, when it had an opportunity to do so, pass a fair, just, and adequate law that will protect the people whom I have the honor here to represent. Whether $5,000 per annum be adequate or not, let me state what a distinguished Member of this House said to me once. Several Members were standing around and talking about the sacrifices men had to make to come to Congress and speaking of the inadequacy of the pay of Congressmen.

"Well," said this gentleman, "LAMAR, do you believe these Pickwickian stories?" I said, "Well, I do not know. I am inclined to doubt some of them." Said he, "I do not believe a word. I do not know how it is with other men, but this is the softest snap I have ever struck in my life."

Mr. Speaker, I would not minimize this question by either reflecting upon the motives of the man who wanted to vote for it or upon the motives of the man who wanted to vote against it. I place my vote squarely upon the ground that the Third Congressional district in my State will not tolerate a vote raising my salary, or the salaries of other Members, when to this time I have not succeeded in getting legislation out of this House that will protect them against extortionate, overcapitalized, fraudulent railroad rates. [Applause.]

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Speaker, the amendment now pending is the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] to the amendment I offered. With the consent of the gentleman from Pennsylvania I would withdraw the amendment and offer this substitute with a perfection of language to carry out the intention.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I wish to offer a substitute for his substitute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York proposes to modify his amendment, as the Chair understands it.

Mr. HULL. Let it be reported, so we will understand it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] desires to withdraw his amendment.

Mr. BUTLER. I do, because I have seen the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. LITTAUER].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] having withdrawn his amendment, the gentleman from New York withdraws his amendment and offers the following, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Is the amendment, the one which has now been offered, open to amendment?

The SPEAKER. It will be after it is read. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert a new section, to stand as section 8, and to read as follows: "On and after March 4, 1909, the compensation of Senators, Representatives in Congress, Delegates from Territories, and Resident Commissioner from Porto Rico shall be at the rate of $7,500 per annum, and in lieu of mileage now authorized by law, they shall each be allowed and paid actual individual traveling expenses from their homes to the seat of government and return, by the most direct route of usual travel, once for each session of the House to which such Senator, Representative, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner belongs, to be certified to under his hand to the disbursing officer and filed as a voucher."

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to the amendment, to strike out the figure "9" and put "7" in it, so as to read "1907" instead of "1909."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out "1909" and insert "1907;" so that it will read: "On and after March 4, 1907, the compensation of Senators, Representatives in Congress, and Delegates from Territories, and Resident Commissioner from Porto Rico, shall be at the rate of $7,500 per annum, and in lieu of mileage now authorized by law they shall each be allowed and paid actual individual traveling expenses from their homes to the seat of government and return, by the most direct route of usual travel, once for each session of the House to which such Senator, Representative, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner belongs, to be certified to under his hand to the disbursing officer, and filed as a voucher."

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I want five minutes.

Mr. LITTAUER. I yield to the gentleman two minutes. There is a general desire to get to a vote.

Mr. SIMS. Only two minutes on such a good amendment as this?

Mr. LITTAUER. Five minutes, then.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I have offered this amendment for this reason: There is no justification for increase of salary to commence two years ahead that does not now exist, and if the conditions now existing are such as to justify increasing salaries to commence more than two years from now, they certainly do justify an increase to commence with the beginning of the next Congress. [Applause.] And the people will not be fooled. When a man who votes for this increase to be made in 1909 runs for the Sixty-first Congress he will be met with some man who will be in favor of repealing it, and if he says that he is in favor of repeal—I mean the man who votes for it now—he will be in a hole anyway. [Laughter.] And if he is in favor of repealing it he does it alone upon the ground that conditions then existing justify it. If the expense of living has so increased, as has been stated here, to justify an increase of salary, it certainly ought to be made logically, and that is, to relieve the conditions that demand this legislation.

Why, some of my Republican friends say that in 1909 the Democrats may be in power, that there will be a panic, and that prices will have gone down; then, of course, we would no longer need the increase, as the cost of living would be a great deal less. In reply to that I will say that in 1909, when we have all the trusts busted, the prices will have gone down, and then we will not need it. Why not say what we want instead of expecting the Senate to do what we have not the courage to do. If I were a Senator, and this amendment goes through this way, you should keep it, because it is an expression of this House, and it is either just and proper now to adopt this amendment or not. You can not know what the conditions will be in 1909.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SIMS. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. As I understand, the gentleman justifies his proposition on the statement that if it is needed at all it is needed now.

Mr. SIMS. In the next Congress.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think it ought to apply from now, the present Congress?

Mr. SIMS. No; to the Sixtieth Congress. My amendment only applies to that.

Mr. MANN. The Sixtieth Congress will not take its seat for a year.

Mr. SIMS. But the 4th of March will take its seat before that. [Great laughter.]

Mr. BURLESON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SIMS. Certainly.

Mr. BURLESON. We were elected to the Sixtieth Congress at a salary of $5,000 a year. The salary was fixed at that amount. Now, does the gentleman think it right to vote to increase the salary when we have already been elected?

Mr. SIMS. Does the gentleman think it is right to stickle over increasing his salary for next Congress when he expects to make the Senator vote for $7,500 a year for an unexpired portion of his term? If the proposition of the gentleman is right, Senators can not vote for the proposition to increase for 1909, as he has been elected. What will your Senator have to do whose time does not expire until after 1909? If you want to make it so it will not apply to one who is in office, you will have to make it apply six years from now. Yet a few minutes ago we voted to make the Speaker's increased salary begin on the 4th day of March, 1907. He certainly is a Member of this House, and that vote was right.

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman understands that the Speaker has not been elected.

Mr. SIMS. That is the hugest joke I ever heard. [Great laughter.] Where is the Republican on that side of the House who is going to vote for anybody but JOSEPH G. CANNON for Speaker? [Laughter and applause.] That is one of the meritorious reasons for the increase [renewed applause.], because you know who you are going to get, and the country knows it. [Renewed applause.] Now, I have no doubt that there are men in this House of large fortune or men who can go out and get $100 or $150 a day lecturing. Maybe they do not need it, but they ought not to crowd out from this House those who can not live here without an increase. They ought to think of those who need this increase.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield to me for a minute?

Mr. SIMS. Certainly.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Yesterday Senator TILLMAN said to me: "If I remained in Congress and had to live on my salary and could not lecture, I would starve. I could not take care of my family."

Mr. SIMS. Who would do anything to cause Senator TILLMAN to starve? [Great laughter.] If this increase does not apply to the Sixtieth Congress, I shall vote against it, as I can not possibly know what conditions will prevail in 1909.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from New York may be extended twenty minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LITTAUER. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. GARDNER].

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I hope the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee will not prevail. It seems to me there is a marked difference between voting for the amendment as proposed by him and voting for the amendment as offered by the gentleman from New York. Every Member here who was elected to the Sixtieth Congress is under an implied contract with his constituents at home to serve for two years for the stipulated salary now in the law. He made his canvass, he asked for their votes, he received their indorsement on the supposition that they as taxpayers would remunerate him at the stipulated salary then understood by all parties. To vote to increase the salary for a Congress for which we made that canvass and were indorsed on that proposition does not seem entirely fair to the people we represent. After the next Congress expires, the man who votes for the amendment of the gentleman from New York or votes against it, as he sees fit, goes back to the people who sent him here for their indorsement. But to vote for that increase now would be to take advantage of our position here to increase the salary for a term to which most of us were elected, but have not yet entered upon.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman allow me to make an inquiry?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Certainly.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I fully appreciate the point the gentleman makes, but suppose, now, that we send this proposition to the Senate. Two-thirds of that body are always members, one-third going out every two years, so that the two-thirds that remain will be obliged to vote on the question of raising or fixing their own salaries, regardless of the date which we fix for the taking effect of this amendment, unless you put it a number of years ahead. Then among the members of the Senate now a large number will be reelected to the Senate, just as you and I are reelected to the House.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I will answer the gentleman by saying that we are only responsible for our own acts.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Oh, I appreciate that.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. And not for those of the Senate. Conditions are different there from what they are here. If there were like conditions existing here, the objections I now make might not lie, because they could not be made with corresponding force.

Mr. LITTAUER. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa five minutes.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, this amendment as offered by the gentleman from New York does not take effect until the terms of all the present Members of this Congress will expire, so that each Member is in a position to vote upon this proposition upon precisely the same footing, whether he is a Member of the Sixtieth Congress or not. I believe that the compensation for this office should largely be the honor that is in it. The salary ought to be sufficient to pay living expenses, but no man should be put in the position of seeking a seat in Congress merely for the salary, and any attempt to make this compensation desirable merely because of its amount will depreciate the character of the membership of this House. When the Members of this House were paid $1,500 a year, and also when they were paid $8 a day for the time actually spent by them in this body, the House certainly had a membership as high in character and ability as it has ever had since. By increasing the compensation, as stated by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. SULLIVAN], you make it attractive to the very class of men that he says ought to be excluded from Congress. The ward heeler, the professional politician, who he says now often gets into Congress, would in fact seek a seat here for the money that is in it. At present the compensation is adequate to support any Member in a decent way, not in affluence, not in luxury, but in a fairly decent manner. He has to spend about six months each year in this city. The other six months he spends in his private affairs or spends partly in his campaign, as the case may be. But a Member of this body, as a rule, keeps in touch with affairs at home. He must do so, because the salary is not sufficient to justify him in abandoning wholly his home affairs.

Now, to provide a salary such as will induce men to seek the office for the salary that is in it, and to wholly abandon their own business at home, giving themselves up entirely to a Congressional career for the compensation involved, will depreciate the character of its membership. Look at the men we have had in this body in the past—men who have come here at the sacrifice of money, but who feel that they have been compensated by the honor of the position to which their people elected them. I for one believe that we had better keep the salary where it is. The French deputies get $3,000 a year. The members of the English Parliament receive no compensation whatever. The Members of this body receive barely a sufficient amount to support them while serving in the duties of the office. To keep it at that would retain the membership of this body at its present standard, which I believe to be a high standard. [Applause.]

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA].

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. Speaker, I agree with the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY]. For one I am opposed to the increase of salary for the Members of this or the other House. I am, however, amused to see how popular this question is. I am glad to see that for once members of the two great political parties of the nation can get together. It must be a very meritorious measure in order to appeal to so many of the Members with all the patriotism which they have. It is evident that it will pass, but I want to say to you that for one I shall vote against it. As a farmer, coming from the West, I know that we can live much cheaper than the people who come from the great cities of the East.

But remember, during our term of two years we are here only about ten months and receive a salary of $10,000. I believe that the salary is sufficient and adequate, and I shall vote against any increase of this kind.

Mr. WEBBER. Mr. Speaker, this is a question of living, purely a question of expense in household economy. That being true, let us not forget there are thousands of Government employees in this city who are compelled to live here three hundred and sixty-five days in a year who get hungry, and whose clothes wear out just as rapidly, and who have as large families as have we, that are getting but $1,000 or $1,200 a year. I for one can not give my vote, and shall not for any of these measures, so long as we ask such employees to continue on these salaries—and those who defended the flag to live upon $12 and $14 per month in their distress. I am ready and willing to vote for appropriations to do what is right by the old soldier and by his widow, but I will not give my vote nor my voice to increase the salary of any officials of the Government, from President down, so long as they receive the present compensation paid them by existing law.

We should not forget that we alone have the power to fix all these salaries, but we should not take advantage of the power thus lodged in us by the Constitution. Any Congressman who is willing to live in keeping with this spirit of the American people can live easily on $5,000 when he is only compelled to stay in this city for six months.

Here are less than 400 of us who are affected in this body by this proposed legislation, while there are thousands working for the Government for ten and twelve hundred dollars per year. There are tens of thousands of defenders of the flag who only get $12 or $14 per month out of the same Treasury from which we are seeking to add to our $5,000 a year. I shall cast my vote against the proposed amendment.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Speaker, I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR].

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, a few days ago I suggested to the House of Representatives that it would be wise to turn over the legislation of the balance of this Congress to the men who are going out of Congress, so that the standpoint from which legislation might come should be patriotic, intelligent, and disinterested.

Now, you have come right up against the proposition, and here we are. Here is a question involving a large sum of money and a great deal of principle submitted to a House of Representatives in which three-quarters of them are directly interested in the result of this vote.

Why are we proposing to increase the salary of any Member of Congress at any time? What are we doing it for; upon what ground or justification is it proposed to increase the salary from $5,000 to $7,500 at any time? I will answer my own question. It seems to me it is put on the ground that in the present condition of things in this country a salary of $5,000 a year is wholly inadequate and that it ought to be raised. Why? What is the justification and explanation? Why, in the first place, the salary fixed a great many years ago is not worth as much, judged by the standard of the necessary expenditure of a Congressman, by 50 per cent as it was at the time it was enacted. Everything has advanced excepting the salaries of Congressmen and others who are dependent upon their salaries.

Take the railroads of the country. They have increased, during the last four or five years, the pay of their employees on an average about 40 per cent. It amounts to an enormous sum of money, and every class of labor and employment has been increased. But our Democratic friends tell us that the cost of living has increased in the same ratio. That is not, perhaps, quite true, but certainly the cost of living has increased very largely, and so all the wages are being increased somewhat in proportion to the increase in the cost of living. But the salaried man finds himself getting the worst of it. The man with a salary, the man with a fixed income, is the man who is injured by the advance in the cost of living and is not benefited in any way, except in the most indirect way, by the improvement in the condition of affairs.

Now, then, I take it that I am right about the proposition that the increase of salary to the Members of Congress is justified by the condition of the country. When is that condition to operate? Is there any possible logic or force in the proposition that because we find the present allowance to a Congressman considerably below what it ought to be, we will raise the salary of the Members of the Sixty-first Congress, but compel the Members of the Sixtieth Congress to serve at a price which is inadequate?

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. GARDNER], if I understood the logic of his argument, holds this: If the people of the country had had an opportunity at the last election they would have elected $7,500 men. [Laughter.] But inasmuch as they did not have that opportunity and did elect $5,000 men, therefore it would be unjust to raise the salary of $5,000 men up to what they really ought to be paid.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I do not think the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] puts that quite squarely. I meant to be understood if we voted this amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] we would vote $2,500 into our pockets that the people did not understand we were to have when we were elected, but if at the close of the next Congress they wanted to indorse the proposition they could elect $7,500 men, and if we were fortunate enough to be selected we would accept the election.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Let us see where the logic of the gentleman leads to. The people that elected my friend to Congress elected him to Congress charged with a knowledge of the Constitution. I will admit that it was a rather violent presumption [laughter], but they are charged with it in law and in logic. The Constitution permits the House of Representatives, cooperating with the Senate and the President, to fix the allowance of the Congressmen. Therefore the people of the gentleman's district are just as much bound by the action of Congress in raising his salary as they are to the proposition of adhering to the salary he now gets when they voted for him as a Member of Congress.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LITTAUER. I yield five minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. GROSVENOR. So now we put it upon the ground that in view of all the circumstances the pay of a Congressman is inadequate. When? Now. It will be inadequate during the next two years if now, but who can say—and how utterly illogical it is to say—that during the next two years or three years or four years the same condition will apply that applies to-day? So, then, it is an assault upon the intelligence of the people of the Congressional district represented by my friend from Michigan [Mr. GARDNER] that they are willing to hold their Representative to an unconscionable bargain. He may have made that contract in effect, but here are fifty or sixty or seventy-five new Members coming into this House who have never had any opportunity to vote on the question of their salaries; and the logic of the gentleman is that the people of his district are willing to hold, notwithstanding the provisions of the Constitution, the Members of the House of Representatives to a hard bargain simply because they have agreed, under this forced construction of events, to serve for $5,000 a year.

Mr. Speaker, I have no interest in this. I have no interest in the salary of a Member of the Congress for the Sixtieth Congress, or for the Sixty-first Congress, nor for any other Congress, and I shall not find myself in the attitude of a pauper or a mendicant when I go out of Congress.

But, looking over the field, I take a widely different view from that held by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BOUTELL]. I believe that a Member of Congress ought to be paid, and he ought to be paid a compensation adequate to secure just such services as the people in Congress are willing to give. They are competent men. I do not care whether they can earn more at home or whether they can not. Some can and some can not. The people of a district have a right to select the man they want. Sometimes they make mistakes [laughter], but not very often, just occasionally. In any event, I believe that the mass of the people of this country are fully willing that Congressmen should be adequately paid. The terrorizing effect of the salary grab is constantly held up to the faces of Congressmen. There never was any criticism of the increase of the salary of a Congressman. It was the retroactive effect of the statute upon the salary that had already been earned and paid, and the people of the country said that was unfair and an unjust proposition, and they punished the men, or some of the men, who did it. But no man ever heard of the people of any district, so far as I ever knew anything about it, punishing any man because he voted simply and solely for the increase of salary. If I were to be a Member of the Sixtieth Congress I would vote for this increase. If I were to be a Member of the Sixty-first Congress I would do it, and I would do it exactly upon the ground that old John A. Bingham said he did it when he voted both for the increase in the salary and the salary grab. He said he voted for it because he wanted the money, and he believed he had honestly earned it.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, in order to stop discussion of this subject, if the House will permit I will withdraw the amendment which I submitted; and I ask unanimous consent to have that done.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. TAWNEY). The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment striking out "1909" and inserting "1907." Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GILLESPIE].

Mr. GILLESPIE. Mr. Speaker, I have gladly voted for the increase in the salaries of the Speaker of this House and of the Vice-President and of the members of the President's Cabinet. I believe those increases are right and justifiable. There are Members of this House, chairmen of the great committees, whose salaries I would gladly vote to increase if I had the opportunity; but I do not believe that we are justified in raising the salaries of all of the Members of this House, as is proposed by this amendment. It is unfair to take the present high level of prices and consequent heavy expenses of living as a standard from which to gauge our salaries. We have been in an era of rising prices for the last ten years, until now we have reached apparently the very highest point, and all conservative thinkers believe we will soon begin an era of falling prices. Present conditions are extraordinary and should not control us at this high point of American industrial life, with high prices, with high salaries.

If we take the average of conditions for the last thirty-five years, we will find it far below the present high level. We should remember that for more than twenty years prior to 1896 we were in an era of falling prices. We should also remember that when these salaries are once raised it will be practically impossible to lower them however prices may fall. We are only here about six months in the year, on the average. Our usual business is going on at home, as a rule. It has been argued here that present salaries are so low that only the rich and worthless politician will come to Congress.

Mr. Speaker, a high salary will certainly not keep out the rich, but, on the contrary, it will the more attract them; and surely we can not keep out the worthless politician by making it more profitable for him to come here. A high salary is a premium upon cunning rather than upon virtue. Let us say to the world, and proclaim it for all time, that this is a place for men of honor and not those of itching palms, for men who put above all price the distinction of serving in the greatest Congress of the greatest democracy on earth.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee rose. [Great applause.]

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I only desire to briefly reply to some statements which have been made to-day. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GILLESPIE], whom I so much admire, a man of much good, solid judgment, has stated we are at the high mark of salaries? Whose salary? Members of Congress? The salaries of Members of this Congress were fixed in 1874. Since then the burdens of Members have increased tenfold, taking all of my time to meet them, and are constantly increasing, while the cost of living here has increased in about the same proportions since 1866 or 1874.

The salary fixed in 1874 was the same as in 1866, over forty years ago, when it was fixed at $5,000, the amount we now receive. If that sum was just and proper in 1866 or 1874, it is not so to-day, and you all know it and admit it in private conversation. Why does the membership of Congress change so often? It is simply because the Members have been unable at any time, for any long period, to remain in Washington and meet the responsibilities of fathers and husbands and the inevitable expenses which fall on public men.

It is now suggested that we make this salary apply to the Sixty-first Congress, to be elected two years hence. I will vote for that. I have insisted on the Sixty-first Congress, because it must yet be elected, but I will vote for the Sixtieth Congress rather than these salaries shall not be raised at all.

The First Congress fixed its Members' salary, and President Washington approved it; the Fourth Congress did it, and President Washington approved it; the Fourteenth Congress did it, and President Madison, "the father of the Constitution," approved it—the same Madison who helped to frame the Constitution that my friend from Texas so gallantly protects and defends, and, thank God, he does it well.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Give me a minute or two more.

Mr. LITTAUER. How much time does the gentleman require?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I will take two minutes. [Cries of "Give him five minutes!"]

Mr. LITTAUER. I yield the gentleman from Tennessee five minutes additional.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The Fifteenth Congress did it, and President Monroe approved it; the Thirty-fourth Congress did it, and President Pierce approved it; the Thirty-fifth Congress did it, and President Buchanan approved it; the Thirty-ninth Congress did it, and President Johnson approved it, at $5,000 per year, forty years ago.

Repeatedly have I insisted that these salaries were not commensurate with the exigencies of Congressional life, however modest or unpretentious the Members may live, whether they are statesmen from Texas or Alabama or whether a plain, plodding, working Member of Congress from the great district of Nashville, Tenn. [Applause.] I know that my services are worth more. [Applause.] Day in and day out have I toiled at my official work that never ends, wholly unable to do any work for myself, though often tendered me and of a kind that would pay me well, but the public gets all my time, and should as long as I hold a membership of this body.

I am willing to go before my great constituency and let the people pass upon this question when they elect the Members of this House to the Sixty-first Congress two years hence.

I stated here and elsewhere before I was elected last November that I intended to do what I now am honorably trying to do. Some say we are voting money into our pockets. I deny this; but what did George Washington, the father of our country, say before he approved two acts of Congress fixing his salary at $25,000? In his inaugural address he practically said he did not want any compensation as President. Go and read the RECORD of to-day and you will see his words on the subject. Am I any better than the father of my country?

There has not been a single Congress that I can recall that ever refixed a Congressional salary that did not fix it for the Members of the Congress then acting. Before 1791 they tried to make an amendment to the Constitution to prevent the "varying of compensation of Senators and Representatives until an intervening election of Representatives," but it was voted down.

When was it voted down? In the days of Washington, Madison, Jefferson, and Monroe, statesmen equally as great as the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], who voted to raise judicial salaries because, as he said, he wanted to get good men and give them something to pay for the clothes they wore and the house they rented, although theirs is a place full of honor and glory. [Applause.] I can well work for two years more for the same salary that I am working for now. It is not riches I seek, but justice to the public and the Members. It is not for my pocket, however lean it is; it is for the welfare of my country that I stand and speak for first [applause]; and when I can not cast my vote in this House for my country's welfare, as I see it, I will quit it and go back home to my people, who would not have me do otherwise. [Applause.] This back-salary grab of 1873 was an outrage. After Members of Congress had been paid their salary, or about all of it, for two years, they reached back two years and paid their salaries again.

They were turned, and properly so, out of Congress at the next election. But this proposition is for the future—a future Congress to be elected two years hence. It is the future and not the past for which I speak and shall vote. My successor in the Sixty-first Congress will get the benefit of any increased salary by this law, regardless of who he is. It is for the magnificent constituency of Tennessee which I represent in part, and for the people of all this country, who think and read and know that Senators and Representatives are entitled to better salaries. Believing that I am right, I shall vote for this measure, and if not right it can be easily repealed, but I feel the people of Andrew Jackson's district, the people of John Bell's district, the people of James K. Polk's district will approve my action, and if not I shall bow to the majesty of their will. [Applause.]

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Speaker, I now demand the previous question.

The question was taken; and the previous question was ordered.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk may read the resolution again.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk again reported the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. LITTAUER) there were—ayes 135, noes 161.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 106, nays 190, answered "present" 7, not voting 79, as follows:

Mr. LITTAUER. The SPEAKER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. LITTAUER. I would also ask unanimous consent that gentlemen who have spoken be permitted to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks upon the bill pending, and also in connection with them to insert an interview that I had three years ago touching the same subject.

Mr. MANN. I would like to have the gentleman make the request for anybody to extend remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. LITTAUER. I would extend the request that Members may be permitted to extend remarks in the RECORD on this question for three legislative days.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Now, Mr. Speaker, I renew my request.

Mr. MANN. What was the request?

The SPEAKER. The request is that in extending his remarks upon the bill pending he may insert with his remarks an interview that he had three years ago touching the same subject.

Mr. MANN. That comes under the general leave, and does not require unanimous consent.

There was no objection.

Mr. BINGHAM. I move the previous question on the bill to its passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BINGHAM, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BRIDGE AT FORT SNELLING, MINN.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 196) relating to the construction of a bridge at Fort Snelling, Minn.

Resolved, etc., That all sums of money contributed and paid, or which may hereafter be contributed and paid, to the United States by the city of St. Paul, Minn., or by any electric street railway company, under the provision of an act of Congress approved March 17, 1906, entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a bridge between Fort Snelling Reservation and St. Paul, Minn.," shall be subject to the order of the Secretary of War, and shall be expended in such manner as he may direct on account of any expenses incurred, or which may be hereafter incurred, by the United States, in or about the construction of the bridge, as provided by said act; and that the time for commencing actual construction thereof is hereby extended one year from the date of the passage of this joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to hear a little explanation of this before action is had; and I reserve the right to object.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, this is a joint resolution to supplement the act of March 17, 1906. In that act the Secretary of War was directed to construct a bridge between Fort Snelling Military Reservation and the city of St. Paul, Minn., one-half of the expense to be paid by the Government and one-half by the city of St. Paul by the street-railway company using the bridge. The Secretary of War reports to the Comptroller that the city of St. Paul and the street-railroad company have paid over the money for such part as they were required to pay. Now, Mr. Speaker, under the original act that money is held in trust and can not be used for the purpose of paying for the construction of the bridge; that it awaits the action of Congress. So this resolution directs as follows:

That this amount shall be subject to the order of the Secretary of War and shall be expended in such manner as he may direct on account of any expenses incurred, or which may be hereafter incurred, by the United States in or about the construction of the bridge.

That is all that it does.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MONONGAHELA RIVER, PENNSYLVANIA.

Mr. WANGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 20988) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize Washington and Westmoreland counties, in the State of Pennsylvania, to construct and maintain a bridge across the Monongahela River, in the State of Pennsylvania," approved February 21, 1903.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 7 of an act entitled "An act to authorize Washington and Westmoreland counties, in the State of Pennsylvania, to construct and maintain a bridge across the Monongahela River, in the State of Pennsylvania," approved February 21, 1903, as amended by the act approved January 11, 1905, and by the act approved February 21, 1906, be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 7. That this act shall be null and void if actual construction of the bridge herein authorized be not commenced within one year and completed within three years from February 21, 1907."

Mr. WILLIAMS. I would like to ask the gentleman if this follows the requirements of the War Department?

Mr. WANGER. The only purpose of this bill is to extend the time within which the bridge may be begun and completed.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It complies with the requirements of the War Department, so that it does not interfere with navigation?

Mr. WANGER. Yes.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. WANGER, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

RESIGNATION OF REPRESENTATIVE JOHN S. LITTLE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication:

Hon. JEFFERSON DAVIS,
Governor of Arkansas, and
Hon. JOSEPH G. CANNON,
Speaker of the House of Representatives:

You and each of you will take notice that I hereby tender my resignation as a Member of the Fifty-ninth Congress from the Fourth district of Arkansas, my resignation to take effect on and after the 14th day of January, 1907.

Very respectfully, JOHN S. LITTLE.

The communication was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF TIME WITHIN WHICH SETTLERS MAY ESTABLISH THEIR RESIDENCE UPON THE CROW INDIAN RESERVATION.

Mr. DIXON of Montana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 21678) to provide for the extension of time within which homestead settlers may establish their residence upon certain lands which were heretofore a part of the Crow Indian Reservation, within the counties of Yellowstone and Rosebud, in the State of Montana.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the homestead settlers on lands which were heretofore a part of the Crow Indian Reservation, within the counties of Yellowstone and Rosebud, in the State of Montana, opened under the act of April 27, 1904, be, and they are hereby, granted an extension of time in which to establish their residence upon the lands so opened and filed upon until the 15th day of May, 1907: Provided, however, That this act shall in no matter affect the regularity or validity of such filings, or any of them, so made by the said settlers on the lands aforesaid; and it is only intended hereby to extend the time for the establishment of such residence as herein provided, and the provisions of said acts are in no other manner to be affected or modified.

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill to provide for the extension of time within which homestead entrymen may establish their residence upon certain lands which were heretofore a part of the Crow Indian Reservation, within the counties of Yellowstone and Rosebud, in the State of Montana.

The Clerk read the following committee amendments:

Amend the title of the bill by striking out the word "settlers" in line 2 of the title and inserting in lieu thereof the word "entrymen."

Amend by striking out the word "settlers" in line 3 of the bill and inserting in lieu thereof the word "entrymen."

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman if this comes from the Indian Committee?

Mr. DIXON of Montana. The Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to know if this applies to anybody not living on the lands?

Mr. DIXON of Montana. Under the terms of the bill opening the land to settlement and sale, the entries were made last August. Under the general act, they are to establish their residence within six months. The land is all land upon which they have got to dig irrigation ditches. Many can not go on this winter on account of the snow on the ground and build, because they had not the time and money; and this bill merely gives them until May 15 in which to build houses, and does not change the original bill at all except in that particular.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Will the gentleman have any objection to making the date June 15?

Mr. DIXON of Montana. I would be perfectly willing to have it June 15, although May 15 the grass comes on and the snow has gone.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I have had communications from different parts of the country relative to this matter saying that they could not go there and make the necessary improvements because of the late spring and severe weather.

Mr. DIXON of Montana. I would be glad to accept an amendment of June 15.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that the same question will be presented in the Shoshone Reservation in Wyoming. The 15th of May was the date fixed there. That seems to be, in both cases, ample time to allow them all to get in. If one of these bills changed, perhaps the other ought to be changed.

Mr. DIXON of Montana. I think the 15th of May will give them ample time.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. GRIGGS, by unanimous consent, was given leave of absence indefinitely, on account of illness in his family.

Mr. RHODES, by unanimous consent, was given leave of absence indefinitely, on account of illness.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 48 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, December 15, 1906.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SHERMAN, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported a bill (H. R. 22580) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908; which was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order on the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York reserves all points of order.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. LITTAUER, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill (H. R. 22584) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, and for other purposes; which was read a first time by title, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order against that bill.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this urgent deficiency bill, so called, be now considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. As explanation of this request I would state that this bill contains eight items, none of which is a real deficiency, but each item is because of an emergency caused by earthquake, by hurricane, because of laws enacted to take effect for which no appropriation had been made, and in particular the pure-food bill, which becomes operative on the 1st of January next, and for which an appropriation for administration must now be made, so that it may be on hand by the 1st of January, when the law goes into effect.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Will the gentleman from New York explain about this item of $75,000 to complete the work of the Commission on the Five Civilized Tribes?

Mr. LITTAUER. I do not consider that to be what you would call a deficiency. There was a second Curtis Act passed in the last session, which provided that a certain enrollment of children and others should be made before the 4th of March next, and no provision was made for carrying out the requirements.

Mr. TAWNEY. If my colleague will permit me, there was no provision whatever made appropriating money to carry into effect the provisions of the second Curtis Act, which was passed after the Indian appropriation bill passed in the last session.

Mr. LITTAUER. And the appropriation made for the work of the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes, allotted as it was into quarters, has proved insufficient to accomplish the requirements of the second Curtis Act.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. As the attendance in the House is very small to-day, would it not be better to let this go over until Monday morning?

Mr. LITTAUER. It ought to be passed in ten minutes. I do not see how there can be any objection to a single item. If there is, I will drop it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I see here in the report that one of the things for which appropriation is made is the sum of $150,000, under the military establishment, for mileage of officers and contract surgeons. Will the gentleman explain that item to the House?

Mr. LITTAUER. The mileage is paid to officers and contract surgeons according to statute. It is due whether we appropriate for it or not. The simple fact is that because of the movement of the Army to Cuba for the purpose of the pacification of Cuba there has been a large amount of additional mileage of officers and contract surgeons. The amount appropriated last year will not be sufficient to pay the obligations incurred under the statute for this mileage. This travel must go on, and the obligation to pay it will still remain whether we appropriate or not, because it is a statutory allowance.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understood this was connected with the Cuban occupation. Now, has the gentleman anything like a distinct pledge from the Administration that this so-called "Cuban occupation" will be temporary?

Mr. LITTAUER. No pledge, but advice of intention. Certainly, yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. You have the declaration of intention upon their part that it is to be temporary?

Mr. LITTAUER. Unqualifiedly, yes.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, I want to suggest to the gentleman from Mississippi that we contend that this sum of money should be repaid; that the United States should be reimbursed for this expenditure. Now, the question is whether the Secretary of the Treasury can receive it from the Cuban Republic without authority from Congress. If he can, it will be done; if he can not, then we hope that Congress will give him the authority to do it, for this charge should not come against the United States Government.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, there is nothing of that kind in the bill.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit me to suggest, this discussion regarding the different items in the bill is not quite in order at this time. Full opportunity will be given for that if unanimous consent is given to consider the bill in the House as in the Committee of the Whole. There will be no effort to deprive the House of an opportunity for a full discussion on each item.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I have no objection

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. LITTAUER] asks unanimous consent that this bill, the urgent deficiency bill, just before it, be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will read the bill.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be omitted.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with and that the bill be read by paragraphs.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object. I think we ought to have the bill read now. It is short. Then we will understand the statement of it.

Mr. LITTAUER. I withdraw my motion.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read the bill at length.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now read the bill by paragraphs.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

To carry out, during the fiscal year 1907, the provisions of the act of Congress of June 30, 1906, entitled "An act for preventing the manufacture, sale, or transportation of adulterated, or misbranded, or poisonous, or deleterious foods, drugs, medicines, and liquors, and for other purposes," to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of Agriculture for all expenses necessary to carry into effect the provisions of the said act, including rent and the employment of labor in Washington and elsewhere, $250,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of making a statement which is not really pertinent to the appropriation. I hope I may be indulged. When the conference report on the pure-food bill was presented to the House last session I made a statement in explanation of the action of the proprietary medicine association and referred in language which I shall ask leave to insert in the RECORD to the action of the correspondent of the Chicago Daily News, Mr. Le Roy Vernon, in publishing certain information which I stated he had obtained through his presence in my room during the course of a private conversation with Samuel Hopkins Adams. It is proper to say on behalf of Mr. Vernon that he denies that he obtained his information in that way, though not denying his presence in the room, and he claims that his information was received in conversation with Mr. Adams himself afterwards. For that reason I ask leave to insert in the RECORD, as a portion of my remarks, the remarks which I made at the time of the presentation of the conference report on June 29, 1906, a short letter from Mr. Vernon himself, a copy of a letter from Mr. Hornaday, the correspondent for one of the Indianapolis papers, and a copy of a letter from Mr. Samuel Hopkins Adams. I do this in justice to Mr. Vernon. While personally my view of the matter has not materially changed, still it may be that I have been unduly biased, and whatever may be the facts, Mr. Vernon is entitled to have placed in the RECORD, in permanent form, his side of the controversy.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The papers referred to are as follows:

[Congressional Record, June 29.]

Mr. Speaker, it so happens that my committee room is close to the press gallery in the House. It so happens that a number of the newspaper correspondents make frequent use of a typewriting machine in my room. This has been done with my free consent and invitation, and I am glad to extend to them that courtesy. It so happened during the progress of the fight over this drug amendment that one day I was in consultation in my committee room with Samuel Hopkins Adams, of Collier's Weekly, who has done so much good in the fight against these narcotic or habit-forming drugs, and that on that day the staff correspondent of the Chicago Daily News was in my room making use of my typewriting machine. I talked with Mr. Adams for some time in a general way, and then said to him that his interest in the matter was so great that if I might speak to him in absolute confidence I would be glad to do so. I have always considered that when the newspaper correspondents were in the room they might freely overhear anything I said, because unless I gave them permission otherwise I felt confident that what I said would be treated in confidence, and my courtesy has never been abused except on this one occasion. I stated to Mr. Adams what my programme was; that I felt it would be a losing fight if the proprietary medicine people should stir up the papers any further against the House provision; that they had already succeeded in making many people believe that it was the Senate bill and not the House bill which contained the drug-labeling provision; that it was my plan to call the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce together just before the pure-food bill came up for actual consideration in the House and ask the committee to adopt a stringent amendment in place of the one which had been given out to the public; that I had canvassed the committee as to the attitude of each individual member upon it and felt absolutely confident of success, but that if this were known it would stir up the Proprietary Medicine Association, and we would again commence to receive urgent pleas from all parts of the country to take the Senate bill (containing nothing on the subject) in place of the House bill.

I talked freely and fully to Mr. Adams while the Daily News correspondent was sitting within hearing distance at the typewriting machine, but was not actually typewriting on the machine most of the time. That correspondent walked out of my room after listening to my confidential talk with Mr. Adams and published my proposition. Immediately the proprietary association got in its work, and we have been flooded for some time past by newspaper advice urging that the Senate bill should be adopted, claiming that the House leaders were trying to hold up the pure-food bill and that the only thing to do was to pass the Senate bill. I have no doubt that most of the newspaper articles were written in good faith, but they were based upon information and statements furnished by gentlemen in the pay of the proprietary medicine association. The story has been spread wide and far that the Senate bill contained the provision requiring the labeling of the narcotics and that the House bill proposed to legalize the use of these narcotics. That story has been spread through the influence and the pay of the proprietary medicine people.

WASHINGTON OFFICE OF THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS,
Washington, D. C., July 19, 1906.

Mr. JAMES R. MANN, Esq.,
Chicago, Ill.

DEAR SIR: I have just this morning arrived in Chicago and have for the first time seen the revised version in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of your remarks made on the pure-food bill in the House on June 29.

In this connection permit me to hand you herewith copies of statements made to me by Mr. James P. Hornaday, of the Indianapolis News, and Mr. Samuel Hopkins Adams, of Collier's. These statements cover so much of your speech as directly concerns me. You are at liberty to use them in any manner you see fit.

Yours, very truly, LEROY T. VERNON.

[Copy of reply of Mr. James P. Hornaday to Leroy T. Vernon.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 30, 1906.

DEAR MR. VERNON: In re the allegation of Representative MANN that you violated his confidence in printing a story that he voted for the patent-medicine amendment to the pure-food bill in committee in order to keep the patent-medicine people still and that he proposed to oppose the amendment on the floor of the House—

Some weeks ago (the date I do not recall) I met Mr. Adams, of Collier's Weekly, in the House press gallery. He said he had come down to find out why the pure-food bill was stalled, or words to that effect. In my presence he said he would like to see Mr. MANN, and I think you offered to take him to MANN's committee room. At any rate you went out with him. Some time later in the day, perhaps within half an hour, I was writing at the press table and you were sitting near me, when Adams came up. He asked you if you heard what MANN said to him about the patent-medicine amendment (the Lovering amendment). You replied you did not, and he said he wished you had, as he would liked to have had you for a witness. He then said that MANN, in explaining how such an obnoxious amendment came to be offered, said it was supported in committee (that he, MANN, supported it) for the purpose of keeping the patent-medicine people quiet. He further said that MANN now declared that he proposed to fight the amendment when it came up on the floor of the House. Without quoting Mr. MANN, I sent a story to my paper saying that MANN was now saying that he supported the medicine amendment for the purpose of quieting the proprietary medicine people, and that he proposed to oppose the amendment when the bill came up for consideration. I did not understand that Mr. Adams put any injunction of secrecy on the conversation.

Of course, if it should be desired, I would make this statement in the form of an affidavit.

Very truly, JAMES P. HORNADAY.

[Reply of Mr. Samuel Hopkins Adams to Mr. Vernon's request for a statement.]

EDITORIAL ROOMS,
COLLIER'S—THE NATIONAL WEEKLY,
416 WEST THIRTEENTH STREET,
New York, July 2, 1906.

Mr. LEROY T. VERNON,
Care of Chicago Daily News, Post Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. VERNON: I have your letter of the 1st and had already written Representative MANN regarding this unpleasant matter. Frankness is best in such cases, and I must therefore confess that I did not know you by name at the time you took me to Mr. MANN's room. Therefore when I talked the matter over with him I had some difficulty in identifying you as the Chicago News man, and did not at that time recollect our conversation after my talk with him. When I came to think the matter over I did remember that you were present at part of the conversation between Hornaday and myself. Your statement in your letter regarding my saying that I wished you had heard what Mr. MANN said, so that you could be a witness to it, recalls to me that part of the conversation. The reason for that statement was that, not knowing MANN, I was not sure how far I could rely upon him and whether he would play fair, as he certainly has done in the matter of the patent-medicine clause, and I felt that I should have been glad to have had a witness. You are at liberty to show this to him, if you wish.

When I talked with you and Hornaday I was certainly under the impression that you would regard as confidential what I told you of Mr. MANN's own attitude in the matter, although the acceptance by the subcommittee of the Lovering amendment was not confidential, and I remember distinctly saying to you at one time: "This, you understand, is not for publication." That I intended to apply to everything regarding MANN's statements to me of his private plans. It is evident to me now that I did not make myself clear on this point, since neither you nor Mr. Hornaday so understood it; and I accept with some feeling of chagrin for my own unfortunate part in the affair your statement that you did not regard it as confidential. At the same time it seems to me unfortunate that you should have printed anything which would have put the patent-medicine people on the defensive at that particular time and made them acquainted with the plans to defeat their bill. You must surely have known from my own attitude on the patent-medicine question that the last thing I would do would be to furnish ammunition which would be useful to them in their fight.

I have written Mr. MANN, stating to him that in the conversation with you and Hornaday I made the restriction that certain parts of it were not for publication, but that there had evidently been a misunderstanding as to what portion of it was meant, and that I did not believe you were guilty of bad faith in the matter. I had rather inferred from your taking me to MANN that you were in close touch with him and were acting to a certain extent for him. I had no recollection at that time, nor have I now any recollection, of having previously asked you to take me to him. This is explainable readily enough, as I had seen and talked with a dozen or fifteen members of the press gallery that day, many of whom I knew, as I knew you, by face but not by name.

I am sorry to have involved you in any unpleasantness, and I am sorry to be myself involved in what must seem to Mr. MANN to have been, if not a breach of faith, a lack of reasonable care in dealing with this matter.

Very sincerely, yours, SAMUEL HOPKINS ADAMS.

ENSZNORE, CAYUGA COUNTY, N. Y., July 14, 1906.

MY DEAR MR. MANN: You may be sure that I am not anxious to assume any responsibility for the unpleasant complication of the Chicago News matter that I can honestly escape. At the same time I intend to make myself entirely certain of my own honesty in the matter. If you feel reasonably certain that Mr. Vernon overheard and used part of our conversation, that implies an easy and pleasant (for me) explanation. I do not know Mr. Vernon well enough to judge of his character.

The reason why I blame myself is that Mr. Hornaday agrees with Mr. Vernon in not having understood my talk with him (Mr. H.) to have been in confidence, and I am quite willing to accept Mr. Hornaday's word on any point, though it be to my own disadvantage. What I said to Mr. Hornaday after my first talk with you was, in substance, this:

"MANN says that the subcommittee has accepted the amendment, but that he is himself opposed to it, and there will be a fight on it, as a majority of the committee are not for it. Do you think I can rely on him to oppose the amendment?"

To which his reply was: "I don't see how he can openly oppose his own committee amendment; but MANN has the reputation of always keeping his word, and if he told you he is going to do a certain thing, he will do it."

I had supposed that Mr. Hornaday understood that this was confidential, but it appears not. I am almost certain that I did not then (if at all, and I think not at all) say anything regarding your attitude toward the Proprietary Association. Indeed, I believe that you did not explain this in our first talk; and my recollection is that it was just after our first talk that Mr. Vernon entered into conversation with Mr. Hornaday and myself. I can not absolve myself from all blame, in that I did not make it unmistakable that what I said to Hornaday was confidential.

One other possible source of information suggests itself. A certain member of your committee told a friend of mine that a large majority of the committee were against the amendment; that both MANN and HEPBURN were against it, and that there would be lively action if it was presented.

I shall wait with interest to learn whether the patent-medicine people make any move against you in your district.

Very truly, yours, SAMUEL HOPKINS ADAMS.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT—MINTS AND ASSAY OFFICES.

Authority is hereby granted to expend of the appropriation for wages of workmen and adjusters at the mint at Denver, Colo., for the current fiscal year a sum not exceeding $30,000 for other clerks and employees.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire of the gentleman in charge of the bill how there comes to be any necessity for switching this money from one set of men to another?

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Speaker, the appropriations for mints and assay offices are made in two separate parts, first, for the administrative and clerical force, and, second, an appropriation for wages of workmen and adjusters and also for other clerks and employees, the amount to be expended for the other clerks and employees always being specified. When the legislative bill of the current year was reported to the House, the committee submitted an appropriation of $75,000. My friend the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BONYNGE] on the floor of the House had that appropriation increased to $150,000 without increasing that part of the $150,000 which could be expended for clerical and other assistants. Consequently the object of the amendment adopted by the House can not be carried out unless there be a more ample provision for these other assistants, and on the recommendation of the Director of the Mint we have submitted this amount, which makes no difference in the total amount of the appropriation in current law.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I desire to ask the gentleman a question, whether or not he adds any different employees to those who are there; any new ones?

Mr. LITTAUER. None whatever. The employees, under this lump sum appropriation, are entirely under the direction of the Director of the Mint.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is there any change in the amount these employees are now receiving?

Mr. LITTAUER. We have nothing to do with that. We have appropriated here a lump sum of $150,000, $10,000 of which only could be expended for clerical and other assistance. Now, the amounts are disproportionate. If the work of the Mint is to go on, the $10,000 specifically appropriated for this other kind of work is not sufficient, in order to enable the work of the Mint to progress without any consideration as to salaries of any kind whatever.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The salaries will remain as they have heretofore been.

Mr. LITTAUER. The salaries are entirely in the hands of the Director of the Mint. There is no increase in the salaries contemplated nor anything of the kind. I think that assistance covers laborers and men of that character.

The Clerk read as follows:

For two pavilions at Ellis Island, $20,000, which shall be paid from the permanent appropriation "Expenses of regulating immigration."

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of calling the attention of the committee to the fact that there is no permanent annual appropriation for immigration, but there is a fund which has been designated as an "immigrant fund." I withdraw my pro forma motion, and move to amend by striking out the words "permanent appropriation" and substituting in lieu thereof "immigrant fund," that being the statutory designation of the fund.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman perhaps is correct as regards the designation of the fund, but the fund is appropriated by permanent law to the use of the Immigration Bureau, and this is the language that is always employed when Congress directs that a certain amount of this permanent appropriation shall be used for a specific purpose. The gentleman's motion is entirely unnecessary.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Speaker, from my experience on the Immigration Committee, I trust the chairman of the committee will pardon me if I disagree with him. The immigrant fund is not appropriated permanently nor temporarily for any purpose at all, but there is collected from the steamship companies for each immigrant who comes in $2, which is paid into the Treasury, to a fund known as the "immigrant fund." It is not appropriated at all.

Mr. LITTAUER. The original immigration act permanently appropriated the fees collected from the administration of the immigrant service.

Mr. BENNET of New York. My colleague is mistaken in that.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman from New York yield for a question?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman moves to insert "immigrant fund" instead of "permanent appropriation?"

Mr. BENNET of New York. That is the description of the fund.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him whether he has in mind that provision of the Constitution which says that no money shall be spent from the Treasury but in consequence of appropriation made by law?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Of course the gentleman from Illinois has gone even farther back than I did. I merely scratched the surface.

Mr. KEIFER. This money is never in the Treasury.

Mr. BENNET of New York. It is in the Treasury. There is no question about the statute.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, this is not a new proposition by any means. Congress at every session, when it appropriates for the immigration service, directs that the appropriations be paid out of this permanent appropriation derived from the sources the gentleman from New York has mentioned.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Speaker, I am perfectly willing to admit the Committee on Appropriations has made this same error before, but the mere fact that they have made an error before is no reason why they should perpetuate it when it is called to their attention. There is no question about it, the first section of the act of March 3, 1893, describes this fund as the immigrant fund.

Mr. TAWNEY. The law subsequently directed that that fund should permanently be for the use of the immigration service.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Not in any word, line, or precept.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Speaker, I believe my colleague is in error. The law does make a permanent appropriatton of various funds collected in the immigrant service. The total of appropriations in each year's annual estimate is under the head of "Expenses of regulating immigration." I believe there can be no question but what the language of this bill follows the precedents established for many years with reference to the permanent annual appropriation under the head of "Expense of regulating immigration."

Mr. KEIFER. Where is there such a statute as that?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Speaker, there is no such statute.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to read the statute on the subject: "There shall be levied, collected, and paid a duty of $2 each on every passenger not citizens of the United States or Dominion of Canada," etc. That is the original provision, and it says the duty shall be paid to the collector of customs. "The money thus collected shall be paid into the United States Treasury and shall constitute a permanent appropriation, to be called the 'immigrant fund,' to be used under the direction of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to defray the expense of regulating the immigration of aliens into the United States under this act."

So the very statute refers to a permanent appropriation and makes it in terms a permanent appropriation, and the title under which this appropriation is made is "Expenses of regulating immigration." I can not see the object of this change suggested by my colleague. There can be no question but that the intention is well known. We have had a system of bookkeeping under the head of "Expenses of regulating immigration" for many years.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will state, Mr. Speaker, if my colleague will permit me, that all the appropriations that have heretofore been made have been directly for the immigration service. Direction has been given that it be paid out of this permanent appropriation, and the Department of Commerce and Labor has never experienced any difficulty, nor the Comptroller's Office, in making the payments out of this appropriation under the authority that is given in the language which this bill carries.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For rebuilding, repairing, and reestablishing such aids to navigation and buildings connected therewith in the Twelfth light-house district as were damaged or destroyed by the earthquake of April, 1906, the appropriation to be made immediately available, $17,500.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of making an inquiry. At the last session of Congress we appropriated quite a considerable sum or sums on account of the California earthquake, and I would simply like to inquire whether the gentleman has any information which leads him to believe that this will be the last appropriation asked for on that account.

Mr. KEIFER. This has nothing to do with the appropriations for the relief of California.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is mistaken. That is the item I am talking about.

Mr. KEIFER. That item refers to destroyed light-houses that belong to the United States, and the others were charitable in a certain sense.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is mistaken. I am informed upon the subject. The sundry civil bill carried various items of appropriations because of the California earthquake, as the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] will remember.

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes, sir; it did. But we made no appropriation for damage caused to the light-houses on the Pacific coast as a result of the earthquake.

Mr. MANN. You increased the total sum of the appropriation for repairs, and so forth, because of it.

Mr. TAWNEY. To some extent, in one particular instance, which was San Francisco.

Mr. MANN. I am not complaining, but I simply wish to know for information whether the gentleman has information that this will be the last.

Mr. TAWNEY. We have not.

Mr. MANN. I suppose we will appropriate on that account for the next twenty-five years to come.

Mr. LITTAUER. Oh, no. In the deficiency bill of last year and in the sundry civil bill ample provision was made for repairs, but the Department advises us that it will cost $17,500 to repair in the Twelfth light-house district the damage done by the April earthquake, so as to place the district on a working basis.

Mr. MANN. I may say to the gentleman that it will cost, and has cost the Government already, a much greater sum than $17,500 to replace and repair the damage. As far as that is concerned, the damage was a great deal more than this amount. That is the reason why I made inquiry.

Mr. KEIFER. To the light-houses?

Mr. MANN. To the light-houses; certainly.

Mr. KEIFER. That is news to us.

The Clerk read as follows:

The provision of an act approved June 30, 1906, entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, and for other purposes," appropriating $150,000 for a steel steam light vessel, to be anchored upon Swiftsure Bank, off the entrance to Juan de Fuca Strait, at a point at or near 13 miles north, 74° west magnetic from Cape Flattery, Washington, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman ought to state the reason for the repeal of this provision, so that it will go into the RECORD.

Mr. LITTAUER. The reason for the repeal of this appropriation of $150,000 arises because of an error made in the enrolling of the sundry civil act of last session. The conference agreed to drop this appropriation. The bill passed both Houses without this appropriation, and yet the bill was, by error, enrolled including this item, and thus enrolled it was signed by the President. Attention was immediately called to the fact, so that the Bureau having this expenditure in charge was informed that it was an error and no expenditure should be made; and none has been made under this appropriation. This brings up the subject of the enrollment of bills, and the rapid work that has to be done toward the end of a session. The men charged with this work were utterly overworked. There was not sufficient force to carry on the work without requiring men to work the entire twenty-four hours out of each of the last two or three days, and the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations now has a resolution before the Committee on Accounts reorganizing this service, and giving ample assistance to carry it out.

Mr. MANN. Explain that to us. Read that again. Will the gentleman tell us what it does?

Mr. KEIFER. I wish to say that when we use the word "repeal" here, I do not want the House to be committed to any such thing. There was no law passed of the kind referred to. It does not constitute a law of Congress to have a clause or section put in a bill by an error in the enrollment. It confuses the matter to treat such error as a part of the law and repeal it, and we ought to have used a different word. I am not going to ask to change this, but I am only entering here my protest to treating a mere error of the enrollment clerk of a bill as a part of a law of Congress, when neither House of Congress has ever acted on it.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will my colleague permit an interruption?

Mr. KEIFER. Certainly.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman from Ohio indicate what language can be used that would destroy the effect of this, which is technically a law, other than the word "repealed?" We would like to avoid it.

Mr. KEIFER. Well, Mr. Chairman, I could prepare a clause for this bill that would do so; but I want simply to point out the fact that that part of the law, as published, was not part of the act of Congress, which now seems to include it. Here we recognize it and dignify it as though it had become a law, because the enrolling committee had, by mistake, written it in the bill after both Houses of Congress had passed upon it. That is my objection.

Mr. TAWNEY. But you must recognize that it now is the law, and the money can be drawn and expended.

Mr. KEIFER. I do not recognize that as a law; it is in no sense a law; it is simply void, because Congress never passed it.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The bill was signed, with this appropriation in the bill, by the Speaker and Vice-President——

Mr. KEIFER. Yes; and the President.

Mr. CRUMPACKER (continuing). Certified to the President, and the President then approved it. In my judgment, that is the law, and will be the law until it is regularly repealed.

Mr. KEIFER. Well, I have great faith in the gentleman from Indiana; but there is no court in the world that would hold that was a law within the meaning of the Constitution, and the question has been up time and again in the States where there have been errors of this kind after a general assembly of the State had passed upon a bill; and the courts have always held that it could go to the journals to see whether that part of the bill became the law or not. Here we have the naked situation of neither House of Congress passing upon it; and the gentleman says that makes a law, because the clerks, the Speaker, the Vice-President, and the President signed the bill with a clause the Congress never acted upon.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That is the rule established by the supreme court in the State of Indiana. The court holds that the courts can not go behind the certificate of the presiding officer of the house to the enrollment. The prevailing opinion of the court was that the court can not go into the method and detail in which the clause was arrived at, and it has so held, squarely, upon that subject in Indiana.

Mr. KEIFER. I have some doubt about that position even in the State of Indiana, and can state that it is not so in my State. The case in Indiana probably involved only a question of evidence. I know there is a decision of the supreme court of Ohio that reviews this very question; but I am only entering my protest about repealing what never was an act of the Senate or the House of Representatives as though it were an act of Congress.

Mr. MANN. I am inclined to think the gentleman from Ohio is right. He certainly is right as to the rulings of the court, although I do not know what language would be used to take this off the statute more appropriately than the language which has been used. When this item went into the bill last year—was left out in the conference report and then was printed as passed and signed by the President—I took the trouble myself, having had something to do with the controversy when it was before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House, to look up this subject, and following my investigation of the subject came to the conclusion that the item was not law, and I notified the Light-House Board, so that they would have their attention called to it, that although it appeared in the printed copy of the law—the enrolled copy, which was signed by the Speaker, the Vice-President, and the President—that still it was not the law, and if they expended any money under its provisions they would be liable to be held personally responsible for the money. I have no doubt whatever a proper proceeding could be commenced in court which would take this provision off the statutes. I do not remember the exact terms of the resolution offered by the gentleman from Minnesota, the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, in regard to the other item of the bill in the same situation.

Mr. LITTAUER. Permit me just to read you the language of the resolution. The resolution recites the facts of the matter and then concludes, "the same is hereby repealed."

Mr. MANN. I was about to say I do not remember the exact language of the resolution, but I have no doubt, as far as getting it off the book as law is concerned, there is really but one of two ways, either repealing it by act of Congress or adjudication of the courts.

Mr. LITTAUER. Then the gentleman approves of the step to repeal it here?

Mr. MANN. Oh, I do.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LITTAUER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, last Monday was District day, under the rules of the House. Owing to the fact of the legislative bill being taken up, the committee gave way, and the House adopted the following resolution:

Ordered, That on the day following conclusion of the legislative appropriation bill, it shall be in order to call up business reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Yesterday the House gave unanimous consent to transfer pension business from that day until to-day, and we have the two conflicting orders.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it is important that the District Committee have some time before the holiday adjournment, but we are willing at all times to give way to the desire of Members of the House, and are willing that the Pension Committee shall go ahead and take this day; but pending that, I desire to ask unanimous consent that it shall be in order to call up business reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia on Monday next.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DALZELL). The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that business from the Committee on the District of Columbia be in order on Monday next.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, next Monday is suspension day. I have a matter of some importance that I want to bring up on that day, and I do not like to be shunted over. If this order will deprive me of the right under the rule to move to suspend the rules and adopt the resolution I wish to offer, I shall object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana objects.

Mr. BABCOCK. I will say, Mr. Speaker, that I do not think the business of the District Committee will require over one hour at the most.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Then why can not the gentleman get permission on Monday? I do not believe suspension business will take more than twenty minutes.

Mr. BABCOCK. I think we will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I do not wish to lose my privilege of moving to suspend the rules on Monday, as that is the only day before the holidays when I shall have that opportunity.

Mr. BABCOCK. I say I will yield to the gentleman to make the motion.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. To make the motion to suspend?

Mr. BABCOCK. To make the motion to suspend the rules. I will yield to the gentleman; yes.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I think that will do. I will not object, with the understanding that the gentleman will yield to me to make the motion——

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can not yield for that purpose.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Then I shall have to object.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman from Indiana gets recognition, he has a right at any time on Monday to move to suspend the rules.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I suppose I have the right on suspension day, but perhaps this order, if agreed to by unanimous consent, would supersede the rule.

Mr. MANN. Oh, not at all.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is it the gentleman's request that the District business follow suspension business on Monday?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Let it follow suspension business.

Mr. MANN. It is in order to move to suspend the rules at any time on Monday.

Mr. BABCOCK. I will make the request that District business shall follow suspension business.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that business from the District of Columbia Committee shall be in order on Monday next after suspension business. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I do not see how it is possible to say "after suspension business," because it would be in order to move to suspend the rules one minute before the House adjourned on Monday.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That depends, of course, on recognition by the Speaker.

Mr. MANN. Oh, certainly; but there is no way of ascertaining in advance if the gentleman is willing to take his chances——

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I do not see any objection to it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Illinois object?

Mr. MANN. I object.

Mr. BABCOCK. Then I ask unanimous consent that Tuesday be assigned to the business of the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that business from the District of Columbia Committee be in order on Tuesday next. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PENSION BILLS.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that bills on the Private Calendar, now in order, be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that bills on the Private Calendar in order to-day may now be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?
